Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Panama Congress

NORTH AMERICAN CHRISTIANITY IS WAKING UP TO THE CLAIMS AND POSSIBILITIES OF SOUTH AMERICA AS A FIELD FOR CHRISTIAN WORK.

The present extraordinary centering of interest on the Latin civilizations to the south of us is one of those interesting compensations arranged for in the providential scheme of things. Latin America, as most people will recall, was specifically omitted from consideration at the Edinburgh Missionary Conference in 1910. Many mission workers in Latin America deeply resented this discrimination, holding, not without reason, that while the Church sat in representative council to study the far-lying fields of its missionary activities it should have faced its obligation to the Latin republics of the Western hemisphere as well as to the ancient lands of the Orient or the aborigines of Africa.

But the Episcopalian branch of Protestantism declined to co-operate with the Edinburgh Conference if the Roman Catholic countries of South America were classified as "mission field." The projectors of the conference reasoned —and, we believe, rightly—that it was more important to have the whole Protestant Church represented in the conference than that the conference should consider the whole world task at one sitting. There would be enough in the missionary problems of the Eastern hemisphere to keep the conference busy, anyhow, and later on South America would have a hearing in some other way.

So what at first was a disadvantage, has turned out to the advantage of the Latin American mission field. For instead of having a fraction of the attention of the Edinburgh conference bestowed upon that field, there is to be a conference next month in the city of Panama solely in the interest of Christian work among the Latin nations south of this great Protestant republic of our own.

While in the preparation for this Panama Congress it was not so important to consider the attitude of the Episcopal church, that church voted, through its Board of Foreign Missions, to participate in the Panama Congress, and thereby it brought to a head an issue that has been causing more or less trouble in the Episcopal communion for a number of recent years.

The action of the Board of Foreign Missions was followed by the resignation of about a half-dozen leading members of the board, among them two bishops and several very prominent clergymen. These men represent the party in the Episcopal church that leans strongly toward Roman Catholicism and is unwilling to be identified with any Protestant enterprise which Rome can construe as inimical or in any way a reflection upon herself. So the Catholic party in the Episcopal church wants its church to have nothing to do with it.

But a Protestant party also exists in the Episcopal church. This party seems to be in the majority throughout the communion. It affirms the primary affinity of its church with Protestantism, and while its attitude is more cautious and considerate of Rome's feelings than is the attitude of the rest of us Protestants, it nevertheless is determined that the Episcopal church shall stand with Protestantism in all the great issues of Christian progress.

The tension which has existed in the Episcopal communion for some time between these broad church and high church parties has been made perceptibly more tense by the necessity of defining their attitude toward the Panama Congress, and it is feared by many that the Episcopal church in America is threatened with outright division as a result of the irreconcilably hostile tendencies the controversy has disclosed.

No friend of the Kingdom of God can look with complacency upon the prospect of another division in the ranks of Christ's followers. Yet the high church influence has acted too long as an inhibition upon the main body of Episcopalians in matters of practical participation with other Protestant bodies, and it would seem to be high time for broad church men to assert, as their bishops and rectors are now doing, their independence of the Romanizers among them.

This Episcopalian situation is, of course, merely a by-product of the preparations for the Panama Congress, but it is so serious an affair that one can hardly discuss the Congress without paying some attention to it. Incidentally it has done much to advertise the Congress and to help the general public to define its ideas as to the issues involved.

There will be perhaps 250 delegates at Panama during the ten days between February 10 and 20. These delegates are appointed, not as representatives of the various denominations as such, but as representatives of their respective boards of Foreign Missions.

Commissions have been at work for a year and a half making investigations of conditions in Latin American lands and studying the complex problems which missionary work there involves. The ablest minds in the North American Church have been engaged on these researches, the results of which are now being put into printed form to serve as a basis of discussion when the delegates arrive in Panama.

Following the Congress, a deputation of sixteen delegates, with Dr. Arthur J. Brown, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, as chairman, will make a tour of the capital cities of South America holding regional conferences in Lima, Montevideo, Santiago, Buenos Ayres and Rio de Janiero. These regional conferences will follow the lines of the Panama Congress as to themes for discussion, but will, no doubt, expand the knowledge gained at Panama by first-hand contact with the several fields.

That the Latin lands of Mexico, Cuba, Central and South America, will take on a greatly enlarged importance in the missionary conscience and outlook of the North American Church may be expected as a result of these investigations.

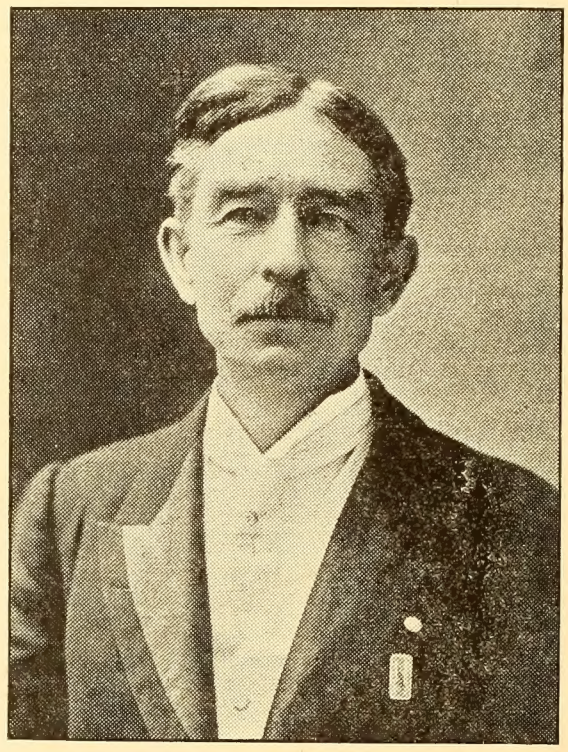
Present day movements of international politics, economics and commerce are strongly in the direction of binding the United States into a friendly union with her sister republics to the south. All these practical and material considerations will re-enforce the Christian passion to take the gospel to lands which, though they wear the Christian name, know so little of Christian ideals and seem sadly unaware of Christian inspirations.

Seeing Life Whole

Address of Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph.D., at opening of the first "School of Civic Evangelism," Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, December 28, 1915.

SOME one has profoundly said, "The unconscious changes of fifty years are equal to a revolution." That is certainly true of the last fifty years in the most progressive nations, not alone in the outer world, where aeroplanes drop bombs upon submarines, while the wireless sends the news afar through the intervening space, but also in the inner world of psychology and theology. For example, the known world of psychology has been enlarged as much in the last fifty years by the discovery of the real characteristics of childhood and adolescence as the world of geography was enlarged in the fifty years of Columbus' manhood through his discoveries and those of his fellow explorers. To parents and teachers children and youth in their inner life were a case of "so near and yet so far." The child was expected to take his medicine "like a man," and his education and religion also. Innocent children were expected to be "converted" after the fashion of the old Pharisees, Nicodemus, and Saul of Tarsus, rather than after the fashion of Samuel and Timothy, or of Jeremiah and John the Baptist. We would fain linger on the discoveries and explorations of President Stanley Hall and Professors Coe and Starbuck and Forbush in the inner world of childhood and youth, but it is sufficient to our present purpose to remind you of the well known fact that fifty years ago the real inner life of the now familiar "teen age" and below was an unknown hemisphere.

There has certainly been a revolution in fifty years in theology, not so much in change of belief as in change of emphasis. Fifty years ago the common definition of the supreme purpose of religion was, "to save a soul in Heaven;" the emphasis was put on the future state of the invisible part of the individual man. There has been a swing of the pendulum in the case of the future life as related to the present life, and of the inner life as related to the outer life.



IS HELL ABOLISHED?

Some years ago I arranged for a written examination of those above twelve years of age in a dozen representative Sunday-schools, and found very few of them able to quote a single passage about future retribution. If hell was too much in evidence as a motive in former times, it is certainly used too little today, as compared with the appeals which the gentlest and kindest of souls made to the wholesome argument of rational fear in the days of his flesh. The prejudice against hell is no doubt largely due to the caricatures of it in former times not only by artists but sometimes by preachers. We should return to the golden mean, for hell is essential to a well-ordered universe, as ultimate justice, the supreme court of the universe, where all the miscarriages of justice in human courts, and in human judgments out of court, shall be righted. If I thought that the final word of human courts was really the final word on many cases that have been tried, I should be an atheist. If those who ordered the wholesale slaughter of the Armenians, and those who are responsible for the inauguration of the senseless European slaughter, are to get no punishment beyond that they may expect in the courts of this world, then the atheist is justified. We may calmly view even the poison clouds of unparalleled war when we can behold through them the Great White Throne unshaken—the throne of ultimate justice.

I was thus justifying the doctrine of future retribution in a Kentucky town when a keen street preacher exclaimed: "Thank God for hell."

LESS MEDITATION—MORE ACTION IN RELIGION.

Turning now to another point we note that the inner life of meditation has grown less among Christians and the outer life of action has somewhat, though not proportionately, increased. An intellectual church member from New

Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph.D.

England, having visited some of the western churches that were hustling with many activities, said critically: "Your western religion is too much below the elbows." To which there came the quick response: "And your New England religion is too much above the eyebrows." And there are groups of people in our southern country, and many of a different color elsewhere, of whom it may be said that their religion is too much under the ribs.

Every Christian ought to cultivate the habit of viewing all the continents of life in due proportion, the future life and the present life, the inner life and the outer life, the individual life and the social life.

IS THE SOCIAL SIDE OF RELIGION DULY RECOGNIZED?

The pendulum has not swung from one extreme to the other or even to the golden mean in the recognition of the sociality of religion in due proportion to individuality.

The individualism in religion of fifty years ago has remarkably held its own, though there has been a good deal of superficial talk in conventions about "the social aspect of Christianity," which has even alarmed some individualists who have not stopped to look into the matter critically. If they had, they would have noted that not a single denomination, scarcely an individual church, has mapped out its church work in accordance with the two hemispheres of Bible truth, individual and social. The great majority of the church have not so much as heard that there is a social hemisphere of religion, any more than the general public of Columbus' boyhood had heard that there was another hemisphere beyond their shores.

Lest any one should think it incredible that there should be a whole hemisphere of Bible truth that has not been annexed by the churches, it may be well to remind ourselves that it is fully admitted that such a situation has existed again and again in church history. For instance, in the time of Christ, not only the Scribes and Pharisees who knew every jot and tittle of the Old Testament—knew it verbatim et punctuatim—were oblivious of the fact that "salvation" was presented in its pages for any people other than the Jews, but even the early Disciples of Jesus shared the same error. So far back as the days of Abraham God had promised to him that "in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed." And Isaiah had said that "the mountain of the Lord's house should be established in the top of the mountains, and all nations should flow unto it." But the Jews read these passages with the color blindness of national and racial prejudice, and the hemisphere of Gentile salvation, which was the largest message in the Old Testament, was unrecognized by them. The disciples of Jesus also misunderstood not only these Old Testament passages, but still plainer ones in which Jesus bade them "go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, making disciples of all the nations," and were so blind to this continent of foreign missions that Peter was surprised when God gave the Holy Spirit to Cornelius and other Gentiles.

A QUEER VIEW OF MISSIONS.

And after a long period of foreign missions, in which Europe was brought out of its white savagery and paganism and became the major part of Christendom, at the beginning of the last decade of the eighteenth century, men, who in Scotland and England and New England studied the Bible more thoughtfully and quite as devoutly as we do, saw no hemisphere of foreign missions in their Bibles—no call to preach the Gospel except in the English language to those already evangelized; and had in their churches neither missionary committees nor missionary collections. The typical moderator of those times suppressed the man who suggested that foreign missions might be a continent of Bible truth and church work which Christians were called to develop, with the stern remark: "Sit down. If the Lord wants to save the heathen he will do it without your help."

This is the most incredible chapter in eighteenth century history. There are other cases of blindness to continents of Bible truth that may be suggested at this point. Devout Christians in a large section of the United States, within the lifetime of many of us, saw no prohibition of slavery in the Bible, and some sincere Christians in various parts of the world still see no prohibition of the slavery of drink even in such plain words as these: "Look not thou upon the wine," and "Abstain from every form of evil," and "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink," and "Lead us not into temptation."

In the presence of these historic facts it may not seem too incredible to consider the statement that there is a whole hemisphere of Bible truth that should be, but is not a hemisphere of church work.

A STUDY OF BIBLE SOCIOLOGY.

We find the two hemispheres of duty first clearly outlined in the two tables of law, the first expressing the duties of individual men to God; the second, the social duties of men to men; the first summed up in the First Great Commandment, which is translated correctly in the modern phrase, "Get right with God;" the second table summed up in the Second Great Commandment, which may be interpreted with equal correctness, "Get men right with men socially." The first table means the fatherhood of God; the second, the brotherhood of man. The first signifies personal conversion; the second, social regeneration. The first means, "Change the man;" the second, "Change the surroundings." The first means, "Save souls;" the second, "Save society if only to make a safe place for saved souls."

We find the same two hemispheres clearly presented at the opening of the Book of Psalms. The first Psalm, intensely individualistic, describes the "blessedness of the man that walketh not in the council of the ungodly;" the second Psalm, as correctly translated in the Revision, is wholly social, epitomized in the eighth verse, where God says to his only begotten Son: "I have given thee the nations (that is, the governments) for thine inheritance, the uttermost parts of the earth (that is, the uttermost political divisions of the earth) for thy possession."

We see the same hemispheres in Isaiah. In the sixth chapter, which is really the first in chronological order, Isaiah, called to service by a voice from the great white throne, responds, "Here am I, send me." But in the first chapter, which was written later, and which has been habitually misused as a storehouse of proof texts on individual depravity and individual conversion, is summed up in these words: "Ah! sinful nation, though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow." No one has any right to use that snow promise for anything less than the purifying of a nation. The fittest place for that text is across the whitening national and international maps of prohibition, in both of which the major part is already white. The white ballots of prohibition shall some day cover every spot where the scarlet sin of licensing "the crime of crimes" now stains the world. And the scarlet sin of war shall also be covered by the white flags of a world of enforced peace.

Amos is almost wholly devoted to the second hemisphere of religion. His mission is to condemn the oppression of the poor and other social sins of his prosperous time. A representative text of his whole prophecy is one that has been too many times belittled by evangelists who have cut it off at a comma to make it individualistic: "Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel." It is not judgment of the individual in the future to which reference is made, but the judgment of God upon cities and states and nations for their sins. That is the text for a sermon to nations responsible for unjust war and to nations and states and cities that are governed by the rule and ruin leagues of commercialized vices and commercialized politicians. To these the true prophet should cry aloud, "Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel." There is a vast grave yard in the old world of buried cities and states over which might well be written, "The kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish."

A SOCIAL PROPHET.

In the gospels we find the social humanitarianism of Jesus in balanced relation to the doctrines of personal conversion. The Sermon on the Mount, representing humanitarianism and brotherhood, though it is the first one encountered in the New Testament, was really not preached until the second year of Christ's ministry, and was preceded in the first year by the sermon on worship at Jacob's Well; and that was preceded by the sermon on regeneration to Nicodemus; and that was preceded by the proclamation of atonement by John the Baptist; "Behold the Lamb of God." Notice God's order: atonement, regeneration, worship, humanitarianism. We should neither begin with humanitarianism nor end with worship.

Turning to the story of Paul, we find intense individualism in his conversion as he cries out to the Christ whom he has persecuted, revealed to him in the sky at Damascus: "Lord, what wilt THOU have ME to do?" But the civic side of Paul's Christianity appears when he "reasons with wicked kings of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," and proclaims in the thirteenth of Romans and elsewhere the duties of citizenship.

I find that even in the most conservative churches I can carry the judgment of the congregation when I say that while the church, as such, should seldom if ever enter into law and order work or party politics—Christians should do both as individuals—the church itself should speak to government, as prophets and apostles spoke to kings of righteousness and temperance and judgment to come; should speak to the city, the State, the nation, and to world parliaments, by petitions and by deputations, asking for good laws and for the enforcement of laws.

THE CHURCH AND BETTER LAWS.

When Burke's statement of the purpose of law, that it is to make it "easier to do right and harder to do wrong," is on every preacher's tongue, it is amazing to see how few churches ever speak to government in apostolic fashion in behalf of better laws. The petition files, where every church should vote early and often to make the laws of Christ the laws of this world, which is the way to make him King of this world, have disgracefully few petitions even for Sunday laws, and divorce reform laws and Bible in schools laws, all closely related to the churches' main business.

In the Epistles of John, I note the individualistic message, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us." Then behold the blood and iron of his civic courage in his statement, "The Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." Surely no church can follow Christ in destroying the works of the devil and at the same time fail to fight the saloon, the brothel, and the gambling den.

In Revelation we get the personal side in the great throng that sang: "Unto him that hath washed us from our sins in his own blood." And then we get the social note in a picture that has appeared all through the Bible from the days when "Abraham looked for a city that hath foundations, whose maker and builder is God"—the picture of the Holy City, not in Heaven, but "coming down from God, out of Heaven." Any one who will take a concordance and look up all Bible references to the city that is to be, will find that the supreme purpose of the church should be the building of a new Jerusalem on earth, "The City Beautiful and Good."

A quaint street preacher of London, preaching on the text, "They that have turned the world upside down come hither also," divided his subject into four heads: "Firstly, the world was originally right side up. Secondly, the devil came and turned it wrong side up. Thirdly, it must be turned right side up again. Fourthly, we are the chaps to do it." The leaders of personal evangelism are the very men to bring to the churches a full-orbed evangelism, in which personal conversions and social regeneration are promoted in due proportion.

Geisha or Womanhood?

Or, the Woman's Movement in Japan.

BY W. H. ERSKINE.

THIS is not a campaign in behalf of political rights of woman, but a campaign in behalf of the rights of Japanese womanhood. The old theory of the inferiority of woman is fast being buried never to rise again. The obediences of the past are being modified into faithfulness, i. e., obedience to father has changed to mean the daughter in the home, obedience to husband has come to mean faithful as wife and companion, and obedience to her son as a widow, now means faithful and highly honored grandmotherhood.

Such has been the advancement in the life and condition of the women of Japan and they are grateful for the past and are pressing forward toward a higher goal. The Coronation ceremony is almost here. Shall Japan advertise her Geisha as of old or her womanhood? is the question being agitated by the Christian women in Japan. Great gatherings are being held in the large cities and leading articles are being written in the newspapers on the subject by sympathetic writers. Mrs. Yajima of Tokyo and Mrs. Hayashi of Osaka are the two beautiful

Japanese Girls in Gymnasium Work.

The legal rights of the women of Japan are being changed and improved rapidly. Woman can now hold property in her own name as proven by the fact that the largest tax payer is a woman. She can sue for divorce when her married life is unbearable; this is also a very recent achievement. No longer can she be divorced for petty reasons or without court sanction, she must be cognizant of the proceedings and the court must grant her the right to defend herself. No longer are her children taken from her unwillingly, for she has the privilege to adopt them if she chooses and the court is willing.

Christian characters back of this movement. Christ has redeemed them and they are seeking to redeem their sisters.

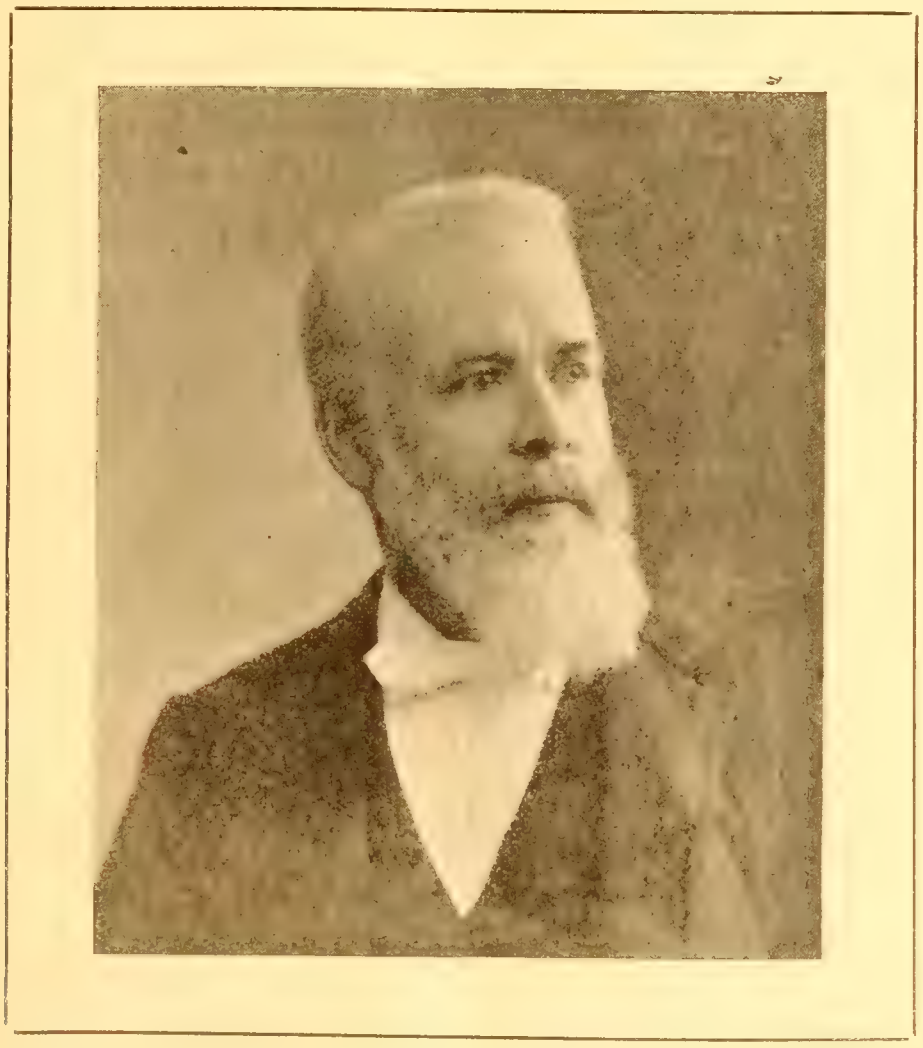
Mrs. Hayashi at the gathering of women in Osaka, twelve hundred strong, said: "Shall Japan continue to advertise our women as geisha or as mothers and home keepers? that is the question we must settle at this Coronation time. Many people come from America and Europe to see our geisha, like they go to Egypt to see the Pyramids, or to Turkey to see the harems. Is this the best we can show them? This fall we are to witness the greatest event in the history of Japan, the crowning of the Emperor of the Taisho period, and the announcement of that fact to the ancestors, with all the beautiful ceremonies attendant. Shall we present the many visitors coming to Japan at this time, the best of the womanhood of Japan, or shall those, who from earliest time have been entertainers of men, appealing to the worst side of man's nature, be given the pre-eminence? Shall the great occasion be disgraced with the presence of the lowest type of women or honored by giving the flower of Japanese womanhood her rightful place and position before the visitors?"

Such were the strong words of the leader of this woman movement, a lady in the best sense of the term, whom the Christ has touched with his love for the fallen and who spends much of her time seeking how she may free the victims of the white slave traffic. The movement is purely Japanese and while the leaders are Christian it is not confined to the Christians. A leading daily, the Maenichi of Osaka, not always favorable to Christianity, has taken a side for the movement and prints articles and editorials. The leaders of the movement think that success is assured and that the people in authority will not allow the geisha to disgrace the ceremonies with their presence. Of course, none is allowed anywhere near the Emperor or the royal families, but in the entertainment of foreign guests the geisha are always seen.

FIFTY YEARS AGO AND TODAY.

A study of the position of woman in Japan fifty years ago and then a comparison with her position today will convince any one of unprejudiced mind of the value of missions and will show the great work that is being accomplished in the name and in the spirit of the Lowly Nazarene. In Japan we do not have the numbers of converts that other countries boast of, but we have a moral and spiritual influence that can not be measured. Even the Japanese moving picture companies are producing plays with Christian characters. The writer saw one in an unexpected place in which the heroine was a Christian, and the subject of the play was "Sincerity" and in one part the Christ appeared and the five verses of "Nearer My God to Thee," were sung by a chorus of young men. The leaven is at work. Let us be patient and wait on the Lord. Japanese womanhood owes much to the teaching of the Christ. God grant that she may continue to use her influence in his behalf.

The Book of Books



THE Bible is what it is, no matter what theory men may adopt as to its formation. It creates its own evidences. The argument for its inspiration is the life that it inspires. If the Book gives power and purity to all departments of life, the Book defends itself against attack and makes its own conquests. Does the Bible rightly exalt man? Does it sanctify the home? Does it promote education? Does it glorify work? Does it save wealth from greed, pleasure from excess, sorrow from despair? These questions reach the center of the problem. We can go but one step beyond them, and that step is most significant. Do we find in the Bible not only a way to be followed, and a goal of truth to be gained, but a Life that will help lives along the way toward the goal? Does the Book really reveal the way, the truth, and the life? The answer must again be found in life. The evidences of dynamic are in the realms of human experience. More and more the students of the Holy Scriptures, who seek the pages with a religious purpose, will find that all the departments of human living wait on Jesus for their meaning and come to him for their power. He is the Saviour. He lifts men out of their sins, up into a trembling and glorious idealism, and still up into a passion for efficient goodness. The supreme apology for the Bible will ever be found in men who have been instructed, reproved, and corrected, that they may be named as perfect men of God, thoroughly furnished unto every good work. Given its full right, the Book that was born of life, tried of life, glorified of life, will find its own best witnesses in redeemed lives.

The Book World

A Department of Reviews and Literary Notes By HERBERT L. WILLETT

THE PLACE OF PRAYER IN THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION. By James M. Campbell, D. D. Christian history is made up of ebbs and tides. There are times when the Church is in a devotional mood as the result of depressing experiences, or great tragedies. At other times its spirit is confident and aggressive. In periods of the former type prayer becomes a vital necessity. In more confident days it ceases to be regarded with the same degree of interest. The present is such a time. Prayer is not disbelieved in as an essential element in Christian experience. It is, however, neglected and Christians lament both their own prayerlessness and that of the churches.

Rev. James M. Campbell, D. D.

At such a time as this Dr. Campbell's book is a tonic. It reviews the story of prayer in the life of the Church, beginning with the Master himself and the apostles. To do this adequately requires more than one volume, and the reader is not surprised that the space remaining for the consideration of prayer in the Church, past and present, is a much smaller portion of the book. But this, like the first part, is very valuable, dealing as it does with personal prayer, family prayer, social prayer and public prayer, with a concluding chapter on the place of prayer in the Christianity of today. Dr. Campbell's pages produce the impression that one is reading in the company not merely of a theologian but of one who has made the practice of the divine presence a life-long pursuit. It is the sort of a book both for the study and the bedchamber. Those who have read Dr. Campbell's other works, like "The Indwelling Christ," "The Presence," "Paul the Mystic," etc., will need no studied the problem of war and peace assurance that this volume is greatly worth while, and makes a distinct contribution to the literature of prayer. (The Methodist Book Concern, $1.00 net.)

CHRISTIANITY AND INTERNATIONAL PEACE. By Charles Edward Jefferson. Few men have been more active during the past ten years in the promotion of international peace than the Pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle in New York City. His opposition to the militant spirit is no recent or theoretic attitude. He has during all these years in which the European nations have been arming, presumably as a protection against war, but in reality in promotion of the war spirit. Dr. Jefferson has written several other works on the same general theme. The present volume contains the printed edition of six lectures delivered last year at Grinnell College on the Gates Memorial Foundation. The titles are "The Greatest Problem," "The Church and War," "The Church and Peace," "Christianity and Militarism," "The Facilities of Militarism," and "What Then Shall We Do?" (Crowell, $1.25).

WOMEN AT THE HAGUE. By Jane Addams and others. Probably no gathering of recent years has evoked as much varying opinion as the International Congress of Women, held last spring at the Hague. It seemed perfectly futile for a company of women to sail out when war was at its height, to attempt the task of bringing influences to bear in favor of peace. The reports which appeared in the American press were very conflicting. Some expressed the view that the journey was greatly worth while; others regarded it as profitless. In this little volume the story of the journey and certain impressions of the Congress, together with the narrative of the journey of the peace embassy through the countries of Europe after the Congress, is told by Miss Emily G. Balch of Wellesley College. Miss Alice Hamilton of the Department of Labor tells the story of the visit at the war capitals, and Miss Addams contributes the rest of the volume, on The Revolt Against War, Factors in Continuing the War, and Women and Internationalism (Macmillan, 75 cents).

BACKWARD CHILDREN. By Arthur Holmes. Our interest in this book is twofold. The theme is in itself deeply interesting as one of the very important problems of education in our time. We are just beginning to understand the fact that large numbers of children are not quite normal, either because of physical defects or bad environment. For this reason any competent treatment of the subject would engage the attention of teachers and parents, even though their own children were presumably normal. But we are also interested in this book because Mr. Holmes is a Disciple, and has been at various times active in the work of our churches in the east, especially in Philadelphia. At the present time he is Dean of the General Faculty of the Pennsylvania State College, where he has made a notable record as a specialist in educational work. This book will add to his reputation, already assured by his labors in the class room and his previous volume on "The Conservation of the Child." (Bobbs-Merrill, $1.00 net.)

THE PROPHET AND HIS PROBLEMS. By J. M. Powis Smith. Prof. Smith is well known as a member of the Semitic department of the University of Chicago and a valued contributor to the International Critical Commentary. The present volume is a collection of papers on various aspects of the prophetic function in Israel, beginning with a survey of the prophetic field in other parts of the Semitic world. Here some suggestive material is furnished from Egyptian and Babylonian sources. Then follow chapters on the primitive forms of Hebrew prophecy, the false prophets in the Old Testament, the element of prediction in prophecy, the prophet in his relation to the state, the prophet as an individualist, and the prophetic religion of Israel. An interesting chapter on "A Prophet's Marriage" reaffirms the older view as to Hosea's unfortunate marriage with a woman of the town, which Professor Smith believes was the result of his interpretation of the divine will. In this he differs from most modern commentators who regard the tragedy as gradual in its development, rather than the result of deliberate action on the part of the prophet. The book, while not a formal treatise on the theology of the Old Testament, is a very valuable contribution to the study of its most important phases. (Scribner's, $1.25 net).

A MODERN CHURCH PROGRAM. By Albert F. McGarrah. The author of this volume is a church efficiency specialist, who has devoted much time to lectures and institutes on this theme in various parts of the country. He is now connected with McCormick Theological Seminary. The work provides an admirable outline of activities for a modern church, including visitation, seasonal plans, various kinds of campaigns, publicity ideas and suggestions regarding federated programs. Appendices afford further suggestions regarding visitations and forms of church invitations, reports and indexes. It is an admirable manual. (Revell, 50 cents net).

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

A GET TOGETHER CONFERENCE

SIGNS indicate that Congregationalists and Disciples are beginning to consider seriously the suggestion made many times in The Christian Century that these two bodies are made for each other and ought to take steps to be one body. The good words with which our Boston and Chicago contemporaries, the Advance and the Congregationalist, respectively, have responded to our earnest editorial analysis of the supplemental nature of these two groups of churches, has been reinforced by a hearty word of encouragement from that great interdenominational figure, Dr. Francis E. Clark, founder of Christian Endeavor.

Dr. Clark meets the proposal with fine frankness, saying, "If the banns are to be proclaimed between any two denominations in America in the near future, it would seem that the Disciples of Christ and the Congregationalists are the two that should join forces. . . . Between them there seem to be the slightest possible barriers and the largest advantage from the union."

Recognizing that a face to face conference would make the suggestion more impressive than a newspaper discussion, the Congregationalist ministers of Chicago invited the Disciples' ministers to hold a joint meeting with them on last Monday morning to discuss the question of union. The two hours' talk was most fraternal and optimistic. Rev. O. F. Jordan spoke first, outlining the many agreements between the two bodies, their congregationalism, their individualism, their freedom from ecclesiastical and theological lumber, and declared his belief that the path of unity while strewn with problems and barriers was not impassible.

Dr. John A. Gardner, of New England church, led off for the Congregationalists. He said the name "Congregationalist" is a nickname, that their real name is "Church of Christ, worshiping in the Congregational chapel at such and such a location."

DR. E. S. Ames said his view of the way to union was as simple as Mr. Ford's notion of bringing peace in Europe. The way to unite was for those who believe in it to begin to practice it. He declared the goal was to be attained first locally, by congregations, and afterward by the two groups as a whole. He outlined the plan upon which the Hyde Park church has been practicing union for about twelve years and testified to the satisfaction it had brought.

Dr. J. R. Nichols, of Rogers Park Congregational church, said that he could see no insuperable obstacle in the way.

Dr. Errett Gates said that probably nothing would overcome our denominational inertia and complacency except some great national or moral crisis in which the helplessness of a divided Church would be so apparent that we would be driven into unity.

Dr. W. T. McIlveen, of Evanston, replied that the crisis is upon us now, and it was our duty to acknowledge it and make our churches see it. He declared that the differences between the two groups were no greater than the differences between the members of each group.

Dr. McCollum suggested that a good place to begin was in the merging of our theological seminaries for educating ministers. Dr. William E. Barton, editor of the Advance, said that he had been opposed to the union of Congregationalists with the United Brethren and Methodist Protestants which came so apparently near being accomplished some years ago, but was heartily in favor of the merging of Disciples' and Congregationalist forces. His interest in it, however, was not confined merely to local practice, but he believed some general action must be taken by the two communions.

The editor of The Christian Century described the Disciples of Christ as a fellowship of undenominational churches, striving to practice Christian unity with all Christians and with all churches of Christ. They had not in all points lived up to this catholic ideal, but the dominant tendency among them today was to restore the ideal and conform their practice to it. No greater service could be rendered the Disciples themselves than for a body like the Congregationalists to take the Disciples at their word and challenge them to make good their plea for Christian union on a Catholic basis.

It is believed that positive good was accomplished by this interchange of convictions and hopes. Acquaintance was enriched, common purposes and ideals discovered, and vague yearning for a larger fellowship made more conscious and definite. In all the cities of the land where Disciples and Congregationalists work together similar discussions could be held with great profit to both groups and to the cause of unity.

ORTHODOXY GROWING LIBERAL

EX-PRESIDENT Francis L. Patton, of Princeton, it will be conceded on all hands, is the very symbol and incarnation of orthodoxy. So unique is his relation to conservative Christian thought that it is not an exaggeration to say that American orthodoxy itself may be defined in terms of what Dr. Patton teaches!

Imagine the jolt that his recent deliverances on the doctrine of the virgin birth and the resurrection of Lazarus will bring to many people. In the Presbyterian Banner, the best of the very conservative Presbyterian journals, certain very frank statements recently made by Dr. Patton in a series of addresses in Pittsburgh are summarized as follows:

"He said that while he believed in the virgin birth of Jesus and the resurrection of Lazarus, he did not hold that these are essential to faith in Christ. He had never heard Christianity propagated on the basis of the resurrection of Lazarus, and he did not know that God could not incarnate himself without a virgin birth. And so, while holding to both these beliefs, he was ready to drop either if any lack of manuscript evidence called for this, and this would not touch his faith in the divinity of Christ. But the resurrection of Christ is fundamental and vital, as it is the foundation rock and central pillar of the whole structure of Christianity."

Thus orthodoxy is growing liberal. This is all in the world that any radical thinker, who still calls himself evangelical, could ask for. It is a long distance from the dogmatism which binds all the miracle records of the New Testament up with the resurrection of Christ and with the very essence of Christianity and declares that they all stand or fall together.

As a matter of fact they do not stand or fall together.

If the story of the virgin birth should some day be shown to be a legend that got itself woven into the gospel record it would not invalidate the gospel of the resurrected

Christ. To some minds such a discovery would make the gospel story all the more significant and satisfying.

It is not infrequent that we receive inquiries from our readers touching the doctrine of the virgin birth of our Lord. There lies before us now a long letter from a young minister who confesses that his mind is disturbed with doubts as to the miraculous conception and is much concerned whether or not he should continue in the Christian ministry. Our reply has always been and will in this instance be a word of reassurance, especially since Dr. Patton has stamped our opinion with the label of indisputable orthodoxy.

HELPING REUNION IN CALIFORNIA

SINCE the agitation among Disciples' churches in Northern California began some two or three years ago, a little monthly paper has been published by the progressive forces called "The Christian Union Advocate." Rev. H. J. Loken has been its editor, and the staff bore also the names of Frank E. Boren, W. C. Crider and H. V. White.

The paper has recently been discontinued.

The reasons given for its discontinuance are that the cause of conciliation could better be served from now on by editorial silence than by continued argumentation. This action on the part of the editors is as wise as it is gracious. The healing forces are at work in Northern California drawing the two parties together, and it is best to give free play to these forces.

In the concluding issue of the "Advocate" the three present editors, Messrs. Loken, Boren and White, submit, each for himself, a sort of apologia pro mea vita. It all makes an interesting human document, setting forth with frankness the struggle and determination of men of intellectual culture and catholic spirit to hold fast their loyalty to the ideals of the Disciples of Christ in the face of treatment by their brethren which made a caricature of those ideals.

The thing that should sustain Mr. Loken and his coworkers is to recognize that there is probably no other state in the union whose convention would have dealt with the Berkeley church as it was dealt with by the Northern California Convention.

With the subsidence of outspoken dissension on both sides it is now the hope of both sides that, without any sacrifice of principle, the good year 1916 will see a happy reuniting of the estranged forces in that state where the very feebleness of the organization makes any degree of disunity almost a sin.

JUSTICE LAMAR

THE death of Justice Joseph R. Lamar, of the Supreme Court of the United States, which took place January 2, removes a singularly competent and gracious public servant in whom Disciples of Christ have a very special interest. Justice Lamar is the son of Rev. J. S. Lamar, one of the leaders of our fellowship in the generation that ended with the death of Isaac Errett. He was a pastor of a number of our most influential churches and died at Augusta, Ga., where he had served the church for a long and very fruitful ministry. Mr. Lamar is known best in the literature of the Disciples by his biography of Isaac Errett, though there are scattered through the periodical literature of his entire public lifetime many luminous and helpful articles from his pen.

The son, the late Associate Justice, made Augusta his home. He attended the University of Georgia and graduated at Bethany College in 1877. Beginning the practice of law in 1878 in Augusta, he received in the course of the year many honors at the hands of his city and state. A special distinction attached to his appointment to the Supreme bench by President Taft in 1910 in that the appointee was of opposite political faith to that of the President.

In his private practice Mr. Lamar was a corporation lawyer, but when appointed to the Supreme Court of Georgia in 1901 the popular antipathy to corporation lawyers was not urged as a consideration against his confirmation by the senate, so highly did all classes esteem his integrity.

Going to Washington as a man little known beyond his state, his rise in public estimation as a member of the court led President Wilson to select him as the principal commissioner for the United States in the A B C mediation at Niagara Falls in 1914 between the United States and Mexico over conditions in the southern republic. In this position he acquitted himself with distinction.

He remained a faithful and devoted member of First church, Augusta, of which Rev. Howard T. Cree is pastor. His Christian personality was one of those strong and gracious assets which his brothers in church and state will always hold above any price.

THE CLAIM OF THE COLLEGES

ONLY those closely related to the educational activities of the Disciples of Christ can appreciate the great change that has come over the whole college situation of the brotherhood during the past five years.

In the past twenty years trial on trial was made to coordinate the twenty-five colleges on some basis by which they could make their united claim for the affection and material support of the churches. But all these efforts seemed to be premature. The colleges continued each in its own expensive and unco-operative way to solicit funds without regard to the simplest considerations of comity due one another.

But a very beautiful and grateful new day has come.

Now the colleges are all tied together in the Men and Millions Movement, of whose six million dollar fund now being collected three and a half millions are to go to them.

And not alone for this temporary undertaking are the colleges joined together, but in the permanent prosecution of their work they approach the brotherhood from year to year through a Board of Education which now has the hearty support of all the colleges and is on the way to win the support of all the churches.

The cause of education now stands up unabashed in the presence of every missionary and benevolent cause among us and makes its plea to the churches for their gifts. The $19,063 received by this board last year is a very modest sum, but its significance inheres in the fact that it is a fine increase over anything ever done before. The board is asking for $75,000 this year. This, too, is modest enough, but if it is attained it will put the work of direct support of the cause of Christian education on something like a worthy basis.

Sunday, January 16, is Education Day. The ministers and church leaders who read The Christian Century are the type of men on whose hearts this cause should naturally rest most consciously. Not one of their churches should fail to recognize the day and either make a special offering or else see to it that full provision is made in the general missionary budget for this too long neglected work.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Dr. Mott and the Panama Congress.

Dr. John R. Mott has been widely quoted by certain High Church Episcopalians in a way prejudiced to the Panama Congress. Dr. Mott has written a letter disclaiming any desire to enter into a controversy which is confined to the ranks of a sister denomination. He states that the Panama Congress is distinct entirely from the Ecumenical Conference of Edinburgh, but that it will operate on the same general plan. Dr. Mott repudiates the interpretation of his attitude set forth by the Living Church, the organ of the high church party.

Office of Deacon is Being Revived.

The state churches of Germany and Sweden are reviving the office of deacon and those being appointed to that office are performing the social work of the churches. They not only minister to the poor, but they also go to the rural districts where they aid the farmers with the best contributions of scientific agriculture. These new deacons are to be in hospitals and in seamen's missions. They go through six months' probation before being appointed.

Opposition to Panama Congress in New Quarters.

The difficulty which faces the leaders of the Panama Congress is apparent to those who watch the widely divergent tendencies which are to be united in this congress. Since a modified statement of the purpose and attitude of the congress has been given to the world with the wishes of the Episcopalian mission board, the ardent anti-Catholics on the mission field have been in a critical mood. The Organizing Committee of the Evangelical Congress of the City Plata in Argentina has declared that they "feel it incumbent upon them to sever all connection with said congress." The Methodist paper of Cuba, The Cuban Evangelist, also puts forth a rather fiery criticism of the congress. Between High Church Episcopalians and ardent anti-Catholics, the management of the congress is having a hard time.

Tells of President in Catholic Church.

The Catholic Citizen is published in Milwaukee and in a recent issue was a story of the President attending Thanksgiving service in St. Patrick Catholic church of Washington. The account was circumstantial in detail and took pains to speak of this attendance on Thanksgiving service in St. Patrick's "as usual." The only trouble with the story was that President Wilson did not go, but sent Secretary McAdoo, an Episcopalian.

Gifford Pinchot on Rural Church Problem.

Country churches in the near future must co-operate through the medium of community federations and they must interest themselves more closely in the material welfare of the rural population, Gifford Pinchot, President of the National Conservation Association, declared Dec. 8 in an address at the opening session of the national convention of the Commission on Church and Country Life, a branch of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, which met simultaneously.

Mr. Pinchot, who is chairman of the Commission, called on both country and city residents to unite in trying to solve the problem of the present decadent condition of rural churches. He predicted that the rural church campaign to be instituted at this meeting would be an effective conservation movement inasmuch as it would tend to conserve the religious and economic health of country communities.

"There can be no permanently sound and vigorous life for the nation unless life in the country is vigorous and sound," said Mr. Pinchot. "The strength of any civilization is best measured by the soundness of life on the land. The tenacious spiritual ideals of the open country constitute our most resisting barrier against the growing laxity and luxury of our social organization.

"I believe we are standing today on the threshold of a great movement which will bring back to the church in the country and smaller towns the greater power for good which it used to have. I do not contend that the church should take the functions of the Grange or the agricultural school, but I do believe that failure of the country churches through their ministers to get into productive touch with the work and needs of the country people is one of the fundamental reasons for the present weakness of the country church.

New City Workers for Congregationalists.

The Congregationalists are anticipating an era of increased activity in connection with the Chicago City Missionary society upon the arrival of the newly elected secretary, the Rev. Reuben L. Breed. Dr. Breed succeeds in office the Rev. J. L. Armstrong, who has served the society as secretary since its organization thirty years ago. Dr. Armstrong will still give attention to the work of the society, but will be relieved of the responsibility of doing as much aggressive work as he has done in the past.

Methodists Will Honor Bishop Ashbury.

The founder of Methodism in America was Francis Ashbury, upon whom the hands of John Wesley were laid when he was sent out to the new world. The centenary of his death is at hand and it is proposed that there shall be suitable centennial celebrations of the life and labors of this great leader. The project is just now taking shape and more definite announcements may be expected later.

Methodists Join Preachers' Meetings.

In the city of St. Louis, the preachers' meetings of the northern and southern Methodists have joined and will no longer hold separate sessions, although the members belong to separate conferences. The action is taken in anticipation of the coming union of the two Methodisms. The sectional feeling of border states has been the keenest, and this action in a Missouri city is very significant of an approaching era of co-operation.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF.

The Ministerial Relief Offering has too long been the step-child of the church. "But if any provideth not for his own and especially his own household he hath denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever." It is a primary duty for every congregation in our great brotherhood to have a part in securing those who have borne the burden and the heat of the day as prophets of the Most High from want in their disability or old age. Foreign and Home Missions are no more obligatory than this. The ideal would be that every minister of the Disciples should be in line for an adequate pension at the close of so many years of service. If college professors can have this security against old age surely a great church like ours should have the same. Need we wonder that so many of our ministers are leaving the pulpit and going into other lines of activity when they look into the future and see their families unprovided for after years of faithful service on their part. "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn." H. D. C. MacLachlan.

THE DEMAND FOR SHORT SERMONS.

By Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, of Broadway Tabernacle, New York City.

The greatest danger confronting the church in America is the possible decadence of the pulpit. Let the pulpit decay, and the cause of Christ is lost. Nothing can take the place of preaching. The cause of Christ is hopelessly handicapped and blocked when Christian preachers forget how to preach. We must guard the pulpit with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life. Any sign of decay in it must fill all well-wishers of the church with regret and alarm. But, pray, how is the pulpit to be saved from decay if it is to be shut up to two twenty-minute performances on Sunday, which, in the nature of the case, could hardly be anything else than a vaudeville affair of tame platitudes and pious drivel? Think of any man with a thimbleful of brains attempting to discuss the great doctrines of the Bible under such restrictions. Think of the absolute impossibility, under such conditions, of the pulpit having any influence whatever in the solution of the social and moral problems of the age. Think of ever developing intellectual giants in pulpits from which hardly anything is expected or tolerated except snatches of poetry linked together with a few religious sentiments, that at least have the value of supplying the regulation color to the performance. Think of the possibility of such pulpit orators as Spurgeon, Hawthorne, Moses D. Hoge, George W. Truett, with every avenue closed against flights of imagination and every path barred to the illumination of abstract truth, with parables of life and nature, by an inexorable rule of twenty minutes! Think of Horace Bushnell, Phillips Brooks, Henry Ward Beecher, Richard Fuller, and all the great masters of the pulpit reading in the faces of their audiences a demand that their world-moving messages be pruned and mangled to fit a twenty-minute brain capacity! Think of an ambitious and virile young mind ever being moved to preach the Gospel of Christ Jesus by a twenty-minute recitation of the veriest commonplaces! O the shame of it all! In the name of all that is high and holy, how is the pulpit to be saved from decay so long as the sermonette craze is so universally abroad in the land?

Lesson for January 23.

THE SPIRIT OF LIFE.

Golden Text: As many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are the sons of God. Romans 8:14.

Lesson, Romans 8:12-30; verses 12-17, 26-30 printed.

Memorize verses 16, 17.

(12) So, then, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh: (13) for if ye live after the flesh, ye must die; but if by the Spirit ye put to death the deeds of the body, ye shall live .(14) For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are the sons of God. ((15) For ye received not the spirit of bondage again unto fear; but ye received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. (16) The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are children of God: (17) and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified with him.

(26) And in like manner the Spirit also helpeth our infirmity: for we know not how to pray as we ought; but the Spirit himself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered; (27) and he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God. (28) And we know that to them that love God all things work together for good, even to them that are called according to his purpose. (29) For whom he foreknew, he also foreordained, to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren: (30) and whom he foreordained, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified.

VERSE BY VERSE.

12. So, then, brethren. These words indicate the conclusion and application of Paul's former argument.—We are debtors. We are under strong moral obligation.—To live after the flesh. Not to obey the dictates of the flesh to the destruction of the spirit's claims.

13. Ye must die. If the whole attention is given to the flesh the spirit must die. A well known law of nature.—Ye shall live. Those who use the body to help the spirit shall live.

14. Led by the spirit of God. Those who conform their lives after Jehovah.—The sons of God. These have a right to be called sons of God who by their conduct are like God. The sons of Jehovah are those who take God into the account when deciding life problems, and make him the court of final appeal.

15. Spirit of bondage. When you live by the law, it is external restraint, bondage—but when you live by the spirit, it is subjective and hence freedom. You live because you desire to do so and not because of external authority.—Ye received the spirit of adoption. This was a common practice among the Greeks and Romans, and hence came with peculiar force to the ears of Paul's hearers.—Abba, Father. Abba is an Aramaic word, meaning father. The entire passage is one expressing the fatherhood of God.

16. The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit. The spirit of God and our spirits are in harmony. We are like him in spirit and conduct. We live like him. Our highest desires are for Christ and the things which concern the kingdom of God.

17. If children, then heirs. In the Jewish law the eldest son received a double portion, but in the Roman law the children were equal. Read 1 John 3:1.—Heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. The children only were heirs and we may become children by a spiritual birth. It is an inheritance of God's nature, his character, and his holiness.—If so be that we suffer with him. We cannot receive the best gifts without suffering. It is in the very nature of our lives. The best gifts cost more than poor ones.—We may be also glorified with him. Jesus was given glory because he sought the best and so are the great and small of earth who strive for the best.

26. In like manner. As our spirits strive for the highest things, so the Holy Spirit strives for us toward the same end.—Our infirmity. Our weaknesses in life, with a direct reference here to our ignorance in prayer.—We know not how to pray as we ought. We do not maintain the proper relation between the need and asking, as the father interprets the wants and needs of his children.

27. He that searcheth the heart. Jehovah. Man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart, 1 Sam. 16:7.—He maketh intercession. Jesus shows us the way from the animal to God. Read Rom. 8:34.—The saints. The people of God. Children.

28. And we know. Here is introduced another ground of confidence, in that the seeming hardships work to the good of those who love God.—All things. Those mentioned in verses 35, 38 and 39.—Called. The term implies that the invitation has been obeyed. —His purpose. To make them sons and heirs after the pattern of Jesus.

29. Foreknew. Jehovah knew that if certain laws were followed certain results would follow.—Foreordained. When the law is followed a given result will be the end. Devotion to God brings life, disregard brings death.—Conformed to the image of his son. Those who loved God would be like his son, for the son was like the father. Read. John 14:7-12.

30. Justified. That is, he is struggling to be more and more like Jesus and to be like him is to be justified. Made right with God.—Glorified. It is the completion of our salvation, when we receive the crown.

The Spirit of Life

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

The one supreme and priceless thing is life. Jesus came that we might have life, and that we might have it in abundance. There are two distinct motives or ways of living. They are the objective and subjective. Jesus

Some are living in the past, some in the present, some are directed to the future, while still others are living in the present guided by the wisdom of the past and faith in the future. The one who lives in the last named relation with the subjective impulse or motive, and the Holy Spirit as the guiding principle, is the one who really lives the abundant life.

The one who lives by the rules of others or because of restraints of the social circle in which he moves is unsafe when free from such restraints. On the other hand, the individual who governs his conduct from out of the deep of his own best self guided by the Holy Spirit is safe in Potiphar's house, or at the court of Babylon.

We are never for an hour, here below, exempt from elements and conditions of evil residing not merely around us, but within us. There is no stage of life when we can dispense with the power of the Holy Spirit as our victory and deliverance from these handicaps.

What Paul promises is that the man who has the indwelling of the Spirit has with him a divine and all-effectual counter agent to the subtlest of his foes. This Heavenly indweller does not, however, enter unwelcome to the heart. The Christian who neglects to watch and pray will soon find that he knows not how to use this, his greatest strength, for he will be losing the realization of his oneness with his Lord.

Men in all walks of human endeavor are in the quest for life. All worthy activities of men make their contributions to life under the guiding spirit of God, through Jesus Christ, who is the light and life of men. The great need of our age is to correlate all of these interests and human agencies so as to produce the highest type of manhood.

That this may be realized God has called us to not only [illegible] vital connection with a divine father's life and to the eternal [illegible] The test of our [illegible] The only infallible test of our being genuine disciples of Christ is our having that mind in us which was also in him, and that the proof of our being "sons of God" consists in our living habitually under the influence of the Holy Spirit, [illegible] all the duties to which we are called and to avoid every sin against which we are warned in our most intimate fellowship with God through his word. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are the sons of God."

Disciples Table Talk

Champaign, Ill., Church Declines to Release S. E. Fisher to Des Moines, Central.

Members of University Place church, Champaign, Ill., assembled in business session last week, declined to accept the resignation of S. E. Fisher, pastor of the church. In a communication to the church Mr. Fisher had asked release in order that he might accept a call to Central church, Des Moines, Ia., if the church at Champaign felt the change at this time would not seriously interfere with the work of the church. After considering the matter for some time the church voted that the loss of Mr. Fisher at this time would be a serious blow and accordingly declined to grant him a release. After the congregation had reached a decision Mr. Fisher was called from his home and advised of the decision. He thanked the congregation for its vote of confidence and stated that the action would aid him in making a decision concerning the call. When interviewed by a local reporter, the Champaign pastor said: "The action of the congregation will make it harder for me to get away. The offer from Des Moines is a wonderfully attractive one. On the other hand the local work is also an important one. In addition to the appeals from the congregation I have been urged by faculty members and students of the University to remain and have also received petitions from parties over the state who are familiar with the work here. Next year the church is to undertake a Bible college work in connection with the University and in this I am interested The congregation has offered to me the salary of the Des Moines church, so I don't see hardly how I'll be able to get away. However, a decision will not be made for a few days." Mr. Fisher came to University Place church from Gibson City thirteen years ago and during his pastorate the church has grown from less than 200 members to more than 1,000.

Christmas Giving at University Place, Des Moines.

More than 1,000 people attended the Christmas entertainment given by the Sunday-school of University Place church, Des Moines, on the evening of Dec. 22, and most of the donations received were distributed to thirty-five needy families of the city. Three barrels of provisions were sent to an orphanage in St. Louis. Each person attending the entertainment was required to donate a potato and in this way three barrels of potatoes were collected. Each class made a donation and prizes were awarded for the most unique ways of presenting donations. The men's class won first prize, Thirty-six of the men, each carrying a sack of flour, filed down the aisle and piled the sacks on the platform, making a stack eight feet high. The young men's class donated rolled oats and the packages were conveyed from their room in the balcony to the platform by aeroplanes which made frequent trips. The distribution of provisions next morning was conducted by the Boy Scouts.

Ohio Pastor Presented With Bouquets of Appreciation.

For seven years C. B. Reynolds has been pastor of the church at Alliance, O., and an entire morning service was devoted to an appropriate program in celebration of the anniversary. The president of the official board was in charge and introduced in a fitting manner the speakers who reviewed the work accomplished by pastor and people in this time. One speaker discussed "The Peace and Harmony of the Administration." Another, speaking on "The Progressive and Business Spirit Characteristic of the Pastorate," said that he wished to go on record in speaking the conviction that "an efficient consecrated pastor is the most overworked and underpaid laborer on earth." He said no record is at hand telling of the pastors who have been smothered with flowers but that many had been buried under an avalanche of criticism and the lack of cooperation. He wished to throw some bouquets to Mr. Reynolds now He lauded the system of records which the pastor is using in the general work of the church; the effective grading of the Bible-school; the publishing of the weekly parish paper; the introduction of the new financial system; the building of parsonage and the tabernacle; and the extension of all lines of church work which have resulted from the practical methods planned by the present minister.

Lebanon, Ind., Pastor Teaches Bible in City Library.

A. L. Ward, pastor at Lebanon, Ind., reports that he teaches a Bible-class on Thursday evenings at the City Library. Dr. Frank K. Sanders' "History of the Hebrews," is being used as a text-book. There are about thirty-five persons enrolled in the class, ten of which are teachers in the city schools. Mr. Ward is beginning his fourth year with the Lebanon church. In many respects the last year has been the best. Offerings to missions have increased by $200, making the 1915 gifts about $1,400. A special series of Sunday evening sermons on "The Great Love Stories of the Bible," is attracting large audiences.

New Ft. Worth Church Nearing Completion.

Announcement has been made that the new First church, Ft. Worth, Tex., which has been under construction for some time, will be ready for occupancy about Jan 15. When completed, the church wil be one of the finest in the state, costing approximately $135,000, and representing the latest thing in architecture and being magnificently furnished. An $18,000 pipe organ, a donation of a Ft. Worth citizen, Burke Burnett, will be installed, and will be one of the finest in the entire South. The auditorium will seat 1,400 persons. The church is thoroughly modern and equipped to meet the challenge of the Twentieth century. L. D. Anderson, the pastor, is preparing to put this equipment to its fullest use in meeting conditions in Fort Worth and making it a potent influence in the life of the city.

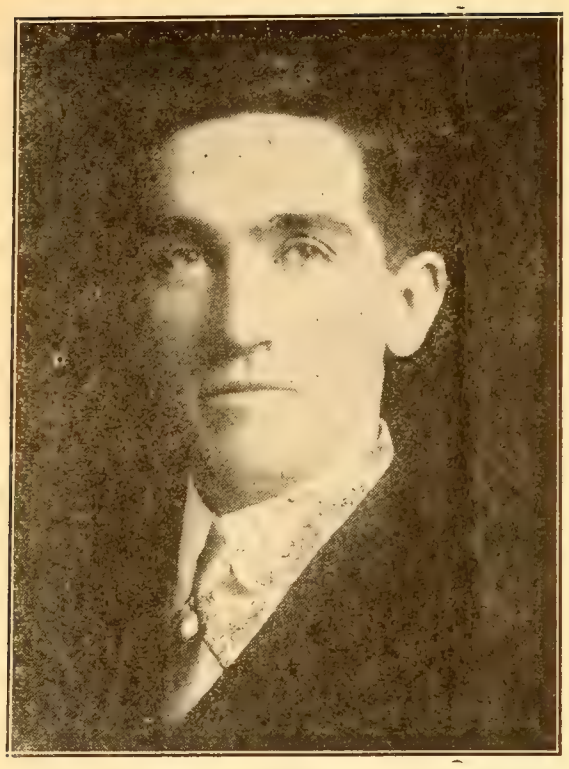
Norwood, O., "Minute Men" Are Busy.

The "Minute Men" of Norwood, O., Christian church, C. R. Stauffer pastor, has planned to divide the teams of men into five groups for more definite work. The completion of the "Every Member Canvass" was assigned to the "Automobile Squads." It was decided to plan a definite campaign to strengthen the work among the men of the church by securing a large attendance of men at both the Sunday-school and the preaching services. The aim is to have an attendance of two hundred men at Sunday-school within thirty days and then move on up to a larger number. All men who have become careless about attendance will be visited within the next few weeks.

Beatrice, Neb., Makes Good Reports.

The report of the pastor of Beatrice, Neb., church, C. F. Stevens, shows the total membership to be 1,284, 1,055 being resident and 229 nonresident members. Last year there were 89 additions by baptism, 22 by statement and 7 by letter. There were 23 dismissed by letter and five deaths, making a net gain of 90. The total receipts run close to $8,500. The Sunday-school now enrolls about 850.

Springfield, Ill., As a Town of Religion.



The recent religious census of Springfield, Ill., taken under the direction of the Christian Laymen's Federation shows a total of 31,129 names, accounting for a trifle more than half of the city's population. The work was completed under the supervision of a committee of the federation. There are twenty-one nationalities represented in the census. There are 8,732 Sunday-school attendants and 575 persons of no expressed church preference. Members of the Catholic faith head the list with a total of 8,072 and the Methodists are second with a total of 6,663. There are 2,248 unplaced church letters representing that many persons who on coming to this city have not renewed any church affiliations. The records show one infidel recorded. The remainder of the congregations by membership, in addition to those stated above are: Presbyterians, 3,782. Christian, 3,160. Baptist, 2,943. Lutheran, 2,866. Episcopal, 1,426. United Brethren, 695. Congregational, 501. Jewish, 451. Christian Science, 125. Seventh Day Adventist, 105. Evangelical Association, 52. Latter Day Saints, 32. Church of God, 38. Universalists, 21. New Jerusalem, 10. International Bible Students, 6. Spiritualists, 6. Quakers, 4. Nazarene, 3. Swedenborgian, 4. Mohammedan, 2.

Four Disciples Ordained at Yale School of Religion.

Prof. John C. Archer, of the Yale School of Religion, recently ordained four students of the school to the ministry at Marquand chapel. Although Professor Archer is a Disciple in which fellowship the newly appointed ministers will serve, the ordination address was made by Dean Chas. R. Brown, who is a Congregationalist. Those ordained were F. A. Poffenberger and H. P. Lovell, both seniors, and E. E. and E. K. Higdon, special students in the mission school preparing for the foreign field. Dean Brown impressed upon the young men that they were chosen by Christ, referring to the passage, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you," which Christ spoke to his disciples. "Some people maintain that a minister should be judged by the same standards of morality as the ordinary layman," said Dr. Brown. "This is grossly wrong, as the minister is responsible for the upgrowth of the spiritual life of his parish, and therefore his congregation has a right to expect him to live above the plane of ordinary men." Each of the four men gave testimony of his religious experience, after which the ordination service was performed by Dr. Archer. Clyde E. Pickett, formerly pastor at Petoskey, Mich., assisted. Prof. Archer comments as follows concerning the ordination service: "Dean Brown, Mr. Pickett and I performed the ordination as a unit. I offered the ordination prayer and thereafter gave the hand of fellowship, welcoming the men to the ranks of the Disciple ministry and commending them to all men. The statements which they read were brief but inclusive of the cardinal points. The service was performed upon the basis of fully ample testimony and recommendation, in addition to our records here and our personal acquaintance with the candidates. I refer, of course, mainly to authority given us by the churches where the men now hold their membership. Mr. Pickett is one of our graduate students. He was for some time a Disciple pastor in Michigan, especially at Petoskey. Mr. Lovell is an Australian, a graduate of the University of Missouri and of the Bible College of Missouri. Mr. Poffenberger graduated from Bethany College in 1912. Messrs. Higdon are Eureka graduates. All are very strong men."

A Variety of Christmas Gifts at Paulding, O.

C. L. Johnson is rejoicing in the results of Christmas giving in the Paulding, O., church, to which Mr. Johnson ministers. On Christmas eve the "White Gift" program was featured and the following "gifts" are reported: Six gifts of self by public confession of faith in Christ, one added to the church by statement, ten re-consecrations, 154 gifts of service; of substance there were 106 gifts of food and clothing, 79 cash gifts amounting to $36.05. These offerings went to various causes, some locally, many to ministerial relief, some to the benevolent association. A successful Every Member Canvass has recently been made at Paulding.

Ninth Street, Washington, the Largest Disciples' Organization in the East.

On January 1 George A. Miller began the tenth year of his ministry with Ninth Street church, Washington, D. C. The past nine years have been very fruitful in the history of this splendid church. During this time 1,077 persons have united with the congregation; of this number 675 have been by baptism. This report indicates that the East is a fruitful field for ingathering. The church now has 1,300 active members. The Bible-school has more than doubled during these years and now has an enrollment of 1,200 in all departments. This is our largest church in the East and our largest Bible-school east of Canton, O. There are four active Christian Endeavor societies and the auxiliary to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions is one of the best in this section. The church now supports a living link missionary in both the foreign and home fields and contributes largely to all other missionary enterprises. At the beginning of the present ministry there was a mortgage indebtedness of $15,000 on the church building and a floating indebtedness of $400. These debts have been cancelled and three residences to the west of the present church building have been purchased; about $1,200 has been paid on these. In the spring these will be torn down and a modern Bible-school building costing about $25,000 will be erected. The first week in April the church will celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of its organization. There have been but two pastors during these twenty-five years—Edward B. Bagbey, now of Baltimore, and the present pastor. During

A Novel Event at Huntington, Ind.

Central church, Huntington, Ind., had a program of unusual interest on a recent Sunday evening when six students of Central college delivered orations. Elmer Ward Cole, pastor of the church, offered a prize of $20 to pupils showing excellency in preparing and delivering orations. He appointed three judges to pass on the merits of the speakers.

New Organ for University Church, Des Moines.

At University Church of Christ, Des Moines, on December 19, nearly $7,000 was pledged toward the purchase price of the great pipe organ, which was formally dedicated on that day. Added to the amount already raised, the church has more than enough to pay for the organ and all expenses of installation. Dr. Medbury's sermon was devoted largely to recounting the progress of the church from the little chapel built thirty-seven years ago to the magnificent edifice occupied now and equipped with the largest organ in Iowa. Des Moines music lovers are now looking forward to the appearance here Jan. 7. of Charles Galloway, organist at the St. Louis exposition and one of the best known musicians in the country. Prof. Galloway will give a concert on the new organ.

Missouri Pastor's Wife Ordained to the Ministry.

Mrs. A. N. Lindsey has been licensed to preach, perform marriage ceremonies or any of the ordinances of the church by the elders of the Clinton, Mo., church, of which her husband is pastor. He serves also as secretary of the Missouri Federation of Commercial Clubs, and is a candidate for the nomination for governor on the Democratic ticket.

Dr. Idleman Gives Des Moines Church His Farewell Message.

Central church, Des Moines, was crowded from pulpit to doors on Dec. 19, to hear the farewell sermon of Finis Idleman on the evening of his departure for New York to become pastor of Central church, in that city, after nine years with the Des Moines work. Dr. Idleman made but brief reference to his changing his field of labor. He paid a feeling tribute to the enterprise, devotion, and willingness of his congregation. He declared he believed in long pastorates and said he felt the time had come for him to heed the voice that called from the field in the east. "Though I feel like I am stepping off solid rock into the air," he said, "I believe I have filled my time here." In the course of his closing sermon Mr. Idleman said: "New truth has delivered the mind. Science has delivered us from our superstitions and our fears. Man is becoming acclimated to the universe and no longer cringes before the mysteries. Straightway he proceeds to the unknown. In religion an equally great freedom has dawned. There is a modern consciousness of world comradeship which foretells the morning. The earth is shrunken by modern methods of communication until we have speaking acquaintance with all the dwellers of the globe. Foreign missions have added to the tokens of the dawn. Embittered and mistreated nations have learned the spirit of good will from self-effacing ambassadors of the prince of peace. Returning missionaries have interpreted the best of the peoples to the civilized world. Great international barbarities, such as slavery, the opium traffic, the demoralization of the races through the shipment of rum have been stopped. Instead of death dealing commodities the missionaries have created an open door for the essential values of a civilized society. There has also come a new conception of the kingdom. The unity of the forces is the pre-eminent passion of all great souls. The last great division has been made except the inevitable breach to occur between those who have the spirit of progress and reactionaries. There is a growing hunger to know our religious neighbors. There is a growing feeling of need of them all in the great social task."

Miracles Performed at Winfield, Kan.

When R. W. Gentry came to the work at Winfield, Kan., three years ago, the church was staggering under a ten thousand dollar debt. The first year, 1913, three thousand dollars was raised. Last fall the church started out to reduce it still more, i. e., to raise another thousand. Success beyond fondest dreams has come, so that the total sum raised to date amounts to over $2,500 on the principal, excluding $420 interest which was raised at the same time. This effort reduces indebtedness to $4,500 or less, and makes of the Winfield church a different institution. The congregation now numbers 500 loyal, harmonious people and now, being relieved from the financial millstone the church looks forward to a great work and to a future along missionary lines. The Winfield church will hold a home force revival this month, C. H. Altheide leading in the singing.

New Year Notes From Foreign Fields

On one day in last April sixteen Japanese newspapers, with the combined circulation of a million and a half, published a three-column article by two prominent writers on "The Essentials of Christianity."

According to the most recent report of the China Continuation Committee, which recently held its third annual meeting in Shanghai, there are 5,563 missionaries, men and women, at work in China.

Since the organization of the Christian Endeavor movement, our societies have contributed to the work of the Foreign Society more than $176,000. Eternity alone can measure the great good accomplished by our young people.

Dr. W. N. Lemmon of the Mary Chiles' Hospital, Manila, P. I., reports 54,884 medical treatments for the year ending September 30, 1915. This is a gain of 32,158 in that hospital over the year ending September 30, 1914. And this is not all: During the same time he received $15,436 in medical fees. This work is a marvelous success.

Hundreds of our Christian Endeavor Societies are going to use the Endeavor Day exercise, "The Least of These," the first Sunday in February. Supplies are sent free of charge to all societies taking an offering for the orphanage at Damoh, India. Orders are coming in rapidly. Ask your society to join this host of young people, and send their order at once to Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

The agent of the American Bible Society, Petrograd, writes that since the war began and the vodka (whisky) shops were closed, the sale of Bibles and Testaments has greatly increased in Russia.

Please send us your order for March offering supplies now. They will be of great value to your church. They are informing and even inspiring. Stephen J. Corey.

IS IT TRUE?

The following quotation is taken from an editorial in the Youth's Companion. If it is true, it states a serious fact. This editorial, it should be stated, indicates further some reasons why young men should enter the ministry, in spite of its unattractive phases. Here is the quotation we wish you to read:

"YOUNG MEN AND THE MINISTRY."

"One hundred years ago the ministry was the noblest career a young man could choose. It meant dignity, authority, leadership, high standing in the state, and the respect and esteem of all. In the ministry centered learning, intelligence, and judgment.

"It is not so now, and everyone admits the change. The minister no longer leads the general thought of the community. He is treated with consideration, but too often with patronage, by the active, wealthy members even of his own parish. And because the office commands less respect, it is less sought by men of first-rate energy and ability."

'THE CONQUEST'

Our attractive weekly for adult and young people's classes, is planning a symposium of pastors on the question:

"Would you advise a young man to enter the ministry today?"

We want to hear from every pastor-reader of this paper. Send us something if possible, in defense of your noble calling.

First Bungalow Church for Texas Disciples Erected at Dallas.

Great faith has been manifested in the effort of J. H. Fuller, pastor at the new Rosemont church, Dallas, Tex. Mr. Fuller writes that he started without a member and no meeting place, except a moving picture theater. To date there have been enrolled 110 members. The new bungalow church home has one of the most attractive auditoriums in the city, Mr. Fuller reports.

Installation Service of Finis Idleman at Central Church, New York.

J. M. Philputt, former pastor at Central church, New York, has arranged visits from several prominent Disciple pastors as features of the Installation Service of the new pastor, Finis Idleman. E. B. Bagby, of Baltimore, will preach the sermon; Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, will deliver the charge to the new minister; F. W. Burnham, of Cincinnati, will give the charge to the congregation. W. M. Haushalter, of East Orange, N. J., will read the scripture lesson, M. M. Amunson, of Sterling Place, Brooklyn, will offer prayer, and F. M. Gordon, of Flatbush church, will pronounce the benediction. Three New York pastors of other fellowships will speak brief messages of welcome and Dr. Idleman will respond. January 7 is the date set for the Installation Service.

Donovan, Ill., Church Holds Meetings for "Community Uplift."

Guy L. Zerby, pastor at Donovan, Ill., reports a fine series of union meetings held in Donovan and conducted by home forces. The three local pastors alternated in speaking. No invitations were extended for converts. "Community uplift" was the sole purpose of the meetings, writes Mr. Zerby.

The Teaching Feature in Revival Meetings.

The constructive character of the series of meetings recently closed at First church, Bloomington, Ill., is illustrated in the fact that the Gospel of Mark proved to be a "best seller" among the attendants upon the meetings. Edgar D. Jones emphasized strongly the teaching feature in his sermons, and selected all his texts from this one Bible book. A hundred copies of Mark's Gospel were purchased during the meetings. Added to this fruit of teaching, there comes an excellent report of lives vitally touched by Mr. Jones' appeal. There were in all seventy-eight additions to the church membership, fifty-six of these by confession of faith; in several cases entire families were reunited in Christ. Mr. Jones speaks most appreciatively of the song work of Mr. Fred Butler and wife, of Yonkers, N. Y. First church is not going to rest on its oars at the completion of this successful enterprise in evangelism, but follows with a Community Training School, which is to be conducted by R. P. Shepherd from Jan. 9-19.

Religious Survey in Preparation for Revival.

The Men's Brotherhood of the Capitol Hill Church of Christ, Des Moines, decided last week to begin an immediate religious survey of the territory surrounding the church as a preparation for the series of revival meetings which will be held there this month by Charles S. Earley, of Oskaloosa.

New $50,000 Church Home at Athens, Ga.

The new First church home at Athens, Ga., was dedicated on Dec. 19. Herbert Yeuell, of Chicago, preached the dedicatory sermon and the pastor, Stanley B. Grubb, led in the dedication ceremonies. W. A. Chastain, a former pastor, also took prominent part. There were five services for the congregation. The Bible school session was held as the last meeting in the old church building, and the dedicatory services followed in the handsome new place of worship across the street.

The new building is a $50,000 house, built for about $10,000 less than that sum—the minister and committee saving the contractor's profit. The church had been saving for several years, and when war conditions came on they began construction, finding that they could save on material and labor in the very conditions which retarded other lines of work. The church will seat 1,500 people; there is every possible equipment for a community center, as well as a model place of general worship and Bible-school activities. The first floor has library, kitchen, dining rooms, rest rooms, with every convenience for women and children; a gymnasium, with shower baths and every accessory, and place for every need for social and educational service to the congregation.

Thirty Young People Enlist for Christian Work.

A feature of the revival services held by W. J. Minges at Grant Park church, Des Moines, was the volunteering of thirty young people for the work of the ministry on the mission field. About five hundred persons were added to the church membership during these meetings.

TRANSYLVANIA COLLEGE NOTES.

Mrs. R. H. Crossfield, who has been dangerously ill with pneumonia for more than five weeks, is reported to be slowly improving. President Crossfield was compelled to cancel all engagements for the holidays and the early part of the new year.

The Kentucky Press Association, which holds its annual meeting in the city this week, has been invited to inspect the Transylvania library, which contains, in addition to a large number of very rare and valuable old books, quite a collection of other materials of interest.

A very valuable bulletin to be used in connection with Education Day, January 16, has been sent out by Transylvania and the College of the Bible. This bulletin discloses some striking facts with reference to the contribution that these institutions have made to the preaching forces of the church in the state and nation. It states some interesting facts:

"Fifteen hundred of the preachers now serving the Brotherhood who have had college privileges were educated by Transylvania and the College of the Bible. Two hundred and sixty-four of these are in Kentucky, one hundred are working as home missionaries, and thirty-three are on the foreign field."

"The ministers of 225 of the 350 Christian churches in Kentucky having a membership of 100 or more were trained in Transylvania and the College of the Bible."

"According to the Year Book, only 24 Kentucky preachers were educated in other colleges, 90 per cent of those having enjoyed college privileges receiving their training in the Lexington institutions."

The standing of Transylvania is also set out as follows:

Member of the Association of Kentucky Colleges. Member of Southern College Association. Member of the Association of American Universities. Member of Board of Education of the Disciples of Christ. Member of Kentucky and Southern Inter-collegiate Athletic Association. Recognized by the General Educational Board of New York. Recognized by leading American Universities."

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes wish to study the life of Jesus this year. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies, and in Y. M. C. A. classes. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

South Akron, O., Church Loses Pastor.

W. G. Loucks, pastor at South Akron, O., for eight years, is planning to leave this field. Mr. Loucks is a rare combination of spiritually minded man and organizer. He has done a remarkable work in the promotion of a men's Bible-class. For a while this organization was so large that a local moving picture theater was sought to accommodate the attendance. It is unfortunate that the South Akron church is to lose Mr. Loucks, and the congregation securing his able services is to be highly congratulated.

A Notable Success

The welcome that has been given by the leaders in the churches and Sunday schools to the little book just issued by the Disciples Publication Society:

"The Training of Church Members"

is evidence that this text has come to meet a very definite need in the churches.

The following are typical letters received from leaders concerning the book:

FROM REV. H. CLAY TRUSTY, Seventh Street Church, Indianapolis: "I have examined thoroughly the manual, "The Training of Church Members," and think it a very fine thing. We need to spend some time with young Christians on the fundamentals of our Christian religion and church life. This affords a splendid guide."

FROM REV. L. C. MOORE, Waterloo, Ia.: "This book is filling a long known need in our mid-week service. I am more than pleased with it. The attendance was doubled in four weeks by the use of the text."

FROM REV. IRVING BROWN, Sac City, Ia.: "I am much impressed with it. Shall introduce it either at the C. E. or mid-week prayer-meetings. We all need the training it supplies."

FROM REV. L. J. MARSHALL, Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo.:

"This is a timely piece of work. Its clear and simple presentations of the lessons to be taught should make it popular among Christian workers."

How You May Use "The Training of Church Members in Your Work

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Doctrine of Maximums

"CHRISTIAN UNITY WILL NOT COME ON THE BASIS OF MINIMUMS, BUT ON THE BASIS OF MAXIMUMS."

That was a declaration first made in 1910 by Bishop Anderson, of the Episcopal church, in the Laymen's Missionary Congress in Chicago. It was applauded by Baptists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists, Disciples and everybody else, who thought they saw in it a happy scheme by which no denomination would have to give up anything, but each could contribute its distinctive and favorite feature to the united Church.

The bishop derided the idea of seeking for unity upon the basis of the common catholic agreements which underlie and run all the way through the denominational order—this would be Christian unity on the minimums; it would mean that the several denominations would have to surrender their purely denominational characteristics, and he held that the result of such a reduction to a common denominator would be a flat and impotent uniformity. Unity, it was contended, is to come by inclusion, not by excision.

It has been very interesting to observe how widely current this phrase about maximums has become in recent literature on Christian unity.

Even among Disciples of Christ it has found eloquent repetition from the convention platforms, and it has flowed without a tremor from the pens of our guileless editors. Such a sentiment, of course, is, in principle, the direct antithesis of the position taken by the Disciples of Christ. But so far its use by many leaders of the brotherhood has been allowed to pass without challenge, save by The Christian Century which, in entering its exception, found it difficult to avoid seeming to take an ungracious attitude toward our brethren of the Episcopal church.

But the time has come when plain speaking is more important than good manners.

Things have happened and are happening which make it necessary for evangelical Christendom to scrutinize pretty unceremoniously the Christian union proposals that emanate from Episcopalian sources, and to examine not wholly without guile the terms in which Episcopalian solutions of the problem are couched.

It will be recalled that an invitation went abroad some years since to Christians of all bodies to join the Episcopalians in a world conference on Christian unity. Their initiative in issuing this call and in arranging for the conference has given a certain pre-eminence to the Episcopal church as an advocate of Christian unity.

But the farther the Protestant churches go in their search for unity under the leadership of these Episcopalian brethren the more suspicious of Episcopalian good faith do they seem to become.

This is a hard thing to say about any Christian body. But the Episcopal church seems to be doing all it can to make itself unpopular in evangelical Protestantism.

We have only to point to the Kikuyu controversy in England, the flare-up over the Panama Congress, and the Stonemen's movement in Philadelphia to explain and justify the suspicion in which Episcopalianism is now coming pretty generally to be held.

Open-eyed Protestantism is settling down to the fairly well substantiated conviction that Episcopalians want Christian union because they hope thereby to accomplish the universal triumph of their pet scheme of Episcopacy or apostolic succession. The sentiment is widespread that their motive for urging unity is, in its last analysis, a sectarian and not a catholic motive. It is a pity that this seems to be true, but no good is gained by courteously blinding our eyes to the truth.

The things that have happened since this plausible doctrine of maximums began to be assiduously put into circulation by Episcopalian writers and leaders throw an interpretative light on what the doctrine itself meant in the minds that first conceived it.

The fine phrase of Bishop Anderson was simply a euphemistic way of saying: "We want to 'contribute' the Episcopate to the united Church, and we will agree to accept whatever doctrines or practices other denominations may wish to 'contribute' if all will agree to accept our Episcopate. Incidentally we would add that we will not, of course, have any interest in any proposal for unity that leaves our Episcopate out."

That is what the doctrine of maximums means.

Some of the Disciples who were caught by this doctrine have ingenuously argued that it was a good principle because by means of it the Disciples and Baptists would be enabled to "contribute" immersion to the united Church! No doubt such Disciples would find—indeed they actually have found—the Episcopalians naively ready and willing to "trade" their Episcopate for our mode of baptism!

But all such subtle designing is coming to its inevitable finish as the uncatholic temper of even the more liberal leaders of the Episcopalian body becomes better known. And the doctrine of maximums is bound to lose its plausibility as churchmen generally come to see that it does not mean Christian union at all. It means simply an attempt at constructing a larger denomination out of the many now existing.

The failure of the doctrine of maximums will more and more throw the churches back upon the catholic principle for which the Disciples plead. It is the principle that declares that the great things the churches now hold in common are a sufficient basis for a united Church.

This principle would say to the Episcopalian: Your Episcopate is not common to the churches of Christ, therefore it can not be essential to the Church of Christ.

While we would admonish the Disciples' Council on Christian union to move with the utmost discretion in accepting invitations from Episcopalian sources on behalf of Christian unity, we would also strongly emphasize the conviction that this is the nick of time to proclaim our own catholic plea with renewed vigor and confidence.

The divided Church is in a mood to hear the Disciples' message if we utter it with urgency and practice it with consistency.

Practicing Christian Union

BY EDWARD SCRIBNER AMES

WHEN one is asked what distinguishes the Disciples of Christ from other religious bodies, the answer should be: Their devotion to Christian Union. It is true that some other denominations have learned to advocate union but the Disciples are born advocates of it. They are not only hospitable to the idea, they are committed to it by all their history and traditions. While others were still hostile or indifferent to it they proclaimed it and undertook its realization. They owe their very life to the vision of a united church which their first leaders cherished and they are destined to be tested in the future by their loyalty to this cause and by the resourcefulness and wisdom with which they labor for it.

It is unnecessary to recount how Thomas Campbell, a Scotch Presbyterian minister in the north of Ireland, a graduate of the University of Glasgow, became deeply impressed by the bitter strife of the Christian sects in his country and sought the free new world of America as an open field in which to realize his dream of union. No one can read his Declaration and Address, expressing his convictions in these matters, without feeling the depth and power of his prophetic summons to all Christian people to cease their warfare against one another and unite in their common duty to achieve a nobler religious life in the churches and to evangelize the world.

NOT AN ORIGINAL DREAM.

That dream was not original with him. There had been many individuals in protestant history who had longed for such a state. Not only great churchmen like Richard Baxter and Grotius but philosopher-statesmen like Leibniz and John Locke had labored for union and peace in religion. Thomas Campbell, however, was the first great leader who succeeded in developing a practical plan which has produced appreciable results. His vision became the inspiration of thousands of Christians from various communions.

As the direct result of the movement he inaugurated, more than a million people are now gathered into the churches of Disciples of Christ, known also simply as Christian Churches. Their whole manner of organization, their doctrine and their forms of worship were determined by the desire to promote union. They saw that all Protestants accept the scriptures as authoritative and concluded that the differences spring from non-scriptural elements. For example, the humanly formulated creeds as tests of fellowship were renounced.

The Disciples arose more than a hundred years ago without any creed but the New Testament and never have had any other. To avoid the confusion which party names have wrought, they refused to be called Campbellites or Stoneites, and strenuously clung to the name Christian or Disciple which all acknowledge.

AVOIDING UNBIBLICAL PRACTICES.

Sometimes this devotion to union nearly proved their undoing. Their unwillingness to do anything not authorized explicitly in the New Testament for fear of causing division, jeopardized important religious interests and developments. Some said missionary societies should not be organized because they were not provided for in the New Testament. Some held that instrumental music should not be used in the church service because no passage of scripture justified it. A serious question was raised as to whether ministers should be given the degree of doctor of divinity and whether they should be paid a stated salary. All of these questions arose out of a conscientious effort to avoid unbiblical practices which might lead to dissension and disunion.

From the first, the Disciples have sought to realize Christian union in the local congregation. The appeal has been to individual Christians to unite in neighborhood groups with such practices as all Christians could accept, and at the same time with the greatest possible freedom of individual belief and opinion compatible with practical co-operation. The local churches are the ultimate units of organization and authority.

CONGREGATIONAL POLITY.

This congregational polity is essentially the same as that found in the great evangelical bodies of Congregationalists and Baptists. The alliance of various local churches has been purely for missionary and practical purposes. There has never been any disposition to allow any ecclesiastical authority beyond the local church except the scriptures themselves. The offices of bishops and popes and doctrinal councils have been carefully avoided. Every minister and every layman has been accountable only to the local church to which he belonged. Union has been sought within the local churches and all other agencies such as religious journals, missionary conventions, and personal leadership have been purely advisory and practical in their influence. The success or failure of their great ideal has accordingly depended upon the spirit and temper of the local church.

It is obvious, therefore, that the primary historic purpose of the Disciples, the realization of Christian union, must be achieved, if at all, within the individual church. To what extent has this occurred? How far are the churches of Disciples of Christ union churches?

THE SIMPLE CONFESSION OF FAITH.

In doctrinal matters they have manifested the greatest tolerance and liberality. They have not insisted upon uniformity in any theory of the nature of God or of Jesus or of the Bible or of the atonement or of the future life, or of sin or of miracle or of salvation. They have adhered to personal allegiance to Jesus Christ and to his way of life. The only confession of faith required in any Church of Disciples is that of faith in Christ and there has been no authoritative theological interpretation of this confession. As a matter of fact there are to be found in every local church individuals of all manner of Christian traditions—Calvinists, Lutherans, Wesleyans, Arminians, Universalists and Unitarians. There are conservatives and radicals.

Nothing illustrates the practice of union better than the observance of the communion service or Lord's supper. The Disciples have never been close communionists. From the first they have freely invited all who desired to do so to participate in this intimate memorial institution. Nowhere else have they been more vitally faithful to their original and dominant ideal of union. This is not because they have treated the ordinance lightly or were indifferent to its proper observance. It has been in fact the central element in their worship. They observe it every Sunday. Laymen, as well as clergymen, administer it. In hundreds of churches where there are no pastors, the members assemble to celebrate this sacred festival.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE LORD'S SUPPER.

And yet, attaching all this importance to it, they welcome to it all persons of whatever belief or tradition. In this simple ceremonial, where their zeal and devotion and intimate fellowship are so deeply expressed, the Disciples have fulfilled in the most beautiful and fraternal spirit their most profound and urgent conviction of Christian union. The logic of such a history and of such an observance of the most spiritual ordinance of the church is to receive into local church fellowship all who regard themselves as Christians and are willing to co-operate in the common life and practical activities of the organization.

Only one thing stands in the way of the fullest application of this principle and that is the survival of an older, legalistic conception of baptism. In their attempt to find a universal basis of union and fellowship in the teaching of scripture and in the example of the early church, the Disciples adopted the practice of immersion. They saw that all churches recognized immersion as baptism while some had doubts about the validity of sprinkling, and of infant baptism in any form. Unhappily, instead of treating this ordinance as they did the communion, by leaving its observance to the individual according to his own conscientious convictions, they developed the rigid and exclusive practice of baptism by immersion.

WHY IMMERSION?

There was some excuse for this error. A hundred years ago the science of biblical interpretation had only begun to be developed. The Bible was regarded by all Protestants too much as a lawbook and a book of specific rules and regulations. All religious bodies were to some extent dominated by that conception. All of them, unless it was the Quakers, insisted upon baptism by water in some form as a condition of membership in the church. It was natural that the Disciples, seeking a basis of agreement whereon all could stand, should practice immersion. They assumed that since all Christians regarded baptism as of sufficient importance to require it of all candidates, they would readily consent to practice it in the original form for the sake of union. But in this they were mistaken. The Christian world shows no sign of returning to the universal practice of immersion. The tendency is to regard baptism as less and less essential and since it is not felt to be of vital importance, people will not concern themselves about its precise form.

Besides, the investigations of New Testament scholars have made it extremely doubtful whether Jesus ever commanded baptism, and a growing appreciation of his mind and spirit makes it still more difficult to believe that he intended to fasten upon his followers an external form of this kind. He constantly denounced the officials of religion in his time for their formalism and legalism. He regarded even the observance of a day of worship as a convenience and a privilege rather than as a fixed requirement. He put emphasis upon right purposes and good works and declared the test of religion to be its fruits. Even the Apostle Paul saw that the letter kills and that it is the spirit which gives life.

NATURALLY A FRATERNAL PEOPLE.

The Disciples are fully aware of this larger, deeper meaning of the Christian life. It is only in their argumentative and self-conscious and formal moments that they are dogmatic and legalistic concerning immersion. As has been shown, they are fraternal and gracious to the last degree in the communion service. They haven't a doubt that all these good people in other churches are Christians and as sure of heaven as themselves. They enter into union services with other churches, exchange pulpits, join various interdenominational federations and alliances and social reforms. They welcome Methodists and Presbyterians and Congregationalists and all the rest to practical religious work, have them teach in their Sunday-schools, allow them to contribute money to their causes, and greet them socially as sincere and genuine Christians.

There is no possible doubt that this growing fellowship is gradually wearing away their old doctrinal insistence on immersion and preparing the way for a frank and whole-souled practice of thorough-going Christion union in the local congregation. As evidence of this may be cited the increasing silence of the educated ministers on the subject of baptism and the outspoken advocacy of closer affiliation in local churches by the two leading religious journals of the brotherhood. But the final step in this practice of union must be made by the local church.

HOW UNION WORKS IN CHICAGO CHURCH.

It is a source of the greatest satisfaction in our congregation here in Hyde Park that we have for twelve years realized so fully this historic and significant ideal of union. We have had the courage of our convictions and have made a significant demonstration of the practicability of actually uniting in fullest accord persons from a great number of widely different traditions. We have received Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Baptists, Lutherans, Unitarians, Catholics, and some from the Dutch Reformed Church and from the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, and a number on confession of faith who have not previously been identified with any church, and who preferred to omit baptism entirely.

Since this practice has been developed as a definite attempt to carry forward and make vital in a new day the noble, historic purpose of the Disciples, it may be appropriate to restate its main features and to summarize its results and implications.

The method employed has been to receive as members of the congregation any who desire to unite with us either by statement or by letter from their former church, or by confession of faith where they have had no previous church membership. They may do this simply by giving their names to the pastor. Usually they are also publicly received. When members of the congregation remove from the community they are given the letters they brought to us with an additional statement of their membership here.

SOME IMPORTANT RESULTS.

The relation of the members of the congregation is organic and vital in every way. They hold office, except that of elder, and have a voice and vote in the conduct of the organization. There is no feeling that they are less religious or less "saved" than others. They are just as loyal, contribute money as generously, work as faithfully, are as much "at home" and have as much sense of possession and participation as those who always have been Disciples.

Among the important results is the uniting of families in religious fellowship. In many instances the wife has been a Disciple and the husband a member of another church, or the husband has been a Disciple and the wife's membership elsewhere. In other cases one has been, say, a Presbyterian, the other a Unitarian, and both have found a congenial church home here. In more than one instance men who have never been able to accept the ecclesiastical traditions and are not attracted by the formal, churchly institution have readily become members of the congregation on confession of faith.

This simple confession of faith is that which the Disciples everywhere employ. With slightly varying phrases it runs thus: Do you believe with all your heart in Jesus Christ and in his way of life, and do you earnestly desire to follow him?

There is nothing more needed in American life than a more vital and a more wholesome religious atmosphere in the home. This is made particularly difficult where the household is divided in its affiliations. A deeper harmony and efficiency exist where all are together in the same church.

TWO VIEWS OF THE CHURCH.

If one asks what difference there is between membership in the church and membership in the congregation, the answer is that the amount and importance of the difference depend on which of two views of the church a person holds. If one regards the church and its ordinances as the only means of divine grace and the attainment of spirituality, then church membership takes on the greatest possible significance and one cannot be too careful in complying with the conditions of entrance into its fellowship. If, on the other hand, as is the case with increasing numbers, the church is a natural institution, gathering into itself those earnest souls who seek comradeship and help in making the most of their life, and who earnestly desire to realize in their own hearts and among all men the divine kingdom of love which Jesus proclaimed, then the ends of religion are adequately expressed in congregations of those who strive to fulfill the Christian ideals as they see and understand them.

Membership with a body of like minded people is, in this view, of the highest practical importance but it is not sacramental in the old sense. It is a means of stimulating and developing character but it is not a channel of mysterious, miraculous grace. Such organizations will have symbols of their fellowship and ideals but they will know that they ARE symbols and will not fall into the error of believing that such symbols can be made essential or necessary.

A NEIGHBORHOOD FELLOWSHIP.

Membership in the congregation enables us to care for these and other differences among people who have had very diverse religious training and who are brought together in their neighborhood life and through social and spiritual attraction. It affords greater flexibility and elasticity within the general religious fellowship without offending the consciences of those who cling to a more fixed and changeless conception of the church.

It is interesting to realize what this practice is doing for the common religious life of our neighborhood. The Baptist Church has a plan of "membership in the society" which has obviated for them the limitations of the more rigid Baptist practice. They are thus able also to receive into their fellowship persons of very widely different religious orders, without forfeiting the position of the church in the Baptist communion. We have therefore in the neighborhood, Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational, Unitarian, Baptist and Disciple churches which can freely exchange members and which have for all practical purposes a common basis of Christian fellowship. A person coming into this vicinity who is by his spirit and desires eligible to any one of these churches, or to the Catholic or Episcopal church, may if he so wish, enter the fellowship of any one of the others. It is not strange that these churches feel themselves to be of one great fellowship, and have co-operated for several years in the council of Hyde Park churches.

A REAL UNION.

This is a significant achievement. The spirit and practice of union between these churches of different denominations is not an artificial and merely courteous coalition into which the separate organizations have been coerced. It is rather a direct and vital expression of the conviction and temper of the local churches themselves. They do not have to get together under one roof, with one pastor and one set of officers to know that they are united. The illusion that union is a matter of assembling under a common roof has sometimes brought into formal union congregations which had no inner fitness for each other. The union of congregations which have grown up independently is always difficult to achieve, not so much because of doctrinal differences as because of the different traditions, habits, tastes and sentiments they have cherished. The number of church organizations should be relative to the population and the economic resources, not with a view to making them as large as possible but rather with the aim to keep them as small as is compatible with strength and vitality.

In church work, as in modern agriculture, there is great need for more intensive cultivation. If the churches are congenial and fraternal with one another, as in Hyde Park, then it is unnecessary for them to spend much energy on formal, institutional union. Each may have the consciousness of working at the development of the common religious life of the neighborhood when cultivating the constituency which association and per-

NO FAILURE HERE

WHETHER Christianity has failed or not is a question about which it seems quite possible to keep up an interminable discussion, in view of the evident anti-Christian situation in so-called Christian Europe.

Perhaps, therefore, this little effort at a discriminating statement will be forgiven.

Christianity certainly has failed to get itself organized into the political life of mankind. Whatever else is to be said, that much is certainly true, or nations would not now be resorting to sheer force to attain what they call justice.

Force is no guarantee of justice.

Whichever belligérent wins the war, it will not settle the question as to which one ought to win it.

We are having war because nations have not yet learned to seek justice through reason and through love.

It seems like a wild dream to imagine that the nations ever will learn to seek justice on the only path that leads to justice.

But the fact that we still dream of it, that we still declare its possibility and its practicability, shows that Christianity has not failed.

When men cease dreaming of the day when swords shall be beaten into ploughshares—then it may be said truly that Christianity has failed, for it will then be dead indeed.

But the marvelous vitality of our religion, the unprecedented volume of evidence that it holds its sway dynamically in the world, is found in the fact that the dream is today more vivid, more imperative, more inescapable than ever before in human history.

AN UNPOPULAR EDITORIAL

HENRY FORD'S failure—if in the long course of years it is shown to be a failure—is explained not by calling his scheme quixotic and inherently impossible, but by recognizing that his own fellow-countrymen did not back him. The reason they did not back him was primarily that they did not feel as he felt about the war.

American public sentiment has recovered from its first shock of horror at the precipitation of war. We have come to take the war for granted. Our minds are eagerly following the progress of campaigns. The contest obsesses us. Our own diplomatic problems engage us. We are not tender in our feelings for the youths that are led to the slaughter. We do not talk any longer about "cannon-fodder." The press has put the soft pedal on the humanitarian talk about the homes that are being left without fathers, about the unspeakable cost that childhood is being compelled to pay, about the anguished hearts of women—and all that.

The hideous inhumanity of the whole inconclusive strife we have forgotten in our excitement over the great game!

And then, more than all, we are making money out of the war. Every part of the land is gripped today in an industrial boom that promises to make this year of 1916 the most prosperous year in the history of this nation.

How could you expect us to take time from our business to go with Mr. Ford, or even to follow him with our prayers, when it was his mission to kill the European goose that lays our golden egg?

But if instead of taking Mr. Ford as a joke the sentiment of the American public had taken his mission seriously, prayerfully, if instead of Europe knowing that he represented no one but himself it had known that he represented the substantial citizenship of the United States, Europe would have taken him seriously, too.

And if instead of going with 100 American citizens in one boat, his proposal had been met with a response so eager and representative as to fill fifty boats with 10,000 peace missionaries, Mr. Ford's idea would have been more than the dream of a dreamer.

That idea will save the world from the curse of war!

And it is the only way the world will be saved from the curse of war.

Peace missionaries—not political diplomats—these are humanity's saviors from the thrall of war, just as gospel missionaries are the saviors of the world from the thrall of sin.

Mr. Ford was all right.

And his idea was from God.

But Mr. Ford's countrymen were too unimaginative and too beastly prosperous to back up his program with their moral strength.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS

OUR very sincerely esteemed contemporary, the Congregationalist, of Boston, has attained the distinction in religious journalism of being one hundred years old.

In celebration of the event it appears on January 6, in a new dress and a special issue so sumptuous and every way delectable as to elicit from its admiring contemporaries an additional emotion sometimes called envy but certainly not of an un-Christian sort.

From our modest thirty-one years of life the Congregationalist seems very venerable indeed. But its pages seem so almost playful with their cheer and optimism and faith that one cannot help suspecting its editors have access to Ponce de Leon's famous fountain which that excellent gentleman once thought to find in Florida.

Of course our congratulations are extended to our neighbor and to the noble body of Christian folks whose ideals it both reflects and helps to create.

Y. M. C. A. AND THE WAR

JUDGING from the prodigious service it is rendering in the war camps of Europe, it would seem that the Young Men's Christian Association had come to the kingdom for just such a time as this. The rapid growth of this organization during the past fifteen years in numbers and material resources would seem to have been truly providential.

In no previous war has Christian work been carried on among the soldiers on anything like the vast scale characteristic of this war. It is largely due to the activities of the Y. M. C. A.

Dr. John R. Mott, General Secretary of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A., is reported to be carrying an enormous personal budget amounting to over a half-million dollars a year which amount he undertakes to secure from generous people of wealth for carrying on religious work among the soldiers. This is in addition to the vast work done through the regular channels of the organization.

The opportunities are so great and urgent as to be almost appalling, save to men of great faith. Dr. Mott has recently given out as samples of the calls he receives the following:

A report from Young Men's Christian Association workers in France that there are openings along the French line where 200 association secretaries could be used at once, if the men were available for appointment; a call from Russia asking for fifteen Americans able to speak German, who directly on their arrival in Russia would be sent into the internment camps of German prisoners, to make themselves helpful in every way that their own judgment might suggest; and finally, an appeal from Italy asking for enough money to supply 1,000,000 copies of Dr. Luzzi's translation of the New Testament to soldiers in the Italian camps and trenches.

Many English, Scotch and French clergymen visit the trenches to preach to the men and minister to their moral and spiritual needs. Their services are nearly always rendered under the auspices and direction of the Y. M. C. A.

The prison camps especially offer a wide field for Y. M. C. A. service, and its workers are welcomed on both sides of the belligerent lines. There are said to be 5,000,000 wounded soldiers now in hospitals. The depth and quality of Christian service that [illegible] beyond computation.

It can safely be predicted that [illegible] ful and practical Christian service to the millions of soldiers, the Y. M. C. A. will come out of the war with a grip on the heart of Europe's [illegible] organization has ever before gained.

DISCIPLES AND THE PANAMA CONGRESS

MANY were the plaints heard after the great Edinburgh Missionary Conference in 1910 on account of the silence and inactivity of the Disciples of Christ in the councils of that history-making gathering. While some of our missionary leaders were present as delegates, their voices were not once heard in the discussions, and in the preparatory work for the conference their counsel, if sought at all, was not appreciably registered.

The situation seems to be quite the reverse in the case of the Congress on Christian Work in Latin America which is to be held in the City of Panama, February 10-20. Representatives of this typically North American religious movement are having a constructive part in the arrangements for the Congress and will bear their full responsibility in the deliberations of the gathering itself.

At the head and center of the whole enterprise is Rev. S. G. Inman, for ten years a missionary supported by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions at Piedras Negras, Mexico, where he developed a remarkable work on the broader social lines, a work which won the admiration and material support of Mr. Carranza, now the recognized President of the Republic. Mr. Inman, as executive secretary has developed the Congress idea with a skill and statesmanship which elicits the eulogy of men like John R. Mott, Robert E. Speer and Dr. Arthur Judson Brown.

He has guided the Congress with extraordinary prevision through the scylla and charybdis of Episcopalian tenderness toward the Roman Catholic church on the one hand, and the fanatical anti-Catholic sentiment of a certain type of missionary worker on the other.

Mr. Inman is not only carving out a place of even greater future usefulness for himself, but reflecting credit upon the Woman's Board and the entire fellowship of the Disciples.

PRESIDENT Charles T. Paul, College of Missions, Indianapolis, was given the constructive work to do for the most important Commission of the eight into which the whole problem is divided. His first draft of the introduction to the report of the Commission on Method and Message was pronounced by his collaborators as so scholarly, masterful and spiritual in its character that it was accepted by the Commission with but the slightest change.

Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison, vice president of the C. W. B. M., has been devoting most of her time for months in research and constructive work for another of the Commissions, and has enriched her Commission's report with invaluable contributions.

The editor of The Christian Century has been requested to act as editorial representative of the Congress, interpreting its deliberations to the secular and religious press of North America, and to accompany the deputation of sixteen from Panama to the series of Regional Conferences to be held in six capital cities of South America, interpreting these also to the press and compiling the deliberations of the Regional Conferences into a volume to constitute volume four of the "Proceedings" of the Panama Congress.

It is believed that as a direct result of this intimate part taken by these representatives of the Disciples' fellowship our churches will take a deep interest in the Congress and will open their eyes and hearts to the great opportunity for Christian work in the republics of the South.

LET THE PEOPLE SING

ONE OF the deplorable lacks in the church worship of modern congregations is that of congregational singing. In many city churches the choir has monopolized the function of song and the people have a chance to sing only one or two hymns in the service. These they sing indifferently because they cannot get into the spirit of congregational singing in a service organized as such services are.

We believe the value of the typical quartette choir is greatly exaggerated in the minds of ministers and church officers. Its contribution to the worship is exceedingly dubious and a pretty strong case can be made against its attraction as entertainment.

The choir, as a leader of the congregation, is a desirable and useful device, but it robs God of the praise due him when it takes the hymns out of the mouths of the people.

And it robs the people of one of the most natural joys and inspirations of divine worship.

Our present generation is growing up with a pagan ignorance of the great hymns of the Christian faith. But how can they be expected to learn them when only two hymns are sung at a service?

It is futile to exhort pastors on the point of educating their congregations to know and enjoy the treasures of the hymn-book, because to nine-tenths of the pastors themselves the hymnal is an unexplored continent.

The people will learn to sing if the ministers learn to make a proper place for congregational praise, and then fill that place with noble hymns.

Our Readers' Opinions

THE DISCIPLES' JOURNALISM.

I rise to heartily congratulate the editor upon his editorial in The Century of December 23, on "The Disciples' Journalism." Its general content is worthy of the highest commendation, and yet, to use scripture language, "I have somewhat against thee." The whole truth was not told. But, now that the subject is open for discussion, I think no better service could be rendered than to go to the bottom of this whole matter.

As an illustration of the prevailing evil in its wide-spreading influence upon our great cause, I believe I am justified in quoting the following paragraph from a letter recently received from one of the leading publishing houses of this country: "It is true that we have published a considerable number of volumes by authors connected with the Church of the Disciples, although we are quite at a loss to understand the evident divisions of that general body. For some reason there appears to be a great lack of unanimity between different sections. An author, approved by one section, is as heartily disapproved by another, while the various publishing houses, without exception, decline to take any interest in your books. We can discover no explanation as to these conditions, but you will readily see our hesitancy until we are assured of distinct support within the denomination."

Now this extract from an "outsider" lays open the whole sore, and shows the disease is general. "While the various publishing houses, without exception," are deeply under its influence. When I read this letter I could scarcely keep from shedding tears. I knew well enough what was going on among the Disciples, but I did not suppose our alienations had become so manifest as to disgrace us in the eyes of the bookmaking world. Surely it is now time to call a halt, and if our editors and publishers do not heed the call, then the brethren should take the matter up at once in a way that will cast out the evil spirit and restore the unity that once existed among us.

The "Century" has opened the way, but has begun at the wrong end of the line. Its view makes the "Christian Evangelist" and the Christian Board of Publication the chief of sinners above all that dwell in our spiritual journalism. Now I hold no brief for either of these publications, but I believe in fair play. Our troubles began, and were full grown, long before the Christian Board of Publication had an existence. These troubles may be generalized under three heads:

1. The spirit of commercialism.
2. The reign of lex talionis and the spirit of bossism.
3. A want of a clear conception of the province of true journalism.

An honorable competition in business is desirable, but when this competition enters our Bible-schools, so as to infect our children with the unchristian spirit of partyism, then it seems to me that it would be better to cease furnishing our schools with any literature whatsoever, than to sustain a traffic which is poisoning the most important springs that water our church life.

But all this can be corrected. Already there are signs of improvement. The Century can help on the reformation, but it cannot do this by manifesting a self-conscious superiority, or by becoming an "accuser of the brethren." If each one of our papers and "publishing houses, without exception," as charged in the letter from which I have quoted, shall continue to vindicate its own course, to save its face, then not much can be done for a better day.

This crimination and recrimination must be stopped. We do not need to pass around the cry, "Lord, is it I?" We are all—editors and people—more or less involved in this shame; and the sooner this fact is recognized and a right spirit shown, the sooner our disgrace will be removed.

There is no place for the "Tu quoque" in our present troubles. Let the dead past bury the dead. It is easy to say, "You are to blame." But who will be first to say, "I am to blame?" And yet this treatment of the "Ego" is absolutely necessary, if anything worth while shall be accomplished.

It is doubtless true that both the "Evangelist" and the Christian Board of Publication have made some mistakes. I think they have, but it is not going to help matters for "those who live in glass houses to be throwing stones."

I am writing this on the first day of the New Year. It is just a little past 8 o'clock in the morning. The thermometer registers 60 degrees, and will go above 75 degrees before night. I am sitting on the front porch, and am as comfortable as if it were summer time. Outside all nature is smiling. I am thinking of Bishop Heber's lines:

"——every prospect pleases,
And only man is vile."

But soon I find myself saying, this cannot be true of Christian men, and I find myself almost rising from my seat to emphasize the affirmation—it must not be true of my brethren.

IN APPRECIATION.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

I am enclosing you herewith my check for my 1916 subscription to The Christian Century, and in doing so permit me to express to you my personal appreciation of the paper. I enjoy every issue of it. I like—as everyone else who loves his Lord must like—your fine big world view of the Master's church, and the work he has given us to do. I like—as all who love their brotherman must like—your fine interpretation of the manhood and the brotherhood of Jesus. It is rich—always helpful.

I want to thank you especially for your word in the current issue—I think it is the issue of this past week—in which you write of the selection of Doctor Kershner as editor of the Christian Evangelist. I heartily endorse every word you say.

Practicing Christian Unity

BY EDWARD SCRIBNER AMES.

sonal leadership have grouped together in a particular church.

NOT ORATIONS BUT ACTUAL PRACTICE NEEDED.

Unless a denomination can receive any professed Christian into the fellowship of its local churches, it cannot actually practice union in a way that is real and vital. The representative of denominations, such as the Catholic and Episcopalian and for the most part, the Baptist and Disciple, cannot consistently advocate union if they make no provision for receiving Christian people into their local fellowship, without first baptizing them. In too great a degree these denominations undo a person's previous religious status and then initiate him into their own cult as if he had been a pagan or an infidel or an untaught child.

What is needed today to promote the cause of union is not so much mass meetings where churchmen make orations and indulge in the sentiments of union; or religious journals devoted to the theological problems and to fine theories about it, but there is needed a greater range of sincere experiment by local pastors and congregations.

The fulfilment of the Savior's prayer for the union of his followers is not chiefly and intellectual achievement. It is rather a matter of genuine, human hospitality and fraternity. We need to put into the foreground the spirit of sympathy and brotherhood. We must realize that the religion of Jesus is not primarily an institutional or a theological system. It calls for a response to the human craving for friendship and for intimate comradeship in the pursuit of lofty ideals. Jesus himself passed lightly over many of the official elements of the religion of his people. He made the Sabbath, the temple, the priesthood, the altar and ritual of his ancestral faith subservient and secondary to the direct, natural relationships of human souls to each other and to God. This is not an easy plan of compromise. It requires the highest kind of loyalty and courage.

"BOUND TO DO THE BEST WE CAN."

We cannot be consistent followers of his spirit and example today unless we, too, possess that same supreme purpose to put human nature above the law and the Sabbath, to venture some social innovations as he did in the interest of the kingdom of love. We need not wait for perfect plans or utopian schemes. We are bound to do the best we can to meet the needs which now confront us. In order to be loyal to the spirit of scripture, we may have to ignore its letter. In fulfilling the dreams of our fathers we may have to abandon some doctrines and practices which were dear to them. But we Protestants, and especially we Disciples, cannot be loyal to our traditions, unless we, too, like those before us, have the will to follow the truth as we see it, even when it leads us into new and untried paths. Of this we may ever be assured, that our efforts and our experiments cannot wholly fail if they are sincerely and intelligently devoted to the Christ-like task of bringing into our human world in larger measure the divine kingdom of faith and hope and love.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Boy Scout Organization Splits.

The Boy Scouts are not specifically a religious organization, but they operate in connection with a great many Sunday-schools. The Christian public will be interested therefore in a reported split in the organization. The chief Scout, Ernest Thompson Seton, has resigned and formed the Woodcraft League. He charges that the Scout organization was emphasizing military features to the neglect of those features borrowed from woodcraft. Officers of the Scout movement feel that he timed his resignation to affect seriously a campaign for funds the organization was to launch soon. Mr. Seton is well known through his controversy with Mr. Roosevelt over "nature-faking."

Birthday of Phillips Brooks Remembered.

The great preacher and bishop, Phillips Brooks, is still remembered in Boston, and on December 13 there was a service in honor of the anniversary of his birth at the Cathedral church of St. Paul. The dean was in charge of the service, which was at noon, and among the hymns used was "O God, Our Help in Ages Past," which was sung by the multitude gathered in Copley Square, outside Trinity church, at the funeral of the great bishop. The preacher of the commemorative sermon on December 13 was the Rev. W. Dewees Roberts, rector of St. John's church, East Boston. He gave a brief review of Bishop Brooks' life and told many anecdotes illustrative of his great love for mankind.

The Cost of the War.

The cost of the great world war in human life is brought vividly to the attention of the Christian public by the announcement of the sorrow of some of the great British church leaders. Principal Alexander Whyte of Edinburgh, Principal George Adam Smith and Prof. James Stalker have each recently lost a son in the war. These losses and many more like them will be felt by civilization for centuries.

Dr. MacArthur in New Haven.

Dr. R. S. MacArthur is a foremost Baptist and has the position of president of the Baptist World Alliance. He does not hold a regular pastorate at this time but for the past two months has been supplying the pulpit of Calvary Baptist church in New Haven. A unique service closed his ministry there. All the Scottish societies of the city attended the worship, dressed in Highland costume in many cases, and a company of pipers led them to the church.

Theological Tension Among Episcopalians.

The tension among those of the Protestant Episcopal fellowship is largely over the doctrine of the church. The pronounced pro-Catholic views of Dr. Manning of Trinity church, New York, have been recently noted. There are views on the other side quite as pronounced. We have, for example, the utterance of Dr. Karl Reiland of St. George's parish in New York, in which he says: "St. George's Church has stood for a hundred years for evangelical Protestant Christianity, and it has a peculiar right to protest against this ominous and Romanizing tendency in the church. The laity should be warned that there is a Catholic party, and that it is striving to devitalize the true Protestant character of the Episcopal Church. We should use every means in our power to organize and prevent any further misrepresentation. We should insist that if our Catholic friends cannot stand our Protestant atmosphere they should move; we should make use of every opportunity to unite with other Protestant communions in the interests of spiritual common sense, efficiency and economy at home and in the mission fields."

Insurgent Priest to Be Suspended.

The case of Rev. George Chalmers Richmond of Pittsburgh has been widely noted. There was local dissension in the church which was followed by an effort of the bishop to remove the priest from his parish. It is not possible for an Episcopalian bishop to remove a priest except for reason, hence the matter has come to trial. The trial board has recommended the suspension of the Rev. Mr. Richmond for one year. This sentence is yet subject to an appeal to a higher ecclesiastical court. The priest was charged with insubordination to his bishop.

Baptist Hymn Writer Dies.

The author of "Safe in the Arms of Jesus" died recently. He was Dr. William Howard Doane, and he passed away at the home of his daughter in South Orange, N. J. The Sunday following his death, it was the plan to have every Baptist church in the country sing the hymn that made him famous. He left substantial bequests to certain Baptist missionary societies at his death.

Opposed to Preparedness.

No subject seems to divide church gatherings these days more surely than a discussion of the "preparedness" propaganda going on throughout the country. One religious gathering seems to have been held, however, in which there was unanimity on this subject. The Church Peace Union held an all-day annual meeting in Bishop Greer's residence on Tuesday, December 14. This society was founded in February, 1914, by Andrew Carnegie. The Bishop of New York is president, and all the other officers were reelected. Dr. Frederick Lynch, the secretary, announced in the daily press of December 17, that the union was unqualifiedly opposed to the present-day demand for increased armaments for the United States, and that the trustees had decided that an appeal be made to the people to withstand such a demand.

Prepare For World Conference on Unity

The commission that is making ready for a World Conference on Faith and Order is in session at Garden City, N. Y. The commission is presided over by Bishop Anderson, of Chicago. More than fifty leading men from twenty different denominations are in attendance. In his opening address, Bishop Anderson said:

"We look out upon the church today and instead of an interior indestructible and united we find it externally rent and torn asunder, largely disintegrated and incapable of molding the national conscience. Isolation, separation and disintegration are dispelling the power of the church of Jesus Christ. A bewildered world and a divided church are crying, 'How long, oh, Lord how long, until peace be established between nations and a unity made among the churches!' In the face of the religious conditions today is there any Christian who will care or dare to stand aloof from a movement so thoroughly filled with mutual trust and conscience and so charged with loyalty to Jesus Christ and his church?"

Perhaps the most surprising feature of the meetings was a report from the Vatican that the World Conference will be looked upon in a friendly spirit by the Pope and that prayers will be said for its success.

Secretary Gardiner reported a correspondence with Cardinal Gasparri in which the latter spoke of the attitude of the Pope in these terms:

"I need not here describe the affection with which I saw the august pontiff kindled for you. For you well know that the plans of the Roman pontiffs, their cares and their labors, have always been specially directed to the end that the sole and unique church which Jesus Christ ordained and sanctified with his divine blood should be most zealously guarded and maintained, whole, pure and ever abounding in love, and that it should both let its light shine and open its door for all who rejoice in the name of man and who desire to gain holiness upon earth and eternal happiness in Heaven.

"The august pontiff therefore was pleased with your project of examining in a sincere spirit and without prejudice the essential form of the church, 'or the inner essence of the church,' and he earnestly hopes that under the spell of its native beauty you may settle all disputes and work with prosperous issue to the end that the mystical body of Christ be no longer suffered to be rent and torn, but that by harmony and cooperation of men's minds, and likewise by concord of their wills, unity of faith and communion may at last prevail throughout the world of men."

It was reported that two of the leading magazines of the Russian Church have published articles by eminent theologians urging the co-operation of the Russian Church. Similar articles had been published before the war by Protestant reviews in Germany, Finland, Hungary, Norway and Sweden. The editors of Greek, Old Catholic and Waldensian magazines have requested articles, which have been sent, explaining the purpose and method of the Conference, and La Ciencia Tomista (Dominican) of Spain has published a letter from the Secretary about the movement and has reviewed at some length the publications and commended the purpose of the Conference, though adhering to the Roman Catholic position.

Lesson for January 30.

THE LAME MAN LEAPING.

Golden Text: Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but what I have, that give I thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, walk. Acts 3:6.

Lesson, Acts 3: verses 1-12 printed.

Memorize verses 9, 10.

(1) Now Peter and John were going up into the temple at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour. (2) And a certain man that was lame from his mother's womb was carried, whom they laid daily at the door of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entered into the temple; (3) who seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple, asked to receive an alms. (4) And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him, with John, said, Look on us. (5) And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive something from them. (6) But Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but what I have, that give I thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, walk. (7) And he took him by the right hand, and raised him up: and immediately his feet and his ankle-bones received strength. (8) And leaping up, he stood, and began to walk: and he entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God. (9) And all the people saw him walking and praising God. (10) and they took knowledge of him, that it was he that sat for alms at the beautiful gate of the temple; and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him.

(11) And as he held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch that is called Solomon's, greatly wondering. (12) And when Peter saw it, he answered unto the people, Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this man? or why fasten ye your eyes on us, as though by our own power or godliness we had made him to walk?

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. Peter and John. Faithful companions of our Lord. John is mentioned but twice in the book of Acts.—The ninth hour. Three p. m. Nine in the morning and three p. m. were the hours fixed by law for prayer. Ex. 29:41. Some of the devout Jews kept also the noon hour.

2. A certain man. A well known character at the temple. He was more than forty years old, see Acts 4:22.—Was carried. Was being carried as Peter and John were going into the temple.—Whom they laid daily at the door into the temple. Where the throngs of benevolent worshipers frequented the temple. He was a familiar figure in their city life.—The door of the temple which is called beautiful. The exact location of this gate is not definitely known. —Ask alms. A gift of charity.

3. Peter and John. Often mentioned together, and here regarded as ordinary worshipers, entering the temple at the hour of prayer.

4. Fastening his eyes. The word denotes fixed attention.—Look on us. He did not expect a gift from every one, hence Peter demanded attention, for his gift was not of the usual sort.

5. He gave heed. Looked eagerly, hopefully upon them. Peter's purpose in verse four is here realized.

6. Silver and gold have I none. Silver and gold money.—In the name of Jesus of Nazareth. In the power of God through Jesus Christ. Compare Mark 5:41; Luke 7:14.—Walk. His feet became strong, and he walked as Peter directed.

7. He took. The original meaning of the verb is to press or squeeze and hence means taking hold with a firm grasp.—Immediately. A favorite word with Luke, used many times in the gospel.—His feet and his ankle-bones. These are technical words Luke uses and refer to distinct parts of the foot.

8. Leaping up. Strictly, leaping forth. It is also a medical term.—Began walking. Testing his newly acquired power.—Praising God. He recognized God, and not Peter as the source of the cure. He may have been truly devout.

9. All the people saw him. The man was a common sight and hence known by many. He would attract much attention in the temple.

10. They took knowledge of him. They recognized him as the one who for many years had been asking alms of them.—Wonder and amazement. Two words; the one refers to the domain of feeling while the other that of intellect.

11. He held Peter and John. The impulse of excited gratitude; he did not want to be separated from his benefactors.—All the people. The worshipers.—Porch that is called Solomon's.—It ran along the eastern wall of the temple. It was erected on the ground which Solomon had filled in and from this it probably received its name.

12. It. The wonderment of the people who gathered about him.—Answered. He began to speak to the astonished people who wished for an explanation.—As though by our own power. Peter disclaimed any power apart from God in the healing of the man.

The Priceless Gifts

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

The apostles were poor men, and yet they made many rich. Peter gave the lame man two things, each of which was worth more than silver and gold. He gave him the power to earn his own living, and brought him to the living Savior who is able to heal both body and spirit. He placed within his reach a fruit tree and not simply a basket of fruit. He helped the lame man to help himself.

Wayside Opportunities.

The opportunity for service came to Peter and John by the wayside, while they were on the way to another duty. Some of our best privileges and most useful hours come to us in this way, as the straw in which the artist Thorwaldsen's statues were packed brought over from Rome the seeds of new flowers to adorn the gardens of Copenhagen. Moses and David were called from keeping sheep to making nations. We are to be ever on the lookout for unexpected opportunities for service.

Peter said, "Such as I have give I thee." This is all he could give. We can give to another just what we really possess. If a man has money he can give money. If he has truth he can pass it on. If we have strength we can use it for others. The man who attempts to lift others above his own level has undertaken the impossible. It is therefore sound pedagogy that the most important element in teaching and preaching is the man behind them. A cold class cannot warm the indifferent member to active service.

The Best Gifts in Common Life.

The priceless gifts are found in the common experiences of life. Turgenieff was asked for a gift by a beggar. He searched his pockets, then said to the beggar, "I am sorry, my brother, I have nothing for thee." But joy came into the beggar's face. "That is enough," he said, "You have given me more than money, for you have called me brother." The gifts whose value can not be estimated in dollars and cents are the ones the world could not get along without. "Lincoln has nothing but plenty of friends," they said when he was nominated for the presidency. Smiles, sympathy, encouragement and love are the really great gifts of life.

One smile can glorify a day,
  One word new hope impart.
The least Disciple need not say
There are no alms to give away,
  If love be in the heart.

Judas stood among the priceless things that day in Simon's house, and the plea for them was hushed in his soul. Only a shallow and unspiritual judgment will think less of him for knowing the selling-price of alabaster and nard. His sin lay in that he had lost the power to see in these things the higher values. "He had eyes to see but saw not." He had heard Jesus say that Solomon in his state robes was not so well dressed as a wild flower, and that the widow's half-farthing was worth more than the jewels of the rich, and that a cup of cold water was worthy of a heavenly reward, yet he had not learned that there were things too beautiful to be sold. All the best things are given away. No man was ever rich enough to buy a poem If it is his he must have it as the priceless gift of God to the soul. Neither can you buy happiness, a home, or a good conscience.

The Medical Missionary.

The healing of the lame man is being performed by the medical missionary of today. It is true that the missionary does not heal instantaneously, but the slow process of the scientific method has supplanted the swiftness of such a cure as our lesson narrates. The medical missionary performs many gradual cures that seem no less than miracles to the people. Some missionary in Persia has said, "Medicine has been the magic key which has opened every door of fanaticism, bigotry and opposition." "They have seen the blind led into our hospitals and go out seeing. They have seen the lame carried in and go out walking." These modern miracles have led the people to have confidence in the missionaries who unselfishly risk their life for men and women in all lands. What is done in the fields far from home is being done over and over again in the home land. We may not be able to do the work, but we may HELP do it.

"Social Service."

The church of our day and many of the larger and better Bible-schools are engaging in "social service." There is no doubt in the minds of men and women who have made a study of the matter that in the past this form of our duty to the "other fellow" has been neglected. But at the same time we must not forget that Jesus has been calling for laborers in that field of service since he led the way while on earth. Through the spirit he has been the inspiration of this kind of work in all ages since that time. It is Jesus Christ who has fired men's hearts with the emotions of sympathy, pity and love, which have sent them forth to all forms of social service. The story of every refuge, asylum, home, and helpful institution would find a place in the complete biography of our Lord.

Disciples Table Talk

A New Honor for W. E. M. Hackleman.

For many years W. E. M. Hackleman has been known among the churches as an able leader of song. His face is familiar to convention goers over the country. Nearly three hundred conventions have enjoyed his leadership. He has made four transcontinental tours with groups of leaders in the interest of church work. For several years also Mr. Hackleman has been connected with the management of Bethany Assembly, which for over thirty years has served as a Mecca of Indiana Disciples and of Disciples from many other states. At the recent thirty-third meeting of the Board of Directors of the Assembly, Mr. Hackleman was unanimously elected to the presidency. This honor follows eight years of efficient service by Mr. Hackleman as secretary of the Assembly. Preparations are now being made for "1916, Bethany's Greatest Year." The Schools of Methods and Efficiency will be conducted by experts, and many new features will be added. An interesting feature of the 1916 meeting will be the "Home-coming."

I. J. Spencer Closes Twenty-First Year at Central Church, Lexington.

Deserved tribute for a service extending through twenty-one years as pastor of Central church, Lexington, Ky., was paid on Jan. 2 to I. J. Spencer by members of his congregation. Resolutions complimenting Mr. Spencer for his service, not only to the local congregation, but to the Disciples of Christ as a whole, were passed by a unanimous vote. The resolutions commending Mr. Spencer upon his long and successful service were introduced by Prof. W. C. Bower, and were highly complimentary to the ability and achivements of the Lexington pastor. During the present ministry this historic church has grown to be one of the outstanding churches among the Disciples. Its membership has increased since 1895, when the present minister began, from a little over 800 to more than 1,700. The funds gathered and disbursed for local, benevolent and missionary purposes have increased three-fold. Within the past year the spacious auditorium has been remodeled and rededicated and there has been completed and dedicated, with provision for all indebtedness, a splendid modern educational building, making the present material equipment one of the most commodious, modern and beautiful in the brotherhood. In addition to the demands made upon his time and strength by the pastorate of a large city church, Mr. Spencer found time to superintend the Sunday-school for seventeen years, besides teaching for a time two large classes. Throughout his ministry he has placed much emphasis upon the educational function of the church and many of his early ideas anticipated modern tendencies in religious education. Evangelistic activity also has characterized the leadership of Central church through these years. More than 2,000 persons have been added to the church as a result of his labors, and during his entire ministry of forty years between 7,000 and 8,000 members have been added to the churches which he has served. Few Sundays pass in Central church without additions to its membership. Mr. Spencer has always taken a deep interest in the affairs of the community, and has had an active part in the movements looking toward civic betterment. For many years he has been an outstanding figure in the co-operative work of the Disciples of Christ, serving as a member of the executive committee of the Foreign Missionary Society, a Curator of Transylvania College, a director of the Christian Board of Publication, a trustee of the Board of Ministerial Relief, and a member of the Commission on Christtian Unity. His voice has been frequently heard in our national conventions and his pen has made substantial contributions to the periodical literature of the Restoration Movement. All these significant facts were emphasized in the resolutions offered by Professor Bower. Especially to be noted is the fact that Mrs. Spencer receives a large share of praise for her abundant service in Lexington and in wider fields.

George H. Combs 23 Years in Kansas City Pulpit.

George H. Combs, pastor at Independence Blvd., church, Kansas City, Mo., has recently closed a period of twenty-three years of service in that field. The Kansas City Journal takes occasion to say some good things concerning Mr. Combs at this time of celebration: "Occasions often arise,"

Rev. George H. Combs, who has had a remarkable career as a leader in Kansas City Discipledom.

writes the Journal editor, "which make especially opportune the paying to a man while he is still alive a tribute of the kind too often withheld until he has passed away. Rev. Dr. George H. Combs is one of the livest ministers of the gospel in this community, and therefore this small testimony to his worth as clergyman, as a man and as a citizen partakes of the character of an 'obituary' only in so far as it is called forth by the celebration of twenty-three years of effective work in a variety of capacities in this community. This tribute voices the sentiments not only of the congregation of the Independence Blvd. Christian church, but of his ministerial brethren of all denominations, and of the people of Kansas City as a whole. It is particularly fitting that the completion of this long term of service, which is not quite so dramatic as the psychological 'silver jubilee' but is still far out of the ordinary, should be observed, as it will be next Sunday morning and next Tuesday evening, by the church to which Dr. Combs and his gifted wife have given these long years of devotion. Dr. Combs is more than a profound and scholarly thinker. He is a man of positive force in the community and has always been identified with forward movements of the city. If felicitations may be extended to him, they may be extended in even larger measure to the congregation and to the community in whose effective service he has grown gray."

Terre Haute Pastor Will Organize Bible-schools in Community.

J. Boyd Jones, pastor at Central church, Terre Haute, Ind., is planning to extend the influence of this great church in the spring by organizing Bible-schools throughout the county. These will be cared for by young men whom Mr. Jones is training in Christian work at Central. Some of these are students in the State Normal, others are young men brought by Mr. Jones from the church at Anderson, Ind., where the training of Christian workers was carried on with remarkable success in the great church there. It is hoped through these Bible-schools organized in rural districts to establish after a while substantial churches, ministered to by the young men who are giving their time and talents to the early organizations.

Leavening Unchurched Oklahoma.

It is said that eighty-two per cent of the population of the state of Oklahoma is unchurched. That there is here a rich field for the development of Disciple churches is noted with enthusiasm by the state secretary, E. V. Spicer, and his reports of numerous evangelistic meetings usually tell of large results in conversions. W. A. Merrill sees a fine opportunity to Christianize this great state from the state schools as centers, and is giving his best effort to his work at Edmond, which is a Normal school town. During the past year 95 persons were added to the congregation at Edmond through Mr. Merrill's work, most of them coming at regular services. Under great handicaps, financially and as to buildings, the work at Edmond is going forward fruitfully under Mr. Merrill's ministry.

National Secretaries Honored by Cincinnati Church.

President F. W. Burnham, of the American Society, and Secretary A. E. Cory, of the Men and Millions Movement, were elected elders of Central Christian church, Cincinnati, at its annual meeting held on Jan. 5. During the past year there has been a net gain of 56 in the membership of this church, and $8,000 has been raised for all purposes. C. L. Waite is entering upon his fifth year as pastor at Central.

Ohio Gains in Disciple Ministers.

It is not everywhere known that Ohio Discipledom has as an integral part of its work an Advisory Committee on Pulpit Supply. I. J. Cahill, State Secretary, calls attention to the fact that through this helpful service the number of Disciple pastors in Ohio has been increased in the last five years from 262 to 338. Mr Cahill writes that if all states should give attention to supplying pulpits for worthy preachers, young men of talent would not hesitate to embark upon the ofttimes uncertain sea of the ministry. The efficiency of the Ohio state work is seen also in the fact reported by Mr. Cahill that 95 churches of the state are taking the Every Member Canvass for missions and local expenses this year.

Memphis Pastor Inaugurates Employment Bureau.

A. R. Adams, pastor of the Decatur street church, Memphis, Tenn., has inaugurated a new plan which seems to be proving popular. Mr. Adams believes that it is the duty of the church to minister to the bodies as well as to the souls of men, by aiding them in securing employment and advising them in difficult matters. He believes that the church should work seven days in the week, instead of one in seven. In carrying out this idea he has established an "Information Bureau," and spends fifteen minutes every Sunday evening answering questions and giving advice.

Wabash Ave., Kansas City, Mo., Rejoices Over 1915 Achievements.

L. J. Marshall received 78 into the Wabash Ave. church, Kansas City, Mo., during 1915. This congregation enters the new year with all current bills paid, all missionary offerings taken, and a sum paid on its building debt.

Beaver Falls, Pa., Builds Larger for Bible School.

The best sign of a growing church is a developing Bible-school. C. M. Smail is essentially a Bible-school promoter. His great school at Beaver Falls, Pa., has reached an enrollment of 563, and some of the classes have grown to such numbers that new rooms are being added to the plant for their occupancy. The young men's class has just opened up its new home, and another room for intermediate boys is under construction. A secret of Mr. Smail's strength is his evangelistic temperament. During the two years he has led in the Beaver Falls work 189 persons have been added to the church membership. About $5,000 has been raised for all purposes by the congregation. Mr. Smail has been invited to preach the mid-winter baccalaureate sermon at the local high school.

National Secretaries Banqueted at St. Louis.

During the Mid-winter meeting of the National Secretaries of the Disciples, at St. Louis, late in December, the Christian Board of Publication entertained a group of them at a luncheon. Among those present were: Grant K. Lewis, F. W. Burnham, and Robert Hopkins, representing the American Society; Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, of the C. W. B. M.; James H. Mohorter, National Benevolent Association; A. McLean, S. J. Corey, and Bert Wilson, representing the Foreign Society; George W. Muckley, of the Board of Church Extension; W. R. Warren, secretary Board of Ministerial Relief; Graham Frank, W. F. Richardson, Mrs. Griest, Mrs. Lura Thompson Porter, E. L. Day, W. C. McCurdy, C. M. Chilton, Edgar DeWitt Jones and S. H. Zendt, members executive committee of the General Convention; A. E. Cory and R. H. Miller, Men and Millions Movement; L. E. Sellers, Temperance Board; Claude E. Hill, Christian Endeavor Board; President Hill M. Bell, representing the DesMoines Committee; A. C. Smither, F. D. Kershner, and E. E. Elliott, of the Christian Board of Publication; and O. O. Kinney, of Chicago.

Church Grows from 150 to 800 Membership in Five Years.

The story of the development by Frank W. Mutchler and his forces of Grant Park church, Des Moines, from a membership of 150, five and a half years ago, to a present membership of over 800 is an unusual one. Each year has added about 125 to the membership of the congregation. The Bible-school has reached an enrollment of about 600. To house this rapidly developing work a splendid new building is now being erected. The first floor, which is incomplete, will when finished, seat a thousand persons. The structure is of white rock front brick and cement blocks. The church is located in a densely populated portion of the city, and has a tremendous opportunity for service because of that fact. Mr. Mutchler and his people have gained wide reputation for their care of the poor and sick of the community in which they are called to work. A recent meeting held by W. J. Minges and company resulted in the addition of 400 new members and the reconsecration for more active service of over 300 members of the congregation. A significant feature of Mr. Minges' work was the enlistment of forty workers as volunteers for the ministry or the mission field.

Columbus, Ind., Church as Good Samaritans.

Jackson Street church, Columbus, Ind., ministered to by William Hobson, gave a great dinner to the poor of the city on Christmas day. Over two hundred hungry persons enjoyed the dinner. Many plates were sent out to the sick and 300 children were provided with treats.

Enid, Okla., Holds Banners for Christian Endeavor Efficiency.

A. G. Smith, pastor at Enid, Okla., takes a good deal of pride in the fact that his Senior Christian Endeavor Society holds the efficiency banner of the state for the third consecutive year. His Intermediate organization holds the banner for increase in membership. The Senior Society has an enrollment of 112, the Intermediate 108 and the Junior 64. Over two hundred persons were added to the church membership during 1915.

Pleasantville, Ia., Pastor as Missionary.

The missionary spirit strongly pervades the work of Walter B. Zimmerman, pastor at Pleasantville, Ia., Beach is a new community a few miles out from the town, and Mr. Zimmerman has gone in with the Gospel message, with the result that from his first week of service over fifty persons were added to the Disciples' organization. A new home will be dedicated by the Beach congregation soon.

Champaign, Ill., Church Will Not Lose Pastor.

S. E. Fisher, pastor of University Place church, Champaign, Ill., stated at the close of the morning service, on December 26, that he had concluded to accede to the wishes of the church that he continue indefinitely in the relation of pastor. Three weeks ago the congregation held a meeting to act upon his request for release that he might accept a call to the pulpit of the Central church, of Des Moines, Ia. At that time many petitions from various sections of the church's activities, especially from the young people, were received, and it was voted unanimously not to release him if it could be avoided. Mr. Fisher said he thought Christmas was an opportune time to have all questions of uncertainty as to future relations cleared away.

Peoria, Ill., Pastor Criticises New Year Revels.

Characterizing the wide open celebration of the New Year in Peoria as a species of idolatry, Homer E. Sala of Central church, delivered a stinging remonstrance at the debauchery and drunkenness in his sermon on "Modern Idolatry." "In spite of the fact," said Dr. Sala, "that the Bible says we shall have no other gods, people today have too many of them—gods of wealth, style, fame, mind, ease, pleasure, sensation, chance, passion and booze. These gods can be summed up under the word 'self,' while our God, the true God, is 'others.' Peoria worshiped at the shrine of passion on New Year's eve. Revelry, debauchery, licentiousness and drunkenness was the indecent way thousand in this city started the new year. It is a great honor to have all the load of booze one can carry and be a church member, too. Yes, and some of them were drunk. Some pride themselves as being intelligent and then make a beer barrel of themselves or drown themselves in a wine vat. It must be a great honor to a city to vaunt itself in such drunken debauchery at the close of a year that has been drenched in blood. Daniel and the good people of Babylon were not compelled to witness any worse debauchery than went on in our city New Year's eve. The time has come when the church of God and decent Peoria must raise its voice against this iniquity."

W. F. Turner Sees His State "Go Dry"

Last night in company with two newspaper reporters and two policemen, I visited at 11 p. m. all the saloons of this city to see them in their death throes. For after three fierce battles in this county with the licensed liquor traffic in each of which we were beaten by a narrow margin we were rewarded at last by becoming a part of a great tidal wave of prohibition which has swept Washington, Oregon and Idaho into the "dry" column. So after fighting the accursed saloon traffic for twenty years I wanted to see it die with my own eyes. The saloons were dying with the old year. The crowds of men taking their last drinks in the familiar places were a great study. Young men, the "regular," and the old "soak," mingled together. Old "snags" of humanity, unshaven, dirty and unkempt talked of their common grief. Barkeepers smiled and seemed to anticipate the end with some degree of real delight.

At 12 o'clock one side of a block where saloons were thickest was lined with men, women and children watching for the answer to their prayers. When the midnight whistles blew and the bells rang in the new year policemen entered every saloon and told the "boys" it was time to "clear out," and out they swarmed singing, yelling and cheering. A big barkeeper came out of one of the largest saloons, waved goodbye to the "boys," went inside and turned the key in the door—I hope for ever. And as I stood there amidst the din, thinking of the doors of thousands of saloons closing that minute in seven states, a sure prophecy of a dry nation in the very near future, it seemed to me I had ample recompense for all the tears and heartaches and disappointments of a long ministry.

I wanted to shout and sing. I thought of the song of Miriam at the Red Sea when she looked back and saw Israel's enemies overthrown.

"I will sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously;
The horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea.
The Lord is my strength and song,
And he is become my salvation:
This is my God and I will praise him;
My father's God, and I will exalt him.
The Lord is a man of war:
The Lord is his name.
Pharaoh's chariots and his host hath he cast into the sea:
And his chosen captains are sunk in the Red Sea.
The deeps cover them:
They went into the depths like a stone,
They sank as lead in the mighty waters."

It indeed seems like a miracle to think of Seattle, Tacoma, Spokane and Portland, four of the great cities of America without a saloon, distillery or brewery. The "wets" cried in the campaign, "No great city was ever a dry city." But behold our own quartet of dry cities.

So on the first day of the new year I just wanted to send greeting to all the friends and workers in the east and tell you to push the battle. "By faith the walls of Jericho fell down." Keep marching 'round. You will have the victory by and by. And it is worth the battle!

W. F. Turner.

Automobile as Gift to Pastor.

P. H. Green, pastor of the church at Oakland Ia., was presented with a new automobile as a Christmas gift from the members of the church.

EDUCATION DAY, JANUARY 16, 1916

Call for Men! Call for Money!

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST

CHARLES E. UNDERWOOD, Treasurer 70 Layman Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.

A. J. Bush Honored by Texas Disciples.

On the evening of December 26, the Oak Cliff (Dallas) church observed the fortieth anniversary of the ministry of A. J. Bush in the state of Texas. When Mr. Bush landed at Indianola on Christmas Day, 1875, there were but five Disciple churches in the state that had regular preaching of any kind; there were only about a dozen preachers in the entire state, and the majority of them made their living as farmers, ranchmen, blacksmiths, lawyers and doctors and preached incidentally. There was no form of co-operation in the state at large and when in 1876, Mr. Bush came to Dallas to a state meeting, the entire time was spent in wrangling; those present refused to endorse any form of co-operation between the churches at large or between individual congregations. Mr. Bush went back to South Texas sick at heart and formed a co-operation in Lavaca county. When the Texas Disciples became convinced of the necessity of a real state missionary organization, Mr. Bush was called on to take charge of it and do the pioneering work. This he did and developed the work, in eight years, from nothing to what it later came to be, when Mr. Bush was employing twenty men and raising $25,000 a year. When the orphans' home at Dallas was to be built, Mr. Bush was called from a pastorate to do pioneer work again. When this work was completed he retired to a pastorate and was once more called out to raise money and build the Fowler Old People's Home, and this, too, was carried out successfully by him.

Grant W. Speer at New Philadelphia, O.

J. H. Coil, pastor at New Philadelphia, O., is enjoying the help of Grant W. Speer, of Toledo, in a series of January meetings. During the first week, however, Mr. Coil himself preached. Mr. Speer's topics for the present week are: "The Christian. How?" "A House of Prayer." "Salvation—Feeling, Knowledge or Faith?" "What Sin Does for a Man." "Sound Doctrine." "Mother and Christ." "The Pentecost of Calamity." "If Christ Should Talk to Me?" "Leaving Home."

A New Year's Event at Broadway Church, Los Angeles.

Twenty years ago, writes Pastor Charles F. Hutslar, B. F. Coulter preached the first New Year's sermon at Broadway church, Los Angeles, from the text, "Have Faith in God." Since that time, Mr. Hutslar reports, each first Lord's day in the year, a sermon has been preached in this pulpit from the same text. The fine success of Mr. Hutslar in this western field has been noted with great pleasure by his friends in the East, from which region he went forth two years ago.

Robert Sellers, Elwood, Ind., Called as Pastor for Twelfth Year.

By an unanimous vote Robert Sellers, of the Elwood Ind., church has been elected as pastor for his twelfth year. He is the oldest minister, in point of service, in the city and has been very successful in his work. A recent evangelistic meeting added several hundred members to this church.

Ft. Worth Pastor Conducts Three Bible Courses.

E. M. Waits, pastor at Magnolia Avenue church, Ft. Worth, is an aggressive promoter of the educational phase of church work. He has built up an excellent Bible-school of 663 enrollment, 442 new scholars having been added during the year. But his efforts go beyond the walls of his church school. During the past year Mr. Waits has conducted a New Testament course for the local Young Women's Christian Association, and one on Literature of the Bible for the "Browning Bible Class." Mr. Waits' record for 1915 included: 110 sermons, 30 special addresses, 250 pastoral calls. Over 100 persons have been received into the church. State missions, State Bible-school work and

Rev. E. M. Waits, who is a leader in Community Bible Study in Ft. Worth, Tex.

Texas Christian University have received largely of Mr. Waits' services. The church's proposed missionary budget for 1916 provides for an expenditure of $1,330.

The Year's Achievements at Lincoln Neb., First.

The past year has marked an epoch in the history of First church, Lincoln, Neb. The removal of the last cent of indebtedness on the church property in itself was enough for one year's work, for an ordinary congregation, but the Lincoln people are not ordinary. The ladies' circles had the interior of the building beautifully decorated, new light fixtures installed and the choir loft lowered to make room for the pipe organ. Over three-fourths of the cost of the new organ has been pledged and much of it paid in. The final great step forward was the employment of an assistant to the pastor, H. H. Harmon, in the person of J. L. Kohler.

Those who live on the mountain have a longer day than those who live in the valley. Sometimes all we need to brighten our day is to rise a little higher.

Moline, Ill., Disciples to Have Church Home.

Tabernacle revival services of First church, Moline, Ill., have been well attended at all sessions. Several important matters were taken up at one session of the Sunday-school, which voted to start collecting a fund for the new church building. Plans were submitted and adopted whereby collections will begin at once. Members pledged $500 toward the new building as a beginning. Fifty-seven persons were added to the church membership during the recent revival services.

J. G. Slayter Appreciated at East Dallas, Texas.

At the annual membership banquet of the East Dallas, Tex., church, official action was taken by the members increasing the salary of the pastor, John G. Slayter, to $3,600, an addition of $600 to the salary he received during the past year. It was also voted to increase the budget of the church to $9,000 for 1916. The unusual increase in the pastor's salary was a mark of appreciation from the congregation for his services during the past year which have resulted in the unusual growth and development in all departments.

George L. Peters Grows Big Church.

George L. Peters, pastor of North Side church, Omaha, Neb., reports an 85 per cent increase in membership in the last nineteen months. An increase in salary was recently voted to Mr. Peters by the Omaha congregation.

Church Membership Increases 33 Per Cent in Year.

The annual meeting of North Tonawanda, N. Y., church, brought forward splendid reports from all departments. Every treasurer reported all bills paid out and a balance on hand. The total amount of money raised in all departments for the year was $5,500, and the total balance on hand is $184.28. The pastor's report showed a gain of 33 1-3 per cent in membership over last year. George H. Brown is pastor at North Tonawanda.

Toledo, O., Central, Has City's Largest Bible School.

It is a real achievement reported from Toledo, Central church, to which Grant W. Speer ministers. This church is said to have the largest school in the city, larger even than the Marion Lawrance school, of international fame. This school will soon have a modern plant, as a crowning achievement in the work of Mr. Speer during ten years' ministry.

A. M. Haggard Dedicates Another Church.

"Dedication Number 156," in the record book of A. M. Haggard, of Drake University is his service at Belinda, near Chariton, Ia. He was with this people over Sunday, Dec. 26, and not only covered the balance due upon bills, but raised enough to purchase seats and furnace, and do also other things not contracted for. Ezra McKim is the pastor at Belinda. Mr. Haggard reports that Mr. McKim was ordained at the close of the day to the ministry of the gospel which he has preached faithfully for about five years. The house at Belinda is a fine community center, having a good basement and ample room for the Sunday-school. Mr. McKim is now in a meeting which promises well.

Ministerial Relief Gains.

For the quarter ending Dec. 31, the Board of Ministerial Relief, of Indianapolis, reports a gain of $2,279.67, or 58 per cent over the corresponding period last year. The net gain in total receipts was $790.62, or over 14 per cent. Three ministers and three widows of ministers have just had their names added to the pension roll, which now shows 131 names.

Barry, Ill., Pastor Preaches Fourteen Sermons on the "Prodigal Son."

E. B. Quick, pastor at Barry, Ill., began on Jan. 2 a series of Sunday evening sermons, based upon the parable of the "Prodigal Son." The following are the themes discussed: "Man's Relation to God" —"A Certain Man Had Two Sons." "Providence"—"He Divided Unto Them His Living." "Sin"—"He Wasted His Substance." "Retribution"—"He Began to Be In Want." "Conviction"—"He Came to Himself." "Salvation"—"I Perish Here." "Faith"—"I Will Arise and Go to My Father." "Repentance" —"And He Arose and Came." "Atonement" —"While He Was Yet Afar Off, His Father Saw Him." "Confession"—"Father, I Have Sinned." "Forgiveness"—"Bring Forth Quickly the Best Robe." "Consecration"— "Make Me as One of Thy Hired Servants." "Acceptance"—"He Hath Received Him." "Heaven"—"They Began to Be Merry." A large, original illustration drawn by the pastor is used in connection with each of these sermons.

Brotherhood Work Succeeds in Kirksville, Mo.

As a result of a union meeting held at Kirksville, Mo., a few weeks ago, a Brotherhood of Christ has been organized among the men of the churches of the town. This band of men has opened rooms in a downtown section and in addition to the reading room feature holds a Sunday afternoon gospel meeting. It also carries on other activities such as will promote Christian living among men. As a result of this renewed interest in the work of the kingdom of God the Bible-schools of the town have been increased at least one-third in their attendance.

Indiana Church Promotes Physical Culture.

The church at Danville, Ind., C. O. Lee, pastor, is holding and directing the interest of the young people through gymnasium classes in which 140 of the young people are enrolled under a paid director. On a recent Sunday Stephen J. Corey delivered three addresses on his missionary journeys.

California Has New Bible-school Superintendent.

Geo. W. Brewster, Jr., who recently closed a great work at San Jose, Cal., has just accepted a call to become State Secretary and Superintendent of the Bible-school for Northern California. His knowledge of the field and of the Bible-school work and the needs of his state will mean much for the Bible-school development in Northern California.

Reception for Kansas City Pastor.

Budd Park church, Kansas City, Mo., held a reception for its new pastor, Hugh Lomax, on the evening of December 30. Addresses were made by Frank L. Bowen, city missionary to the Christian church, Dr. J. B. Crutcher, Bert Wilson and Mr. Lomax.

Ohio School to Enlarge for Bible-school Efficiency.

The church at Edon, O., has closed a good year's work. During the year 29 have been added to the membership of the church. Total moneys raised for all purposes, $1,829.75. Some badly needed repairs have been made on the church property. A furnace has been installed in the parsonage. At the annual meeting of the congregation held on New Year's eve, it was unanimously voted to build an addition to the church home. This will provide for better Bible-school facilities and also give suitable quarters for the social life of the church. The church begins the new year with all departments well organized. A meeting will be held during the month of February. The minister, S. B. Braden, will be assisted by Arthur Haley, of Canon City, Colo.

Kentucky Disciples Lose Pioneer Leader.

Secretary Corey reports the death of J. W. B. Smith, a warm friend of the Foreign Society and one of its honored life directors. His demise occurred at his home in Latonia, Ky., January 3. Mr. Smith had been a faithful and successful preacher of the gospel for about forty years. He preached in other states besides Kentucky, as Tennessee, California, Missouri, Indiana and Ohio. He was a man of scholarship—well-informed upon current questions, with deep interest in all that relates to men everywhere. Mr. Smith's interest in missions was deep and vital. The March offering and Children's Day were always observed wherever he preached. He led his congregation in direct personal gifts. Besides this leadership he gave several thousand dollars on the annuity plan. He deeded the Foreign Society a house and lot just a few days before his death. The funeral was conducted by H. C. Runyan, the pastor of the Latonia church, of which Mr. Smith was an elder. F. M. Rains, secretary of the Foreign Society, assisted in the funeral service, he having known him for some forty years. The burial was at Highland cemetery, not far from Covington, Ky. Mr. Smith was a veteran of the Civil War, a native of Kentucky, and was sixty-eight years of age. Of his immediate family, only his wife survives him.

G. H. Combs for Preparedness.

George H. Combs, pastor of Independence Blvd. church, Kansas City, Mo., urged the Kansas side Mercantile Club in a recent address to support the preparedness program and to do all in its power to see that this nation provided better defenses.

Hopkinsville, Ky., First Church Reports.

J. N. Jessup is making records at Hopkinsville, Ky., as at Little Rock, Ark., where he served as pastor before coming to Hopkinsville, succeeding Harry D. Smith there. During 1915, 201 persons were added to the church membership; the resident membership now being 907. Money raised by all departments for all purposes, $9,191.55; contributed to missions and benevolences, $2,926.14.

Foreign Mission Snapshots

In the recent coronation of the new Emperor of Japan, among other honors conferred, decorations were given to several prominent Christians, whose work was so conspicuously of a religious character that the honors are in effect a recognition of its value.

The feeling is general among the preachers and the leaders in the churches that the March offering should be observed, even though the Every Member Canvass has been made and the weekly system of giving has been adopted. In this way many are reached that would not otherwise be reached, and the regular givers will be stimulated to more punctual giving for many causes.

The Mission Year Book gives the total number of Protestant Christians in China as 356,000. The foreign missionaries number 5,186, and Chinese workers, 17,879.

"Politically, China's future is uncertain. It cannot be doubted that she has made real progress toward democracy, though it remains to be seen how far she will be able to adapt what she has learned to present conditions."—W. P. Hamlet.

Just one hundred years ago the first New Testament in Chinese was issued from a press in Canton. Last year the American Bible Society, and the British and Foreign Society circulated in China more than a quarter million copies of the Bible.

One of the most interesting features of the Endeavor Day exercise, "The Least of These," is the sketch entitled, "The Missionary Committee Meets." It is unique and is sure to please the young people. Orders for Endeavor Day supplies are coming in nicely, and without question the first Sunday in February will be an occasion long to be remembered by the societies observing the day in this manner. If your society has not ordered supplies, please do so at once. Box, 884, Cincinnati, O.

A few years ago China was a back number and enjoyed none of the improvements of modern civilization. Today there is an entirely new situation. She has a good telegraph system, extending to all important points in the land, operation by the central government; a modern postal system, which gives very good service. She has also now several thousand miles of railway, besides several thousands projected, which have been delayed only through lack of funds, owing to internal disturbances and the European war.

On the 1916 Sunday-school Lessons.

DR. J. H. JOWETT SAYS:
"Exceedingly well done. It must be of very great service to Sunday-school teachers."

MARION LAWRANCE SAYS:
"The best, most complete, most practical and most satisfactory volume on the Sunday-school lessons."

BISHOP JOHN H. VINCENT SAYS:
"Exceedingly wise in its adaptation to the variety of grades and extremely practical."

MARGARET SLATTERY SAYS:
"As an aid to the teacher in the preparation of her own lessons I know of nothing better."

DR. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN SAYS:
"Covers the whole year's work more admirably, in my judgment, than any other book I have seen. Could not be better."

Loveland, Colo., First Church in Vital Service.

Among the results of keeping a "White Christmas" at First church, Loveland, Colo., where J. E. Lynn ministers, ten persons were added to the church, in response to the appeal for gifts of self; twenty-six dollars was given in money and several barrels of useful things gathered together for the Christian Home at Denver. A few weeks ago the school gave fifty dollars to home misisons; this far exceeded the offering for that purpose in previous years. The Loveland church, on Sunday night, Jan. 2, held a New Year's celebration in honor of the going into effect of the state amendment that makes the state dry. Governor George Carlson was the principal speaker of the evening. The meeting was planned by the young men's Bible-class, of which the pastor is teacher.

Dr. Shepherd in Institute Work at Bloomington, Ill.

Robert P. Shepherd, former educational director of the Illinois State Sunday-school Association, is now in Bloomington, Ill., for a ten days' educational institute. Dr. Shepherd comes under the auspices of the educational department of First Christian church, but opportunity will be given teachers and religious workers of the various churches of Bloomington and Normal to take the course he offers. The institute will be composed of five distinct sections, as follows: 1. The Use of Scripture in Cultivating Personal Religion. 2. Parents and Teachers of Children Under Twelve. 3. Leaders, Parents and Teachers of Youths (12-20.) 4. Teachers and Officers (present and future) of Adult Church Work. 5. Popular Lecture Period. The institute is timed for Jan. 9-19.

Texas Bible-school Gives $400 for Benevolence at Christmas Season.

A feature of the Christmas celebration at Central church, Dallas, Texas, was the gathering of the offerings of the Bible-school classes for the aged and the orphans in the Fowler Home, which is located at Dallas. A class of young women pushed a truck piled high with provisions down the aisle to the front of the church. Another class of young women sent in with three of their number the weight of those three in sugar. A class of tots sent a load of hams down the aisle. Another class, with the janitor in white cap and white apron at their head, marched down the aisle laden with cream of wheat. A class of young men brought the price of a wire fence for a chicken lot needed at the home, and the Junior Boys' Department donated 500 pounds of chicken feed. Another class of young men gave 200 pounds of flour. A class of young women had constructed a rainbow across one of the great windows of the place and at its foot had hidden a pot of gold coin, the clue to which was a cord which wound about the room in a most perplexing way. It fell to the president of the Board of Managers of the Fowler Home to follow the clue to its golden end, which he did amid the laughter of those present. Another class brought bed clothing and still other classes made gifts equally valuable. The cash offerings made were as follows: By the officers of the school, $18, by a young women's class $30, by a class of older women $115, and by a class of men $75. The total of gifts of money and provisions was a little more than $400.

R. W. Stevenson to Enter Evangelistic Field.

R. W. Stevenson, recently of Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, is planning to hold evangelistic meetings after March 1. Mr. Stevenson has held pastorates with churches in New York state, also in Ontario, as Provincial evangelist for a number of years, and was in the pastoral work in the city of Toronto for five years. References can be had by writing President A. McLean, of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, also the American Missionary Society. His address after March 1 will be 1535 Dufferin St., Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Kinston, N. C., Dedicates Building Free From Debt.

Percy G. Cross is given much of the credit for the successful dedication of the new building at Kinston, N. C., where Bernard P. Smith ministers. About $30,000 was needed to cover the indebtedness, but at three services a total of $36,000 was raised in cash and pledges. The presence of Preston Bell Hall, former pastor, added to the joy of the occasion. Mr. Cross preached an unusual sermon on the theme, "The Master's Cup."

"White Gifts" at Hillman Street, Youngstown.

Reports coming from many churches of Christmas achievements indicate that the giving of "self" to Christ has been emphasized generally. At Hillman Street, Youngstown, where Walter S. Goode ministers, eighteen persons made the good confession. The Youngstown church is one of the kind that enjoys a continual revival; during the past three months thirty-one accessions to the membership of the church are reported. At the Christmas gathering about $30 in cash and an abundance of clothing and food were collected for a children's home of Youngstown.

Jefferson City, Mo., Church Makes Canvass.

A. R. Liverett, pastor at Jefferson City, Mo., writes that, on January 2 this church put on the Every Member Canvass with results that were most gratifying. There was an increase of 25 per cent to 40 per cent in pledges for local expenses and missions over any previous record. Seventy canvassers were sent out at 2 o'clock and by 5 they had all returned. Mr. Liverett reports that the uplift given to the church in spiritual and social fellowship made the effort worth while if no pledges had been secured.

Central Church, Ft. Worth, Plans to Build.

W. M. Davis, of Central church, Ft. Worth, Tex., has been reelected as pastor for another year. This church concludes with the year 1915 one of the most prosperous periods in its history. The services of Mr. Davis, who had been serving the church in Austin, were secured by the Fort Worth church last January. His labor has been successful, the membership being increased from 300 to 370. Four evangelistic meetings have been promoted during the year, one in the mission chapel and three in a tent in different parts of the city. At the last business meeting funds were made available with which to eliminate all present indebtedness. A building fund has been started, and the church intends in the near future to build additional rooms in which to maintain more efficiently the Sunday-school work.

A New Idea in Pastoral Work.

New Mexico is considered to be a rather pioneer field, but that the church life there is progressive in tendency is evidenced by the fact that the churches are not afraid to undertake new plans of promotion. From Roswell, N. M., comes the report that Frank Talmage, former pastor of the Disciples church, has been elected by all the city's churches as City Pastor. His duties are to care for the union work of the churches and looking after the needy and unfortunate of the city. The present leader in the Disciples' church is A. O. Kuhn.

Y. M. C. A. Helps Church Rebuild.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Streator, Ill., volunteered to aid Central church congregation of Streator in raising funds for the rebuilding of the church which was gutted by flames some time ago. The effort was very successful, a total of $2,162.65 being raised. The teams waged a five hour campaign. The ladies of the Central Church of Christ gave a dinner for the workers. B. W. Tate, pastor at Central, is confident that it will be possible to entirely reconstruct the building.

A New Honor for H. H. Peters.

H. H. Peters, of Paris, Ill., was elected President of the Chamber of Commerce in that city at the annual meeting, Friday evening, January 7. Mr. Peters has been very active in all community affairs during his ministry of more than three years.

Akron, O., Church Founds New Work.

During the past year First church, Akron, O., L. N. D. Wells, minister, led in the establishment of North Hill church. For this purpose 158 members of First church were dismissed and a $20,000 brick building was erected and dedicated. The membership at North Hill has grown to almost three hundred, with a Bible-school of 360 in attendance. B. R. Johnson is the minister.

Four Years' Fruitage at Seattle, First.

Receipts for 1915 at Central church, Seattle, Wash., were $12,770. At the annual meeting, the pastor, J. E. Davis, reported that during the year he delivered 155 sermons and addresses, made 1,345 calls, conducted 30 funerals, performed 43 wedding ceremonies and added 128 members to the church. During the four years of his pastorate Mr. Davis has delivered 517 sermons and addresses, made 6,339 calls, conducted 106 funerals, performed 173 wedding ceremonies, added 537 members to the church roll and raised $43,000. He reports a total membership of 1,557, of which 863 are resident members and 694 non-resident members.

A Fine Year's Record at Huntington, Ind., Central.

Elmer Ward Cole and congregation are justly proud of their achievements during the year just closed. A total of $11,805.81 was raised for all purposes. This includes $5,088.78 current fund, and a parsonage fund of $1,716.12. Missions claimed $565.43. Mr. Cole has preached 130 sermons, delivered 71 addresses and made 14 after dinner speeches. He has made 720 calls. Seventy-five persons have been added to the membership. The Bible-school lacked but one of having an average attendance of 500.

Louisville Pastor Preaches on "Necessary Evils."

William N. Briney, pastor at Broadway church, Louisville, Ky., is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons on "Necessary Evils." The following is the list of themes treated: "Is Preparation for War Necessary to Guarantee Peace?" "Is the Social Evil Necessary?" "Is the Saloon Necessary to the Prosperity of a Community?" "Is It Necessary for a Young Man to Sow Wild Oats?" "Is a Divided Church Necessary?" "Is Deception Necessary to Business Success?"

For the Attention of Disciple Colleges.

R. H. Crossfield, president of Transylvania college, is desirous that all colleges of the church bear in mind the annual meeting of the Association of American Colleges, which is to be held in Chicago, Jan. 20-22. Most of the Disciple colleges are members of the association and Mr. Crossfield, of the Board of Education, urges all schools to send representatives.

Toronto Churches Co-operate.

The churches of Toronto, Ont., are divided into groups by the Ministerial Association and will observe the week of prayer. Eight churches are co-operating in this group, writes A. L. Cole, of Cecil Street church. Mr. Cole has been selected as one of the speakers.

"The Romance of Eureka."

College bulletins are too frequently dry reading, but it must be confessed that the December issue of the Eureka Bulletin is a most readable pamphlet. The chief feature is an extended article on "The Romance of Eureka." The story of the college is given, beginning with the year 1850. Eureka celebrities are pictured and praised in these pages. Among the faces adorning the bulletin are those of Frank Bowen, of Kansas City; Barton O. Aylesworth; Chas. S. Medbury; Joseph A. Serena; S. H. Goodnight; O. B. Clark; John R. Golden; F. W. Burnham; Ray Eldred; F. E. Hagin; A. E. Cory, and several other highly honored missionaries and pastors.

The "Rope Holding" Plan in Evangelism.

A problem that has often made impracticable the development of the work in small towns and rural districts is the matter of financing evangelistic effort in such communities. This problem is on the way to solution by C. L. Organ, an evangelist who has had some remarkable successes in revivals held in towns and villages. Mr. Organ's plan is called by him the "rope-holder plan." If there is a field where a limited number of Disciples are striving to keep things going against great obstacles and discouragements, he goes to stronger churches of the community and state, and asks them to "hold the ropes" while he and his company do what is possible for the further organization and strengthening of the more helpless church. Mr. Organ recently dedicated a new building at DeWitt, Ark., where a strong church had been developed by the Organ evangelists by the "rope-holding" plan. The new home is of the bungalow type.

Women as Church Builders in West Virginia.

The story of the organization of the little church in Bramwell, W. Va., reads like an extract from some modern "Acts of the Apostles." The women who performed miracles of church founding in the early "Acts" showed no more devotion than the women of Bramwell. Some time ago, two women came to the town from Virginia and finding no Disciples church home, determined to build one. They bought a lot and donated it to the work, adding to it $100 cash as a nucleus of a building fund. The report now comes that subscriptions to the amount of $1,500 have been secured, and that very soon a good building will be erected for "First Christian Church, Bramwell." This West Virginia town has about three thousand inhabitants, and the heroic work of these women and the few other Disciples now living in Bramwell has won the interest and approval of several influential citizens, and it is predicted that the meeting planned for the month following the completion of the building will bring many new recruits to the Bramwell work.

Milwaukee Pastor Addresses Y. M. C. A.

Robert L. Finch, new pastor of Park and Prospect church, Milwaukee, Wis., recently addressed the local Young Men's Christian Association on the subject, "Shifting Gears." Mr. Finch comes to Milwaukee from Marysville, Mo., succeeding Mark Wayne Williams, who accepted a call to Boston.

—One hundred fifty-two were added and the church and all its departments prospered at Broad St., Columbus, O., under the leadership of Geo. P. Rutledge last year.

—The men of all churches at Blue Springs, Mo., have formed a "Community Brotherhood" and at present are giving their united efforts to fighting the liquor evil.

—Red Bluff, Cal., congregation will celebrate its 35th anniversary Jan. 23. Shirley R. Shaw, the pastor, is preparing a special program.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Dr. Willett's Book Now Ready

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, Ph. D.

Vol. I Ready for Mailing at $1.00

A thrilling and luminous interpretation of the Old Testament prophets, setting forth the historical situation within which each prophet lived and toward which his message was directed, and reconstructing for the modern reader the biographical story of each one of the immortal preachers of righteousness in ancient Israel. These two volumes have a tremendous value for the time in which we live—a time of war and fear of war. Dr. Willett makes each prophet live anew. No Bible student can understand the full message of the Bible who does not have a vivid grasp of the messages of Israel's prophets. There is no writer or teacher in America or Europe who has come nearer weaving the messages of these ancient moral leaders into the warp and woof of his own soul than has Professor Willett. His treatment in these two volumes will be not only a standard among scholars but an inspiration to the rank and file of Christian people for years to come.

Getting the Most Out of the Preacher

IT IS NOT ONLY LEGITIMATE BUT VITALLY IMPORTANT FOR A CHURCH TO CONSIDER WELL HOW IT CAN GET THE BEST WORK OUT OF ITS PASTOR.

It may seem to some sensitive souls that this way of saying it is too secular, too commercial; that when a congregation begins to talk of getting the maximum of work out of its pastor it is degrading the pastoral relation to the "hired man" level, making him merely an employe and not a spiritual leader.

The danger of so conceiving the minister must not be ignored. There are churches that treat a minister as a mere hireling. He must do the church's work, and he must preach the church's doctrines.

But a church that treats its minister as a hireling gets a hireling's service. A preacher who does work mapped out for him, and preaches certain doctrines because they are set down as acceptable to the church is not a true preacher, not a prophet of God, but a time-server.

It cannot be too strongly emphasized that the pastoral relation is fundamentally a spiritual, not a commercial or contractual relation. But it is not on that account any less a practical relation. And it is important for its practical aspect to be squarely faced and thought through, both by the preacher and the congregation.

The thing of primary importance for the congregation, and especially its office-bearers, is to discern just what sort of work a pastor is intended to do.

It is poor economy for a church to pay a preacher to do what its office-bearers should do without pay—and could do much more effectively than the preacher.

Let a church board settle in its own mind that it wants its preacher to be a moral leader of the church and community, a creator of religious passion, an interpreter of God to the souls of men; and let this self-same board set to work consciously to provide the conditions within which its minister may do his best work and it will be astonishing how much more that church gets out of him than before.

For the truth of the matter is that a preacher is not just an individual: he is a situation.

Many a preacher is succeeding today because he is surrounded by church officers who know how to get the most out of him. Put him in another church and he might seem mediocre.

Contrariwise many a ten-talent man is doing the chores of his congregation while prophetic fire burns in his soul.

There are certain very practical and obvious things a church must do to stimulate its preacher to his highest efficiency.

It must pay him a comfortable living salary.

It must pay this salary promptly, every week or every month as he prefers.

It must provide leaders for the departments of the church.

These are elemental. They are not to be attended to just for the preacher's comfort, but for the church's economy. A church gains nothing by paying a minister $800 when he cannot live properly on less than $1,000—even though he is willing to accept it—or $3,000 when he cannot live properly on less than $5,000. In its own interest it should pay a comfortable salary.

And it should pay it promptly. The preacher holds business relations with the outside world—the grocer, the landlord, the bookseller. He makes purchases that must be paid for. He makes promises that fall due like any other body's promises.

The church that is behind with its pastor's salary not only embarrasses him but robs itself. It cannot get the most out of him. He cannot work with a free hand and heart. Time and wit that ought to be spent in their service he is compelled to spend in manipulating his affairs so as to make ends meet.

It is hard on the preacher; but it is harder on the church.

And no church in which the pastor is active head of its main departments is getting the full worth of him. It may be getting its money's worth, but he has something infinitely worth more to give them if they only knew how to get it out of him.

There are certain other things, less obvious, perhaps, that a church may do for its own sake as well as for the minister's sake.

It can express its appreciation of his work, its gratitude for his sermon, its hopefulness for the future of the church.

It can give him a reputation in the community by personal loyalty and praise that is worth far more than newspaper publicity.

It can pray for him in the closet and the prayer meeting. How sweet to his ears and encouraging to his heart is the petition, "God bless our pastor!"

It can give him a fair chance to study—remembering what a vast thing it is to prepare one hundred and four messages a year that will truly feed and hearten the souls of men and make the service of worship rich and satisfying.

Above everything else the church can strive earnestly to practice the great gospel he preaches, taking him seriously—not as a performer to be congratulated if he has done his "stunt" well, but as an earnest leader up the path of holiness. Let the church study the Book that he expounds, practice the presence of God in a deep and thoroughgoing prayer-life, and show forth in deeds of unself-regarding love the fruits of the faith he interprets, and they will marvel how much they are getting out of their pastor.

And when he falls down—he must not, but he will—and scolds, or sulks, or threatens to resign, or makes an imprudent statement in the pulpit, or takes an indiscreet step in his daily life—then it is the church's chance to be a pastor to its pastor.

What Will Cure War?

A Plea for the Christian Religion and for Its Practice in the Realms of Politics, Business and the Church.

BY H. D. C. MACLACHLAN.

I WISH to bring before you certain thoughts prompted by the fact that at this season almost the whole of the civilized world is in the midst of the most cruel and implacable war of all history. The gravity of the issue thus raised cannot be overstated. It is the issue of Christianity itself. With but two exceptions all of the ten nations engaged in this war are what we call Christian nations. For at least fifteen hundred years the gospel of the Nazarene has been preached among all. Cathedrals, churches and shrines dot the landscape of them all. Even at this hour prayer is arising from their altars seeking the aid of the God of battles for their respective armies—in the name of the Prince of Peace.

The Prince of Peace! What a mockery of words! Organized aggression of the most gigantic kind in the name of him who said: "Resist not evil." Nineteen hundred years have come and gone since he was born in Bethlehem—nineteen hundred years of at least nominal worship of his name; and yet a common murder in a little unfamiliar Eastern city has sufficed to precipitate four hundred million fellow-Christians into the most awful, fratricidal strife of all time. What is the meaning of it all? Is Christianity a failure? Has Christ died in vain?

WHAT OF CHRISTIAN CULTURE?

There is no irreverence in these questions which, I think, every thoughtful person is asking himself today. They are not the flippant sneers of the unbeliever who is glad to find Christianity at fault; but the sincere seeking after truth of those who feel as if they had been startled out of a dream of false security.

The foundations have been shaken. The planks of culture and civilization upon which we had seemed to be standing so securely, have all at once given way beneath our feet. The platitudes of "Christian culture," "enlightenment," "progress," "international concilation" have been shriveled in the flame of facts so obvious that we wonder we could ever have missed seeing them. The human nature which we had been glorifying as half-divine has suddenly dropped its mask, and lo! the devil and all his angels sit grinning through its eyes. The structure of society which had seemed so secure has broken up, and we are adrift on a sea of uncertainty with no pilot, no compass and scarce a star! The progress of which we had boasted has suddenly turned back on itself and we are living in the days of Genghis Khan and Attila the Hun.

But of all the platitudes that have broken down with their inner-sight there is none that has done so more completely than the program of the pacifists. Fate seemed to have kept its most sardonic laughter for them. Last summer representatives, lay and clerical, of all the Protestant churches were hastening to Constance for the purpose of holding a great international conference in the name of the Prince of Peace. The conference was to have opened on August 5. It was never opened. On the 4th Germany declared war against France. Deeds had once again elbowed theories aside. The will of the chancelleries had proved stronger than the will of the churches. Instead of the Te Deum all Europe was singing the "Marseillaise" and "Die Wacht am Rhein," and marching, marching, marching, to kill and to destroy.

WHAT OF THE PACIFISTS?

Now, I have great sympathy with the pacifists. Their ideal of universal peace I hold to as strenuously as they, and I believe it will one day be realized. But not as they dreamed. The world will not disarm—it cannot in respect of right and justice disarm—until it is Christian. And it is not Christian.

Underneath the thin veneer of Christian profession which we have been taking for the substance of Christian faith, it is still selfish, materialistic, barbarian at heart. The pacifists have not begun far enough back. They have thought that the world was ready for peace; and it is not ready. They had said: "Science is uniting the world—the professors of German, French and English universities are brethren in a common warfare against human ignorance, and the brute forces of nature;" and lo! the very discoveries of science are turned to the account of slaughter and the scholars of the nations are spitting venom at one another.

The pacifists had said: "The world is becoming too cultured for war;" and lo! in the name of culture Germany defies the world. They had said: "The commerce of the world is so internationally organized that no nation will venture to incur the economic ruin entailed by a great war." And yet there is more than a suspicion that commercial rivalry has had not a little to do with the outbreak of hostilities.

WARLIKE RELIGION.

But religion here, they said, is one sure unifying force. Can the people who worship the same God and Christ fly at each other's throats? Alas, yes!—and in the very name of that God and that Christ. Religion has proven no more peace-making than the rest. God is still a Prussian to the Prussians, a Slav to the Muscovites, an Englishman to the English.

In the days of Napoleonic wars some French prisoners were confined in Edinburgh Castle, and a good old Scotch woman, hearing them at their prayers, said: "Poor yammering bodies! who could understand them?" That is the spirit of European religion; in spite of all its phrases about unity Jehovah still goes to war against the Canaanites, and alas, the women and the children are still being slaughtered in his name!

I say the pacifists have not begun far enough back. They have reasoned as though the world were really Christian. But it is not Christian. The true origin of the war is to be sought in the fact that we—and I include the whole so-called Christian world in the indictment—have not been taking our Christianity seriously. Christianity at its lowest is doing the things Christ tells us not to do. If there is one thing Jesus taught more clearly than another, it was that force of any kind never accomplished any permanent good, never cured any evil in the world. We find that our whole modern civilization is based on the thesis that the strongest have the right to prevail. I am not speaking of war especially. War is only the ultimate logic of the principle on which our whole life—economic, industrial, political, national and international—is organized. Rightly speaking, we are in a state of war all the time. The cruelties of industrial warfare are known to every man who has his living to make in the world. The falsehoods and treacheries of political antagonisms are among the commonplaces of life. Nations are at war within their own borders, class with class, the "haves" with the "have nots," the "ins" with the "outs." Nations were at war with other nations long before this "war" broke out—at war on the high seas, at war in the chancelleries, at war in markets of the world!

DISARMAMENT? YES, IN INDUSTRIAL LIFE.

That is why I cannot agree with the pacifists when they say, "Disarm, disarm." They must disarm the individual before they can disarm the nations. They must teach people to live on the plane of love and mutual helpfulness in the ordinary business of life within the confines of each separate country before they can expect nations to do the same. They must denounce the lying spirit of the survival of the fittest in themselves and their neighbors before they can blame Germany, "the fittest," from invading France, the "unfit."

Mr. Carnegie has little right to denounce the war of nations when he made his own fortune by war. In the sight of God there is little difference between the sack of Louvain and the Homestead riots. The same anti-Christian principle is at work in both. The fittest survived in both. The women and children suffered in both.

The ministers of the peace conference had better turn in future from trying to convert the chancelleries of Europe to trying to convert their own church members. When they say "force is no argument," let them not forget that the man who is compelled to take what wages are offered him or see his wife and children starve has no freedom of contract, but has succumbed to the argument of force, just like little Belgium. When they say "might does not make right," let them have the courage to criticize the modern doctrine of "success," which is simply the glorification of the strongest under another name.

We cry out against Nietsche as the prophet of all evil, but Nietsche was only a little more logical than you and me. He dared to carry the doctrine of "survival" to its ultimate conclusion, while we make use of it so long as we need it in our private affairs and then shriek in horror when he tells us what it really means.

MUST GET BACK TO CHRIST.

This, then is the conclusion of the whole matter. We must get back to the Christianity of Christ. We must learn to believe the Sermon on the Mount.

The alternatives we have to choose between are the alternatives of force and love. We have not yet definitely chosen. We have been essaying the impossible task of serving God and Mammon. We have been singing hymns and writing books and building churches in praise of love and then clasping hands with force as the real true friend and helper and Saviour of our lives.

We have been calling Christ "Lord, Lord," and in the very same breath saying that the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount are "impossible."

Impossible! Is not that a sort of blasphemy? I have known of men persecuting their fellowman because he was not "sound," so they said, in the divinity of Christ, and then turn round and say: "Jesus did not mean what he said: 'If any man smite thee,' etc." A poor divinity surely that does not know his own mind!

AN OPTIMISTIC LOOK FORWARD.

Besides, has the world ever tried to live on the plan of Christ? Have we the right to say it is impossible until we have tried it? I think not. And one day, I predict, the world will try it, and then the wonder will be that we had ever tried anything else.

"Through centuries of sin and woe
Hath streamed the crimson flood,
While man, in concert with the foe,
Hath shed his brother's blood.
Now lift Thy banner, Prince of Peace,
And let the cruel war cry cease.

"In vain, mid clamors loud and rude,
Thy servant seeks repose,
Sees, day by day, the strife renewed,
And brethren turned to foes.
Then lift Thy banner, Prince of Peace,
Make wrong among Thy subjects cease.

"Still to the heaven the weak will pour
Their loud, unanswered cry:
Still wealth doth heap its secret store,
And want forgotten lie.
Lift high Thy banner, Prince of Peace,
Let hatred die and love increase.

"Thy gospel, Lord, is grace and love;
O send it all abroad,
Till every heart submissive prove,
And bless the reigning God.
Come, lift Thy banner, Prince of Peace,
And give the weary world release."

A College Training for Missionaries

BY R. A. DOAN

I WRITE not as an educator, but as an observer. During a year spent recently in visiting our mission stations and studying the problems in the mission fields in the Orient, I came to a few definite conclusions. I visited not only our own missions, but those of many other churches. If there was one thing upon which I felt a stronger conviction than upon all others, it was upon the necessity of thoroughly educated missionaries. I had no definite idea about this when I went to the field except to feel in a general way that we ought to send the best prepared young people that could be enlisted. But from the time we entered the Philippines until our journey closed in Japan, I had borne in upon my mind and heart the absolute necessity of sending the most capable educated people our country can produce.

In the Philippines our government is building up a great educational system among a people who are eagerly seeking knowledge and who for the first time in history are having an opportunity to learn. The government's program provides for no religious training. These people have received a distorted unhealthy conception of Christianity through the teaching of superstition and because of the fixed policy of their teachers to keep them in ignorance. This sudden opening up of opportunity for education is dangerous from a religious standpoint unless we provide talented messengers of the gospel who can present to these vigorous students the religion of Christ from the standpoint of a learned man.

OPPORTUNITIES IN CHINA FOR EDUCATED MEN.

In China the greatest opportunity ever presented to Christendom is before Christ's followers. This is because of the open mind which has suddenly possessed more than four hundred million people. The respected, honored class in China through the centuries has been her scholars. While her standard of education has been different than ours, I found myself frequently in the presence of some old Chinese scholar feeling as though I ought to lift my hat in appreciation. This nation, though we call it heathen, has respected its scholars above every class. The Chinaman possesses a keen mind. Since the revolution his superstitions are being cast away in a large measure and he is reaching out in an earnest way to explore the unknown and that which was forbidden until now. Unless we provide the keenest minds for our missionary work in China we will find in the near future great numbers of Chinese casting off the old religions with no substitute except doubt or unbelief. I am appalled when I think of our helplessness in the face of this great demand. I pray to God constantly that in some way we may be enabled to reach the hearts of young people everywhere who are preparing for life's work and bring them to see the need, within the next ten years of the finest, most cultured, most thoroughly educated scholars for China. And I wish they might be able to see that their talents could be used nowhere in the world to such advantage as on the foreign field.

THE NEED IN JAPAN.

When I come to write of Japan the overwhelming need of properly prepared teachers of Christ becomes the most insistent call from that semi-cultured land. Education is compulsory in Japan and there is less illiteracy there than in our own land. Probably no country in history has made more progress in the same space of time than Japan in the past twenty years; but she is adopting our civilization without our Christianity—or rather as much of it as she can without our Christianity. It is well known, of course, that in recent years Japan has rushed toward agnosticism and atheism, but today she is experiencing a wonderful revival of her old religions. She has seen she can never be a great nation without religion, and she naturally turns back to those religions with which she is most familiar. But this very attitude gives Christianity the best opportunity it has ever had in Japan. Just now it is easier to approach Japan with the religion of Christ than any time perhaps in twenty-five years, but it must be done by the trained, keen mind which can meet the scientific and philosophical thinking in which the Japanese mind has been indulging during these years of transition. No poorly prepared man can enter Japan today as a missionary and do a lasting work. But the man with an adequate preparation and a soul on fire can do a monumental work for the kingdom in Japan in the next few years.

COLLEGE TRAINING THE KEYNOTE.

I have not come to it hastily, but I have come irrevocably to the conclusion that the best educated and the finest trained people the institutions of America can turn out must be given to the non-Christian world or we must give up the hope of bringing the world to Christ. It is a challenge to every young Christian which must thrill him and which I trust will lead out a host within ten years, which shall give Christianity a prestige in the world which nothing can eradicate. College and university training must be the keynote for Christendom in this advance movement which is upon us at this very moment.

Gather Us In

Gather us in, thou Love that fillest all;
Gather our rival faiths within thy fold;
Rend each man's temple-veil, and bid it fall,
That we may know that thou hast been of old:
Gather us in.

Gather us in: we worship only thee;
In varied names we stretch a common hand;
In diverse forms a common soul we see;
In many ways we seek one promised land:
Gather us in.

Thine is the mystic life great India craves;
Thine is the Parsee's sin-destroying beam;
Thine is the Buddhist's rest from tossing waves;
Thine is the empire of vast China's dream:
Gather us in.

Thine is the Roman's strength without his pride;
Thine is the Greek's glad world without its graves;
Thine is Judea's law with love beside,
The truth that censures and the grace that saves:
Gather us in.

EVANGELISTIC NOMENCLATURE

A NEW YEAR'S "Mission" has just come to a close at Memorial Church, Chicago, conducted by Rev. Herbert Yeuell, the well-known Disciple evangelist. The use of this word "Mission," is, we think, its first appearance in the nomenclature of the Disciples.

With the development of a new type of evangelism there should probably go a new nomenclature, and it would seem that this word could be made to serve a useful purpose in our mode of speech. There is some objection to the words now used.

"Revival" carries etymological implications which a normal, flourishing church does not need to confess. The special meeting need not be a last resort of a dying church. It should be a perfectly natural function of a very live and growing church. And if the etymological significance of the word "Revival" be disregarded it still seems unsatisfactory because of its association with a certain type of neurotic or hypnotic meeting which thoughtful men now see to be unwholesome in its net effects.

"Evangelistic Meeting," like "Protracted Meeting," is a bit awkward, and neither seems to connote the full dignity of the undertaking.

A better, though still somewhat awkward title, is "Decision Meeting." It states the purpose of the enterprise with a clearness that no one can misunderstand. But possibly this is as much of a disadvantage as a virtue. It is not a title that shy lips can speak as easily as a more noncommittal and conventional word.

"Mission," while it has its faults, seems to come nearer filling the bill. Its disadvantages might seem to be that it has been among Protestants wholly associated with a modest and crude type of rescue work in the great cities. But this should not be a disadvantage. For the church on the boulevard to use the title should result in the elevation of the rescue work in the slums to a higher level in the conception of Church people. This word has Roman Catholic usage back of it also, a usage which relates it to a thoroughly dignified and earnest enterprise, as dignified and unobjectionable in its character as a Christian Science "Lecture."

Moreover, the common use of this word by Protestant churches would relate our evangelistic efforts more closely in our thought to the work the Church is doing on the foreign field. We all call this latter work "missionary." But it is the same work with the same motives and for the same results as the Church at home is endeavoring to do. And anything that will tend to dispel the illusion of difference between "Home" and "Foreign" Missions will be a good thing.

HERETICAL RESULTS OF SUNDAY REVIVALS

NOT the least of the very serious injuries to the cause of free, reasonable and wholesome Christianity resulting from the type of revivalism of which "Billy" Sunday is the leading exponent is the impregnation of communities with an abnormal interest in the heresy of a spectacular second coming of Christ.

Mr. Sunday, it appears, is laying increasing stress upon his views on this subject. In earlier years he preached a single sermon or so on it during his meetings. More and more it saturates all his preaching and he works it into the motives upon which his converts act.

A communication from a Pennsylvania reader makes clear the wide-reaching after effects of the preaching of this doctrine under the intense conditions that characterize the Sunday revivals. He says:

> The whole country around here in a radius of 150 miles, in which are located towns where "Billy" Sunday has conducted revivals, is literally "daffy" over the millennial doctrine. The churches are studying the Bible from that point of view and a large proportion of the ministers have adopted it and are preaching it. It is very difficult to interest the churches in practical social Christianity.

Such a result is inevitable. The premillennial doctrine that Mr. Sunday digs out of the Bible by the most crude and indiscriminating interpretation is thoroughly antagonistic to the social ethics and practical idealism of Jesus. The theory that things are to get worse and worse up to the time the Lord appears leaves no room for the great social reconstruction which is inspired by the dream of an earthly Kingdom of God.

Premillennialism is essentially pessimistic in its relation to human progress and the goal toward which social forces are taking mankind. The indwelling, living Christ is impotent to save the world. Only a cosmic cataclysm can triumph over evil.

The planting and fostering of a heresy like this in the thinking of a Christian community injures the true cause of Christ, in the long run, more than the moral reform of ever so many individuals benefits it.

It is a factor to be taken into consideration when modern-minded—or we might better say, New Testament-minded—pastors are casting their vote on the proposal to invite Mr. Sunday to their communities.

DR. WILLETT'S NEW BOOK

THE appearance of a new book among the Disciples of Christ is always an occasion worthy of editorial attention. And when the new book comes from the pen of Professor H. L. Willett not even the fact of his association with The Christian Century should constitute an inhibition upon our hearty expression of opinion concerning it.

The new title now added to the lengthening list with which Dr. Willett is credited is "The Moral Leaders of Israel," the first volume of which is now before us fresh this very day from the bindery. There are to be two volumes. The second is now in preparation and it is promised that announcement of its publication can be made soon.

The key to an interpretation of the very prepossessing book now in hand is found in the "dedication." Dr. Willett acknowledges his indebtedness to those who have been his students and companions in the quest of biblical knowledge "whether in the intimate associations of the class room or in the wider relationships of audiences and assemblies."

This intimate touch at the threshold of the book brings to many readers' recollection the scenes of which so large a part of the author's public life has been made up—great audiences of church men and women to whom the Old Testament has been a baffling enigma, sitting fascinated under the startlingly clear and human and modern reasonings with which Dr. Willett has been able to invest its pages.

There is no rival in the American Church to his position of pre-eminence as a popular interpreter of the Bible. And his popular success is rooted in his scholarly ripeness and thoroughness as well as in his extraordinary felicity of utterance.

More than in any other book of Professor Willett's the atmosphere of the popular assembly seems to pervade this new volume. A study of the prophets of ancient Israel, it pulsates with the urgency of the prophetic spirit of the author who interprets them. One feels that the messages of the prophets have woven themselves into the warp and woof of the author's mind, that from his long and intimate association with them in study and classroom he has caught their spirit and is not now simply showing forth their messages but speaking it afresh for himself to the men and women, and to the social life, of today.

DR. WILLETT'S acceptance of the substantial and reasonable results of the work of scientific biblical criticism is thoroughgoing. He deals with problems of Old Testament criticism in very simple and elemental terms, clearing up for the general reader many things that stand in the way of intelligent understanding of the methods and results of modern scholarly work upon these books.

But "The Moral Leaders of Israel" is anything but an academic discussion. The book preaches the eternal imperatives of justice, mercy and truth with the same passion with which the prophets themselves preached them.

We are not at this time attempting a review of this volume. The publishers will no doubt be glad to use The Christian Century's pages from time to time to present the comments of leaders of religious thought upon the work of Professor Willett.

That the book will stir up wholesome discussion is almost certain, but it seems inconceivable that a piece of work done in such a spirit can stir up belligerent controversy.

To all readers we believe it will prove to be a quickener both of mind and purpose, a revelation of the beauties and what one might call the eternal modernness of those great souls of ancient times who uttered divine truths that never grow old.

OPEN COMMUNION AND CLOSE MEMBERSHIP

FROM the earliest days of the Disciples' movement there has been a conscious tension between the practice of open communion and the practice of close membership.

At the very beginning, under Thomas Campbell's leadership, the movement was open both in communion and in membership, receiving into its fellowship and to the Lord's Table all Christians without regard to the mode by which they had been baptized. Upon becoming Baptists, under the leadership of Alexander Campbell, both these fundamental positions were reversed, and the ideal of practicing Christian unity was almost totally eclipsed.

When the unabsorbed Disciple movement finally separated from the Baptists the earlier practice of open communion was completely reinstated, but the Baptist sectarian practice of close membership was retained.

Why this inconsistency was allowed has often been a subject of inquiry. That Alexander Campbell felt the discrepancy between a fraternal attitude toward Christians of other names and a communion practice which barred them from the Lord's Table is clearly indicated by a statement quoted in the following letter from Dr. Sharpe, of the Disciples' Divinity House:

Editor The Christian Century:

I have often wondered in my reading of your advocacy of the open membership plan in the churches that you have not more fully discussed the relation of the Disciples' position upon the communion question to its practice as regards membership. I am sure that many thoughtful minds among us who have never committed themselves to open membership, have nevertheless keenly felt that there is a discrepancy somewhere between our communion table and our basis of church fellowship. Of course, no one has felt that inconsistency more keenly than did Alexander Campbell himself at one period of his life. This fact is strikingly displayed in Mr. Campbell's "Letter to an Independent Baptist." Christian Baptist Vol. III. p. 229 (original edition); p. 238 (reprint). With this article should be compared a second reply to "An Independent Baptist." Same volume, p. 285 (original); p. 257 (reprint). The spirit of these essays will be evident from the following brief quotations, though they must be read entire to obtain their full import. "I have thought and thought and vacillated very much, on the question, whether Baptists and Paido-Baptists ought, could, would, or should, irrespective of their peculiarities, sit down at the same Lord's table. And one thing I do know, that either they should cease to have communion in prayer, praise, or other religious observances, or they should go the whole length. Of this point I am certain." In his letter he says, "This question is yet, with me 'sub judice.'"

Now in all this it seems Mr. Campbell had only the communion question specifically in mind. Afterward, as we know, he did practice open communion. Why did he not go on to open membership upon the premises suggested in these letters? I should like you, from your knowledge of this whole question to enlighten your readers, including myself. Hoping you can find space and time for this very soon, I am sincerely yours, Chas. M. Sharpe.

The reason why Mr. Campbell did not go "the whole length," and practice open membership as well as open communion, can be explained though it cannot be justified. The solution of the communion question on the basis of the open practice was a simple matter, because the open practice conformed both to the Scriptural conception of the communion and to the Disciples' ideal of Christian unity.

But in the case of immersion-baptism a solution was not so obvious. Convinced that immersion-baptism was a mandate of the Scriptures, it was quite natural that the "reformers" should conceive the practice of it in the usual Baptist way, that is, in a sectarian way. It did not occur to any of them that they could practice immersion and Christian union at the same time. The teaching of Scripture was, to them, so explicit on the positive ordinance of immersion that they suffered it to eclipse their Christian union ideal; they allowed their way of practicing it to sectarianize their churches and their movement.

Had they held impartially before their minds these two duties, first their duty to practice Christian union, and secondly, their duty to practice immersion-baptism, there would undoubtedly have occurred to them a course of action upon which both these duties might have been reconciled.

A HOPELESS QUEST!

CONGREGATIONALISTS and Disciples who talk hopefully of the possibility of uniting these two groups of churches in an undenominational fellowship are sharing an ignis fatuus, if the judgment of the "Journal and Messenger," the militant Baptist organ, is worth anything.

This is the choice and gracious style in which our Cincinnati neighbor expresses its modest tentative opinion:

The Advance (Congregationalist) publishes an article by "Father Endeavor" Clark, endorsing the proposition of a union between the Congregationalists and the "Disciples." "It is to laugh!" There is no more probability of such a union than there is of the Atlantic overflowing its barriers and emptying itself into the Pacific. Oil and water—why they won't mix! It has been tried a thousand times, and it is the same today as in the first world century. They simply will not mix and stay mixed. The oil will come to the top, every time. Pedo-rantizing Congregationalists and close-baptism "Disciples!" they say they need each other; but the truth is that both need what cannot be got out of a union. Both need the Holy Spirit in much larger measures than they have ever yet known.

No doubt the quest will now be given up by both Disciples and Congregationalists.

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

City Temple Renews Invitation to Dr. Black.

It has been previously announced that the City Temple of London, formerly ministered to by Rev. R. J. Campbell, called Dr. Hugh Black of Union Theological Seminary and that he had declined. It is now reported that a second call has been issued and further efforts will be put forth to interest the seminary professor.

War Hinders Missions.

The influence of war upon missionary work is a sad story. It is reported that the London Missionary Society has reduced its budget for 1916-17 by $50,000. This means withdrawal from Calcutta. Even with this reduction, it is estimated that the income will be $75,000 short of the receipts.

Another Song Writer Dies.

The third great evangelistic song writer to die within a year is Ira Allen Sankey, son of Ira D. Sankey, who was associated with Dwight L. Moody. It is a curious coincidence that he was born at sea and that he died and was buried on the ocean.

The Bishops Will Not Meet.

A call was issued for a meeting of the bishops of the Protestant Episcopal church in Philadelphia for Jan. 12. The meeting could not be held unless a quorum of bishops was secured. The meeting was greatly desired by the "Catholics" among the Episcopalians and was opposed by the "Protestants." While the call for the meeting mentioned only routine matters, it was generally understood that the High Church constituency was putting forth an effort to embarrass the Board of Missions because of its willingness to co-operate with the Panama Congress. It seems clear that the "Protestants" are still in control of the machinery of the Protestant Episcopal church. The refusal of the bishops to meet is criticised by The Living Church since the failure of a quorum was made possible by the remoteness of the missionary bishops.

Baptist Merger is Delayed.

Those who had hopes that the Baptist merger on the south side of Chicago would be consummated soon have been disappointed. The pastors of two historic churches, First and Immanuel, have recently resigned. The Baptist Executive Council has created a joint board to study the south side problem allowing the two churches to continue their work for a time. The Executive Council has asked Rev. Johnston Myers to serve as acting pastor in Immanuel church the coming year.

Canadian Presbyterians Will Not Unite.

The poll of the individual church members among the Presbyterian congregations on the subject of union with the Methodists and the Congregationalists has resulted in a disappointing vote. A majority is in favor of the union but the minority is too large to be defied. Many church members have voted against union on account of fear of law-suits threatened by certain noisy irreconcilables of the minority. The Congregationalists and Methodists were able to secure an almost unanimous vote in favor of union. The Presbyterian vote shows the strength of a certain dogmatically conservative temper which can rule with threats when it fails to command either by force of ideas or by the size of its following.

Unitarians Not Training Ministers.

The few young men preparing for the Unitarian ministry is a subject of concern for Rev. Haynes Holmes, of New York, a minister of that fellowship. He says that in 1915 Unitarian schools graduated only eight ministers. The same year 12 Unitarian ministers died and 29 quit the ministry. There were 17 ministers received from other denominations, and the net loss of their ministry for the year was 16.

Bishop Hartzell in New Orleans.

Bishop Hartzell of the Methodist Episcopal church returned recently to the scenes of his first pastorate of forty-six years ago, in New Orleans. He met the student body of the New Orleans University and spoke to them. Later he spoke to a union meeting of the white and colored Methodist preachers of the city and urged them to greater loyalty to Methodism. Bishop Hartzell has presided over Africa for many years and is about to be retired by the operation of the age limit.

Methodists Consider Historical Controversy.

The reference works leave the question of the introduction of Methodism in America somewhat in doubt. It has never been settled as to whether the first Methodist preacher in this country was Philip Embury or Robert Strawbridge. On January 26 and 27 a meeting will be held in Baltimore, Maryland, in which commissions appointed by the General Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Protestant Church, will consider this historical question and undertake to settle it.

Baptists Plan Educational Advance.

Baptists evidently do not regard the educational problem as one involving money only for their educational goal has a number of other items in it. The aim is twenty-five student pastors at universities, 1,000 Baptist students in theological seminaries, 15,000 Baptist students in colleges and universities, and $6,000,000 for additional educational endowment at home and abroad.

Methodists Help Russian Mothers.

Dr. George A. Simmons, Methodist representative in Petrograd, writes that American ladies in this capital have raised three thousand rubles to care for children of soldiers in the daytime while the mothers go out to work. The Methodists are actively interested in this charity.

Philosopher Talks on War

No subject is of more provoking character among Christians today than the attitude of Christians to war. That peace is the ultimate goal of the race is everywhere conceded, but the attitude of the Christian in "the present evil world" is one that is the subject of debate. The issue is between absolute idealists and practical idealists. The pronouncement of the great philosopher Eucken, of Germany, is of great interest at this time. "War itself is wrong," he says, "but 'even from the point of view of Christianity, there is a such a thing as a just war.' Christians should 'not condemn all the combatants indiscriminately,' but ought 'to form a conscientious judgment' of the right and wrong side. To be sure, Christianity, with its proclamation of 'the Kingdom of God as a kingdom of love . . . aims to abolish all harshness from the souls of men, and cannot endure hostility.' Yet while Christianity placed this high ideal before mankind, Christianity was fully aware of 'the great distance that separates humanity as it actually is from the perfection of such an ideal.' Nor could it fail to recognize that in a world of 'passion, selfishness, and iniquity, it was impossible to realize immediately that condition of love, meekness and mercy.' If it had insisted upon such an immediate execution of its plan, it would have given free play to all the evil in human nature, and it would furthermore have been obliged to forbid all punishment and all criminal law as contrary to the law of Christian love. Now, inasmuch as wickedness and passion are not limited to private life, but extend also into the relations of races with one another, and are then particularly dangerous, the problem of war necessarily arises. The great teachers of the Church, as, for example, Luther, busied themselves much with this problem, and although they saw plainly a great evil in war, they by no means rejected all participation in war, all entrance into armed conflict, as un-Christian. Only a sentimental, feeble Christianity can shut its eyes to such questions and content itself with lamenting over the depravity in the world; a virile Christianity that does not exhaust itself in little conventicles, but aims, on the contrary, to permeate the life of the world, must be a help and support for man in these questions, too. Such a Christianity will surely deprecate war in itself. It will reject unconditionally all naturalistic glorification of war as a means to the development of power. It will be convinced that every war in the last analysis is a matter of guilt; but its ethical judgment on the combatants will depend strictly upon the location of the guilt. Christianity will condemn as immoral a war which has its roots in covetousness, in love of conquest, or in envy, with the same resoluteness that it passes a favorable ethical judgment on a people that defends itself against injustice and protects its holy possessions."

Methodists Help City Poor.

The Methodists of Chicago, through their city mission organization, will unify the work of helping the poor with cast-off clothing and other supplies. Previously a number of churches have been engaged in this work, but it is understood they will all co-operate their work through the Methodist Mutual Aid Union. This organization will try to bring in freight shipments from the country as well, to assist the city poor. The Presbyterians of Chicago have for some time been co-operating through the Christian Industrial League which has gathered cast-off products and hired down-and-out men to fix them up. The men were paid wages from the sale of the cast-off materials.

Congregationalists Organize Pulpit Supply.

It will cost a cent and a half per member for the Congregationalists to find ministers for their New England pulpits the coming year. It has been agreed to form a central bureau for this work, and the churches of several states have by two-thirds vote promised co-operation. Rev. Arthur J. Covell is secretary of the pulpit supply bureau.

A Baptist at Princeton.

Prof. A. T. Robertson, a Baptist theological professor of Southern Theological seminary, has been engaged to deliver a course of lectures at Princeton Theological Seminary in February.

Russellism Going South.

The next move of the Russellite propaganda seems to be to invade the southern sections of the country, and try out new work in regions where the sect is unknown. Two years ago moving pictures in all the leading cities of the north were advertising "Pastor" Russell and the near end of the age in 1914. The millennial catastrophe is now nearly two years over-due and many of the dupes walk with the Brooklyn prophet no more. Two of the three houses used by the propaganda in Brooklyn are being given up and the remaining one will henceforth house the activities of the group.

Only One-third Churches Are Prosperous.

The Country Church situation in Ohio has been given the benefit of expert study and the results obtained are very startling. Only one-third of the churches in the state are making any growth. One-ninth of these churches have been abandoned in recent years. Seventeen per cent have one hundred or more members; twenty-one per cent have less than twenty-five members; twenty-seven per cent have between twenty-five and fifty members, and thirty-four per cent have between fifty and one hundred members. Six in each hundred of the churches studied have pastors giving their whole time; twenty-six per cent of the churches have a minister one-half time; twenty-three per cent have a minister one-third time; twenty-seven per cent share their pastor with three other churches, fourteen per cent have one-fifth of the time of their minister, and five per cent one sixth of the pastor's time. The average pay of pastors equals only that of the day laborer. Less than forty per cent of the rural population in Ohio are church members. Some of the causes assigned for this deplorable condition are absenteeism, landlordism, the absentee pastor, and denominational narrowness.

RABINDRANATH TAGORE. By Basanta Koomar Roy. Among the numerous approaches which Orient and Occident have made to each other in recent years, including many forms of awareness by which the West has come to know the lands of the far East, such as Japan, China, India and the Levant, none is more interesting than the literary comradeship which has been discovered by western scholars in the work of some oriental writers. The most notable of these discoveries was connected with the granting of the Nobel prize for idealistic litcrature in the winter of 1913 to a poet and teacher of Bengal. Mr. Tagore visited England in the previous year and was introduced to the English nation by the Irish poet, William Butler Yeats. In the autumn of the same year he came to America, but his work was not much appreciated until after the awarding of the Nobel prize. Today his name is familiar throughout the English speaking world, and several volumes of his works have been translated from Bengali into English. Among these are the delightful volume of child poems, called, "The Crescent Moon," a volume of songs translated into prose paragraphs by the author, called "Gitanjali," another volume of lyrics called "The Gardener," the symbolic drama, "The King of the Dark Chamber," and the volume of essays known as "Sadhana: The Realization of Life." Much has been written about this Bengali poet in the newspapers and magazines during the last two years, and many of his short stories and poems have appeared in popular form. But of the man himself comparatively little is known by fairly well informed people. The present volume supplies something of this desired information. The author is a native of India resident in this country. He tells the story of the poet's precocious youth and apparent failure as a scholar or worker. The family had other than literary ambitions for him. For a time his days seemed entirely wasted. The family was wealthy and some of the poet's immediate relatives were men of distinction in politics and education. The necessity of taking charge of one of his father's properties, where he spent many months in comparative solitude, living on a small boat that touched here and there along one of the affluents of the Ganges, gave him his first opportunity to think out some of the problems of life and to begin his career as poet and romancer. Later his interest in education led to the establishment of a Boys' School at Bolpur, a few miles north of Calcutta. There he has spent the recent years in an atmosphere of busy educational activity, with a school modeled on new and somewhat revolutionary lines, not always approved by the British government. But the interpretation of Tagore's philosophy, his political views regarding India's relations with the English government, his musical interests and his family life must be left to the telling of Mr. Roy. A few months ago the poet spent some weeks in and near Chicago, visiting in the meantime his son who was at that time an agricultural student at the University of Illinois. The volume has an appreciative introduction by Hamilton W. Mabie (Dodd, Mead & Co., 1915. $1.25 net.)

THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION ANNUAL REPORT. By deed of trust created by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, January 6, 1913, a considerable sum of money was placed in the hands of four trustees to apply the income and such portion or the whole of the principal as they might deem proper to such charitable use or uses as they might from time to time select and in such proportions respectively as they might determine. Subsequent gifts of Mr. Rockefeller and his wife have brought the fund to an amount considerably in excess of $100,000,000. This enormous trust fund is now administered by eleven trustees, including beside Mr. Rockefeller and his son, Presidents Judson of Chicago and Eliot of Harvard. Dr. Simon Flexner of New York, and other trained administrators. The largest enterprise undertaken by the Foundation is the effort to eradicate the hook-worm evil, not only in America but throughout the tropical regions of the world. In addition a large amount of war relief work has been done, a medical commission has investigated the opportunities for medical education in China and is appropriating large sums of money for the aid of Chinese medical education, and the co-operative work of Christian missions has been promoted to the extent of something like half a million dollars. These facts are set forth in full detail, and a complete report is made of all expenditures and of the form in which all of Mr. Rockefeller's gifts have been received (The Rockefeller Foundation.)

The Death of Kier Hardie.

That the labor movement of England has not had the anti-religious twist which has been given to it in some other countries has long been known to the Christian world. The credit for this more favorable condition is due in considerable measure to the influence of Mr. Kier Hardie who died recently. He was a member of the Evangelical Union Church in Old Cumnock, Scotland. In his earlier days he sometimes acted as lay preacher. He was once unsettled by skeptical influences but it is said his faith was restored by the reading of Stalker's "Life of Christ."

Missionary Rallies in Central and Western States.

The missionary rallies being conducted by the teams of the Foreign Society are meeting with fine success, writes Secretary Corey. The team leaders report that never before has the interest been deeper or the rallies more interesting. R. A. Doan is leading the team in the central states, and Bert Wilson the team in the western states. M. B. Madden, of Japan, is touring with Mr. Doan, and Mr. H. C. Hobgood of Africa, and Mr. C. E. Robinson of Japan, with Mr. Wilson. O. G. Beans, a layman of Wheeling, W. Va.; W. S. Goode of Youngstown, O., E. W. Cole, of Indiana, and J. R. Golden of Illinois, are also helping for brief periods in their districts on Mr. Doan's team. This educational campaign of the Foreign Society is of very great value.

H. H. Peters as Prophet.

H. H. Peters, pastor at Paris, Ill., preached a New Year's sermon on the theme, "Is the Sun Rising or Setting?" This is the first of a series of sermons having to do with modern problems. Mr. Peters held that this is the day of the rising sun, and in support of this belief presented the following interpretation of past history, with a prophecy also of the future: "There are three great historic creeds. Humanity has almost outgrown the first; is beginning to distrust the second; and is faintly apprehending the third. Under the first men settled their differences by war; under the second by diplomacy; under the third arbitration will be supreme. Under the first monarchy was the form of government; under the second aristocracy; under the third we will have a democracy. Under the first brigandage was the rule of commerce; under the second competition; under the third co-operation will be the method. Under the first man tried to build towers to the throne of God; under the second, temples for the habitation of the deities, under the third every home will be a temple and every occupation an altar. Under the first the warrior was king; under the second the philosopher; under the third the servant will rule. Under the first there were slaves; under the second wage earners; under the third, fellow-helpers. We believe in the future of our race because we believe men will come to follow Christ rather than Caesar or Plato. Mind and muscle will decline as governing forces in the race and love, service and goodness will be supreme. Christ is the crowning King and his day is even now beginning."

A. McLean to Attend Panama Conference.

President A. McLean will represent the Foreign Society in the Panama Latin-American Missionary Conference at Panama, in February. This is one of the most significant meetings since the holding of the Edinburgh Conference in Scotland. It will be conducted on the same plan as that conference, and will not only deal with the great Latin-American problems of missions, but in a general way will touch all lines of missionary occupation, advance and administration.

Jacksonville, Ill., Bible Class Has Quarter-Thousand Members.

One of the flourishing enterprises of Central church, Jacksonville, Ill., is the Auditorium Bible Class composed of both men and women and numbering on its rolls 241 members. This body of seekers after Bible knowledge was organized Jan. 2, 1915, and the first year of its existence had an average attendance of 78. The International uniform lessons are used and M. L. Pontius, pastor, is the teacher. During the year the class has had an average of fifteen visitors each Sunday. Recently an oyster feast was enjoyed by this class.

Toronto Disciples Lose Thirty Young Men to the Army.

The European war is casting heavy shadows upon Toronto. The Disciples churches of that city have already lost thirty young men for service in the army. The following letter from A. L. Cole, pastor at Cecil street church, brings a poignant message: "On January 2 we had with us for the last time Mr. R. P. Locke, our choir director, and Mr. Roy Whitehead, baritone. Each of these two men for some time has had a lieutenant's commission in the Canadian army, and both were recently called to the colors. They will be at the front by spring. The Toronto Disciples have contributed about thirty of their finest young men to the army. Our loss is the battlefield's gain. Material for leadership in our churches such as the king and country will accept is indeed limited. We never needed competent leaders more than we do today, and there never was a time when the church at large sacrificed more to the battlefield. Ten thousand soldiers in the king's uniform, led by three great bands have just passed my home. They are the finest specimens of humanity. When we consider that the strength of the unfit for war must assume a great portion of the leadership in the period of reconstruction, we can not help but wonder how long and painful will be the process of gaining what has been lost." Mr. Cole reports also a shock that has recently come to Cecil street congregation. On January 2, Miss Gladys Burt, leading soprano soloist at the church, filled her place in the choir both morning and evening. The next evening at a reception given by a local lodge, the festivities came to an end in a second's time by Miss Burt falling dead. Mr. Cole writes that Miss Burt was a splendid Christian girl, twenty-two years of age, a fine musician, a favorite with everybody and had always enjoyed the best of health.

S. G. Inman Given Tribute by Central Church, New York.

P. F. Jerome, of the New York work, writes that an interesting event took place last week in connection with the Missionary Education Movement Dinner of the home and foreign mission boards of the United States and Canada, at the Aldine Club, New York, when the members of Central church presented a handsome traveling bag to their fellow member, Mr. S. G. Inman, Executive Secretary of the Congress on Christian Work in Latin America. Mr. Inman gave one of the principal addresses at the dinner, and will sail with Mrs. Inman on January 26 for Panama, to attend the congress which meets in Panama, February 10-20. The address of presentation was made by President A. McLean, of the Foreign Society, who expressed to Mr. Inman the esteem of his associates in the church.

"Men and Millions" in Iowa During March.

The "Men and Millions" campaign will open in Iowa about the first of March, under the leadership of A. E. Cory. It is planned to raise $500,000 in Iowa in a month's time. More than $3,000,000 of the $6,000,00 has already been pledged. It is hoped to have the entire fund in hand by the end of 1917.

The New Dean of Drake Bible College

By recent action of the Trustees of Drake University, President Jesse C. Caldwell, of Atlantic Christian College, Wilson, North Carolina, is announced as Dean of the College of the Bible of Drake University. He will begin his work in September, 1916, closing his presidency of Atlantic Christian College the previous June.

President Caldwell is a native of Missouri. He completed his high school work at Excelsior Springs; spent some time at the Warrensburg State Normal School, Missouri, from which he entered Transylvania University to prepare for the ministry. In 1896 he received his A. B. degree from the Arts College of Transylvania, and in 1897 was graduated from the Classical Department of the College of the Bible of that institution. In 1903 he received the B. D. degree from the Divinity School of Yale University.

From 1897 to 1902 he was engaged in the ministry at Owenton, Ky., until he resigned to attend the Divinity School at Yale. In 1903 he became pastor of the church at Selma, Alabama, and remained there until he became President of the Atlantic Christian College.

In 1909 President Caldwell visited Palestine and spent a few months in rest and study.

The following testimonials from well-known educational leaders of the Disciples indicate in some measure the high qualities of Drake's new leader:

R. H. Crossfield, President Transylvania University, says of Professor Caldwell: "To a naturally keen mind and very careful preparation, President Caldwell adds a vigor and enthusiasm which, coupled with a most kindly disposition, has given him great popularity with the student body. I cannot express too strong a feeling in his favor, and if you are able to secure him as dean of the Divinity School of Drake you will deserve congratulations."

Miner Lee Bates, President of Hiram College, speaks in the following glowing terms: "Nowhere outside his institution have I seen such high ideals of educational thoroughness and honesty maintained against such odds. He is a man of high courage. His students are devoted to him and in the best sense he is bishop of all the Carolinas so far as our churches are concerned. His own scholarship is ample and he has the passion of a student.

"Rarely have I seen so fine a spirit of self-sacrifice for an obscure work which he had the vision to value at its true worth. Such a spirit is needed in our Bible departments.

"If my praise seems extravagant to you, please do not discount what I have said. Every word has been weighed. My acquaintance with Mr. Caldwell and his work has, of course, not been extensive, but I believe I know him."

Herbert Martin, Professor of Philosophy, Drake University, says: "His earnestness and sincerity of purpose, his student instincts, his unobtrusive spirit and genuine worth, his ability to make and maintain friendship, to cultivate and develop his constituency,—all combine and give assurance that Mr. Caldwell as Dean of the College of the Bible will render our institution, our people, and the cause of Christian education a very valuable service."

Rev. W. H. Book, whose church at Columbus, Ind., holds the banner for Ministerial Relief.

Rev. W. D. Endres, pastor at Quincy, Ill., who at a recent meeting of the local Federation of Churches made a strong appeal for Christian Unity.

Rev. Graham Frank, called to Colorado Springs, Colo.

Tabernacle Church, Columbus, Ind., Takes Banner for Ministerial Relief Offering.

W. H. Book, pastor at Tabernacle church, Columbus, Ind., is justly proud of the fact that this great church takes the banner for the largest offering to Ministerial Relief. The women of this church are deserving of mention. After meeting all obligations the Ladies' Aid has more than $500 in the bank to their credit. The financial report of the church shows that $11,305.69 passed through the hands of the treasurer. More than half of this went outside to do mission work of some kind. The above amount does not represent all that is being done through the membership of Columbus church; thousands of dollars were given last year by individuals for special work, which is not reported by the treasurer. Morning audiences have been the best in the church's history, and the prayer-meetings have been well attended and full of spirituality. Best of all, seventy persons have been added to the church. The present membership is 1,331. The Columbus church has a Board of Deaconesses which made 636 calls during the year.

Quincy, Ill., Pastor, Pleads for Christian Unity.

Declaring that the church of today is losing ground because it is divided into too many bodies, W. D. Endres, pastor of First church, Quincy, Ill., made a strong plea for Christian unity at the second of the week of prayer services being held under the auspices of the Quincy Federation of Churches. Mr. Endres preached the sermon at a meeting held in the Methodist Episcopal church. His subject was "Unity in the Church Throughout the World." Mr. Endres proposed that all Christians and churches extend the hand of Christian fellowship to any person who accepts Jesus Christ as the revelation of God to man; who sees in his revelation of God a Father to all mankind; who sees that the will of this Father makes all men brothers and that they should be so treated by one another; and who sees in the kingdom of God the organized expression of this universal brotherhood which culminates in the supremacy and the immortality of the spiritual life. The speaker said, however, that he did not expect to see this plan adopted. He said that when and only when men's hearts break over conditions as they are and they get on their knees before God and seek the leadership of his spirit will the difficulties be overcome.

Graham Frank Called to Colorado Pulpit.

First church, Colorado Springs, Colo., has called R. Graham Frank, pastor at Liberty, Mo., to this western field. No decision has yet been reached by Mr. Frank. First church has been without a permanent pastor since S. E. Brewster resigned several weeks ago. The trustees extended a call to Mr. Frank and recently invited him to visit the city and get acquainted with the congregation. He has been pastor of the church in Liberty for twelve years and has a high reputation as a successful pastor and splendid pulpit speaker.

First Church, Lincoln, Neb., Will Advertise.

The recent write-up of churches that advertise featured in the Ladies' Home Journal this month, presents little that is new to many of the Disciples' brotherhood. One of the aggressive organizations of the fellowship is First church, Lincoln, Neb., which is ministered to by H. H. Harmon. The advertising committee of this church has recently arranged for a large artistic electric sign to be swung from a corner of the building. The sign carries electric bulbs hidden in a frame lighting opalescent glass and revealing the words, "First Christian Church," and a beautiful white cross. It is hoped that this advertising will be of advantage in the protracted meetings being held at First church by H. H. Harmon, preaching; J. W. Hilton, of East Lincoln, singing; and W. A. Baldwin, of Bethany, in general promotion.

Campaign for Efficiency Follows Scoville Meeting at Jefferson City, Mo.

The evangelistic series of meetings held by C. R. Scoville and aids in Jefferson City, Mo., was remarkably fruitful. A. R. Liverett, the pastor, however, is not content with these results, but is following up the meeting with the promotion of a plan of dividing the church membership into twelve districts. By means of this plan it is hoped the work can be brought up to the highest standard of permanent efficiency. Mr. Liverett holds that a period of extensive activity must be followed logically by one of intensive work.

"T. B. V's." a New Organization at Terre Haute, Central.

A new organization in Central church, Terre Haute, Ind., is "The Pastor's Volunteers." Some of the boy friends of the pastor, J. Boyd Jones, felt that they would like to assist the pastor in his work so they organized themselves into a club. Mr. Jones writes that nothing has taken place since he came to Central that has given more joy than to have these boys of their own free will organize to assist the pastor in his work. Other boys will become members as soon as they have the opportunity. Another new organization at Central is a class for the training of preachers, which meets on Monday evenings under the leadership of the pastor. Eight boys and four girls enlisted in this work at the first meeting.

State Teen Age Rally at Lexington, Ky.

A State Teen Age Rally was held at Central church, Lexington, Ky., Saturday, January 15. The Rally was held in the afternoon, following the executive meetings of the Older Boys' and Girls' Councils at eleven. The purpose of the Rally was to ratify the proposed constitution of the Councils, and to give impetus to the carrying forward of the plans for the state-wide Teen Age work. This meeting was open to representatives from the teen age departments of all Bible-schools in the state.

Christian Endeavor "Rousement Rally" at Terre Haute.

The Christian Endeavor Societies of Vigo County, Ind., are planning to hold a "Rousement" rally in Central church, Terre Haute, on the 24th of January. The speakers will be: Mr. Clarence C. Hamilton, the field secretary of Ohio; representatives of the "Christian Endeavor World;" and Mr. R. A. Walker, the Indiana field secretary. There will be a business meeting at 7:30 p. m. for the officers of the various societies to plan the work of the coming year, and to arrange for a county union. At 8:00 p. m. there will be a mass meeting of all Endeavorers to hear the addresses of Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Walker. All the young people of the county "between the ages of ten and one hundred years," are invited.

Iowa Church Will Study New Testament Times.

Huell E. Warren, pastor at Moulton, Ia., reports that a Wednesday evening class has been organized to take up a study of New Testament Times. No one is barred from the class, but all entering will be held to strict attendance and thorough work.

California Loses Two Disciple Preachers by Death.

J. F. Sloan, of Long Beach, Cal., and J. O. Cutts, of Riverside, Cal., both passed to their reward early in this month. Each was an honored minister of the Christian church.

Kansas Churches Will Promote Personal Evangelism.

All the Christian churches of Kansas are planning an Every One Win One campaign to begin March 12. Six weeks will be given to aggressive personal evangelism. Easter Sunday will be Decision Day.

A Gift for the Japanese Institute, Los Angeles.

The Japanese Institute at Los Angeles, Cal., observed a giving Christmas by contributing to a fund for the purchase of an automobile for the institute; $700 was given for that purpose. There were fifty baptisms in the institute last year.

W. F. Richardson Preaches "Live Sermons for Live Young Men."

During the months of January and February, W. F. Richardson, pastor at First church, Kansas City, Mo., is directing his preaching efforts on Sunday evenings especially toward the young men of the community to which this great downtown church ministers. His sermon themes are as follows: "The Young Man and His Aim." "The Young Man and His Job." "The Young Man and His Time." "The Yougn Man and His Money." "The Young Man and His Chum." "The Young Man and His Home." "The Young Man and His God." "The Young Man and His Brother."

Los Angeles Will Entertain Laymen's Missionary Movement.

A great missionary convention for men will be held in Los Angeles at the Bible Institute auditorium, February 27 to March 1, 1916, under the auspices of the National Laymen's Missionary Movement, which is conducting similar missionary campaigns in 75 cities in the United States and Canada. The Los Angeles Convention is expected to break the record in attendance now held by Chicago, which registered 4,500 delegates.

R. W. Abberley Achieves in California Field.

Magnolia Avenue Church, Los Angeles, has the difficulties attendant upon a church in a congested district, but under the ministry of R. W. Abberley it is making commendable progress. In the past three months there have been forty additions. In a recent every-member canvass $600 was added to the yearly income. A class of women is supporting three needy families and a class of young men is bearing the expense of a child in a hospital.

Pioneering in Minnesota.

One of the most significant steps forward among Minnesota Disciples is the establishment of a church at Crookston by the Superintendent of Missions, C. B. Osgood. Under the direction of the Minnesota Christian Missionary Society, the C. W. B. M. co-operating, Mr. Osgood was sent to Crookston last February with the understanding that he was to remain upon the field until he had planted a church of sufficient strength to locate a pastor. Five families of excellent people banded together and pledged themselves wholeheartedly to the accomplishment of this task. Mr. Osgood was of necessity absent from the field several weeks, but at the close of the second meeting on December 15, a church of more than eighty members had been established. They had purchased and made initial payments on a splendid building site, upon which a very usable temporary building is located. The C. W. B. M. and the Melvin church join with the Crookston people in the support of the pastor, W. J. Carry, for the Crookston-Melvin field. It is the feeling of the Minnesota workers that no more promising church has been planted in Minnesota in recent years than the Crookston church.

Minnesota's Largest Disciple Bible-school.

The largest Bible-school among the Disciples in Minnesota is in Minneapolis, in the Minnehaha church. A. W. Van Dervort, the pastor, is regarded as an authority on teen age problems in Bible-school work. He is a member of the faculty of the Minneapolis City Teachers' Training School. This church began a campaign under the direction of C. S. Brooks, January 9. It is expected that this meeting will make this church nearly self-supporting.

Grand Avenue, Minneapolis, Will Have New Building.

Grand Avenue, Minneapolis, has received fifty accessions during the year. Their new building site has been practically freed from debt. At a recent meeting of the official board a building committee was appointed and directed to have plans drawn for a new building. This church will engage in a campaign under the leadership of C. S. Brooks in the month of February.

First Church, St. Paul, On a Paying Basis.

Church work in Minnesota is carried on under a handicap, especially with the Disciples, who are not a numerous body in that state. First church, St. Paul, deserves credit for the fact that last year's expenses were fully met by receipts. There has been an increase in the membership of the church, although no special evangelistic services were held. The Minges company will lead in such an effort in the spring. S. T. Willis leads in this difficult field.

Woodlawn Church, Portland, Ore., Starts New Year Right.

In the joys of the New Year season, the gospel message was not neglected by Woodlawn church, Portland. W. L. Mellinger, the pastor, gave the invitation and had the satisfaction of seeing eight young people come forward to make the right kind of a start with the new year. East Side church, Portland, saw the old year out to the tune of a turkey dinner. First church gave a watch party on New Year's eve.

Dr. and Mrs. Dye Take Membership With Pomona, Cal., Church.

Dr. and Mrs. Royal J. Dye have taken membership with the Pomona, Cal., church and Mrs. Dye has been elected missionary superintendent of that church. As a foundation for a thorough missionary work, in that congregation she will at once install a system of missionary readings suited to the varied ages of the pupils in the Sunday-school.

Church Grows From Nothing to a Substantial Organization in a Year.

Less than a year ago Ernest House, of Kiowa, Okla., held a short meeting that resulted in the organization of a church at Eufaula. Plans were at once begun for the erection of a church building. J. C. Smock, of Eufaula, and M. Board, of Muskogee, were joint owners of a valuable lot in the heart of the city, valued at from $2,000 to $3,000 cash. This they gave outright and the members and citizens pledged about $3,000 more. The church was without a minister and called Dr. T. L. Noblitt, of Henryetta. In less than six months the splendid structure was erected and some of the most substantial citizens brought into the church. December 19 was set as the day on which to make up the deficit on the new building. The State Secretary, A. R. Spicer, was called and when the day was over, $1,200 was secured in cash and pledges, besides about $1,000 to apply on the $2,500 loan; nearly $2,200 total was secured in all.

Galesburg, Ill., Dedicates Bible-school and Social Service Building.

H. A. Denton has done a remarkable work in the conservative, Puritanic city of Galesburg, Ill. He has been wise to stress the educational side of the work, and his efforts were crowned last week by seeing dedicated a fine, new $40,000 home for Bible-school and social service activities. A. C. Smither and E. E. Elliott led in the work and $5,000 in cash and notes was secured. The local newspapers gave whole pages to the announcement of the event. George H. Combs, of Kansas City, preached at the new building through last week.

Des Moines Church Ministers to Educational Field.

Highland Park church, Des Moines, is located in the neighborhood of Highland Park College, with its hundreds of students. The congregation is not a strong one, but is profiting largely through the meetings now being held by W. J. Minges. John Gratton is pastor. A large tabernacle has been erected for the meeting. It is reported that the various denominations of Highland Park wished to turn this into a union revival.

Indianapolis, Central, Has City's Largest School.

Central Church, Indianapolis, has the largest enrollment of any school in the city. It is now more than 1,200. Not only is this a large school, but it is very efficient. The organization and grading are worked out on the most scientific lines. G. P. Harvey is the superintendent.

Notes from the Foreign Society

Wm. M. Bobbitt, of Kansas, has just made his twenty-third gift to the Foreign Society on the annuity plan. Is it not time a large number were making their first?

W. L. Burner and Mrs. Burner have returned to Matanzas, Cuba. They are encouraged by the number of new supporters of the Cuban mission that are rallying to them. He says: "We were happy to find the work in really good shape for having been absent so long—four months to the day. I am greatly heartened to take up the tasks anew."

For the first three months of the current missionary year the receipts amounted to $31,322. There was a gain in the regular receipts of $5,526, but a loss in annuities of $6,298. The churches as churches gave $8,787, a gain of $3,528. There was also a gain of 149 contributing churches for the three months.

Alfred R. Bowman, Wuhu, China, says: "The work here is, I think, in an excellent condition. I firmly believe that we are going to have a real live church. The Christians are taking such an interest in the church work and not a few of them are really working with us for the betterment of the church and not getting paid for what they are doing. Only last Sunday week one of our Christians who was baptized last December brought his sixteen workmen to the church with him. This means that he will have to pay these men for their day's work, and it looks now as if he will be a loser of about $300 at the end of the year. His name is Mr. Chen, and he is not a rich man, in fact he is a poor man."

Last week the Foreign Society received two annuity gifts from friends in Ohio. Let it be remembered that our books are always open for such gifts.

The Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, Ohio, has just dedicated a $36,000 community house, or addition to the building, for Sunday-school and other expansive work. This church supports the whole station at Nantungchow, China, including sixteen native evangelists. W. F. Rothenberger is the minister. Missionary churches grow and expand; "omissionary" churches often stand still or go backward.

A friend in Ohio last week made a personal direct gift of $500 to the treasurer of the Foreign Society.

W. S. Dickinson last week made a contribution of $250 to the work of the society. He has been on the executive committee since the organization—forty years ago. He has always taken a deep and vital interest and has remembered the work in a liberal way.

The Endeavor societies of the brotherhood have a warm place in their hearts for the Boys' Orphanage work at Damoh, India. The Endeavor day exercises, "The Least of These," centers around this work, and is very popular with the societies. Every mail is bringing in a large number of orders for supplies to be used in observing Endeavor day, the first Sunday in February. This is the 35th anniversary of the organization of the Endeavor movement and will be a high day for our young people. If your society has not ordered supplies, write at once, giving membership of the society, to Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

For the year ending December 31, 1915, the Foreign Societies of the United States and Canada received $18,302,905 for their work. This was an increase over the previous year of $1,625,379, or over 9 per cent. The receipts have about doubled in the past eight years, which shows that the cause of foreign missions is growing in the hearts of Christian people everywhere. The churches of North America give more for this cause than do all the churches in the world besides.

Monticello, Ind., Pastors Exchange Pulpits in Opening Services of Their Revivals.

An unique method of manifesting the spirit of Christian fellowship between two brotherhoods is reported from Monticello, Ind., where Gifford Ernest ministers. The meetings of the Disciples and Methodist churches opened on the same evening, and great was the surprise of the assembled congregations at the two churches when Mr. Ernest stepped into the Methodist pulpit, and the Methodist pastor, R. H. Crowder, greeted the Disciples' congregation. The Monticello church, led by Mr. Ernest, has recently burned a mortgage which has burdened the work for several years since the dedication of the present building in 1903. Mr. Ernest has been with the church since September 1, 1915. A. W. Jackson, of Attica, Ind., a former pastor, was the preacher on dedication day, January 9. The meeting now in progress is being held by Mr. Ernest, preaching, and his wife, Ruby H. Ernest, singing.

Kendallville, Ind., Still Seeking Pastor.

The statement was recently made in these columns that G. Webster Moore had accepted a call to the church at Kendallville, Ind. This, writes Mr. Moore, was an error. The facts are that Mr. Moore has been leading this church in a six weeks' series of evangelistic meetings, but has not considered the pastorate at Kendallville at any time. The evangelist states that Kendallville offers a fine opportunity for the right man.

Iowa Ministers to Meet at Drake.

Chas. S. Early, president of the Iowa State Ministerial Association, is desirous that all Iowa ministers bear in mind the meeting of the association at Drake University, Hobbs Hall, Feb. 14-16. Professor W. S. Athearn will be the chief lecturer. A very practical program has been prepared.

Christian Orphans' Home at St. Louis Has New President.

After nearly five years of most efficient service, Mrs. Sidney H. Thomson gives up the presidency of the Christian Orphans' Home. Under her leadership the home has maintained the highest standard of service, both in the quality and quantity of work done. Mrs. Thomson retires from the office of president that she may devote more of her time to other phases of the work. Mrs. Lizzie A. Wright has been elected to the presidency of the home. Mrs. Wright has been connected with the National Benevolent Association and the Christian Orphans' Home for years. For more than a dozen years she has been the recording secretary of the association. She comes to her new office with a ripe experience.

Chicago Pastor Says Religion is Needed to Cleanse City.

O. F. Jordan, pastor at Evanston church, Chicago, believes that nothing but religion can save a great city from corruption. His theme at a recent service was: "The Prophet of Righteousness." He said among other things: "The path of reform is always beset with difficulties, but the man who would reform our modes of life is the one who must pay the highest price. The passion of Savonarola was for a city which should live up to its professions. He did not hesitate to denounce sin, even in noblemen and ecclesiastics. His reward was a funeral pyre. The old Puritan sense of the blackness of sin has given way to tolerance. Perhaps it is the very newness of our sins that keeps us from seeing their guilt. Prophets must come who have renounced all benefits from an evil system in order to arraign it with effectiveness. What a mighty part religion may play in the unfolding of Chicago's life if this religion forgets to care for herself and cares only to give a great city a conscience and a sense of God!"

New Executive Board Members for National Benevolent Association.

The National Benevolent Association feels keenly the loss of the sympathy and counsel of John R. Loar, who recently passed to his reward in Jacksonville, Illinois. He was one of the association's early annuitants. He superintended without cost the construction of the building for the home for the aged at Jacksonville, and was a member of the Central Board for twenty years. Among the new members recently added to the Central Executive Board of the Association are Dr. O. S. Miller, I. R. Kelso, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Patterson, St. Louis; D. Y. Donaldson, Denver, Colo.; Ripley R. Harwood, Dallas, Texas; and A. E. Cory, Cincinnati, Ohio.

W. E. Frazee Takes Vacation in West.

W. E. Frazee, Kentucky's State Bible-school superintendent, took a vacation during December, spending it with his wife and mother in the West, visiting the Panama-Pacific Expositions at San Francisco and San Diego and enjoying Christmas at Phoenix, Arizona, with Mrs. Frazee's parents. Two weeks were spent pleasantly in association with the National Team of Bible-school workers in Schools of Methods at Fresno and Pomona, California, in which schools courses of lectures were given on Psychology and Bible-school administration. This service was rendered in appreciation of similar services rendered annually by the National Team in Kentucky. Sunday appointments were filled at the First Christian church, Los Angeles, Long Beach, California and Phoenix, Arizona.

St. Louis Pastor Entertains Orphans' Home Children.

John L. Brandt, minister at First Church, St. Louis, recently entertained the children of the Christian Orphans' Home with a fine series of stereopticon slides, picturing children of the past and present at work and at play.

Wilson Avenue Church, Columbus, O., Records Growth.

J. J. Tisdall, pastor at Wilson Avenue church, Columbus, reports that his congregation has a present membership of 701; eighty-four persons were added to the membership during 1915. The Bible-school had an average attendance of 443, and has set a goal of 500 for this year. For all missionary purposes a total of $1,108.07 has been raised; for general church purposes, including the building fund, $9,458.83. Mr. Tisdall delivered 158 sermons and 72 other addresses. He has officiated at seventeen weddings and conducted eighteen funerals. The number of pastoral calls made was 1025.

Southern California Disciple Men Meet.

A conference of the men of the Christian churches of Southern California was held at Los Angeles, Thursday evening, January 13. A banquet was served at 6:30. The purpose of the conference was to lay plans for bringing 1,000 Christian men into the Laymen's Missionary Convention, which is to be held February 27-March 1.

A FINAL WORD CONCERNING CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR DAY, THE FIRST SUNDAY IN FEBRUARY, AND THE OFFERING FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The first Sunday in February is near at hand. An appeal has gone out to every Christian Endeavor Society in our churches, to all our preachers and Endeavor leaders to push the offering for Christian Endeavor on that day. It is an urgent appeal. For the first time in our history we have a National Field Secretary of Christian Endeavor. From all over the country, from our own people and from the leaders in young people's work among other religious bodies, comes the word of endorsement, congratulation, and encouragement.

Frank Lowe comes to a great work in a good time. The Endeavor Day offering is for the support of this forward movement. There is no other way open to provide funds. Our Endeavor societies must give. Herein lies the urgency of the appeal.

The Appeal for a Great Endeavor Day Offering is Reasonable. No provision is made for Christian Endeavor in the Joint Missionary apportionment. The Foreign Society, the American Society, the Board of Ministerial Relief, the National Temperance Board—all the mission boards and benevolent and educational enterprises are provided for by the Joint Apportionment Committee. Our Bible-school work is taken care of by the American Christian Missionary Society. Christian Endeavor is left to secure money for its work in any way it can.

The National Board of Christian Endeavor has chosen Christian Endeavor day for this purpose. It does not apeal to the churches, but to the Endeavor societies. It asks Christian Endeavor societies to give for Christian Endeavor on Christian Endeavor Day. There is reason and justice and propriety in this. Christian Endeavor feels that it should have a free hand and generous support from every quarter in making the Endeavor Day offering adequate to the needs of the work.

Moreover, there is patriotism in this appeal. Our societies should be moved by a sense of loyalty and patriotism to make a generous response. The same reasons that apply to the existence of our Bible-school enterprise apply to the existence of our Christian Endeavor enterprise. We could leave our educational and benevolent work to others with the same propriety we could our Christian Endeavor work. To maintain our own Christian Endeavor organization, to carry on our own Christian Endeavor propaganda, to influence and direct and train our young people is simply the part of wisdom. It is not only our privilege, it is our duty. And it is not the part of wisdom; it is not patriotism; it is not loyalty; it is not measuring up to our obligation to ourselves, for our Endeavor societies to contribute each year to nearly every sort of enterprise; to respond to calls for money from nearly every quarter, and neglect our own work, permit our organization to suffer from lack of funds, and hamper and handicap our own enterprise. This is too much like a man who lets his own children starve while he feeds and clothes the children of another. There is scripture against such a procedure! We should at least be as wise as others.

This is not a plea nor advice, nor even a suggestion, that our Endeavor societies should give less, or refuse to respond to worthy appeals, but it is an earnest entreaty to our Endeavorers, to the ministers of our churches, to the leaders of our young people, to make at least one offering each year to the National Board of Christian Endeavor of the Disciples of Christ; to make that offering as large as it can be made; to make it, if possible, on Christian Endeavor Day, the first Sunday in February.

The Endeavor Day program will be sent free of cost to all societies that desire to use it. Write for this program and send the Endeavor Day offering to.

Owosso, Mich., Church Stands Second in State in Missionary Offerings.

Owosso, Mich., church is doing things. Every department shows splendid gain. The Bible-school has an average attendance of at least a hundred more than a year ago. The roof has been repaired, the interior redecorated and floor recarpeted. The decorations are of beautiful design. The Boys' Brigade now numbers 56. The Junior Endeavor seldom has fewer than 40 children in attendance. Missionary needs are not neglected. Owosso stands first, among all Michigan churches, in offerings for Michigan missions. The state's largest church in numbers, Ionia, stands second. J. Frank Green ministers to the Owosso work.

Indianapolis, Third, Makes 1915 Report.

During 1915, Third church, Indianapolis, received 178 new members; $17,432 was raised for all purposes, $7,526 being used toward the building fund, $1,539 for missions and benevolences. The Sunday-school shows an average attendance of 100. With 100 other churches of the city, Third church is now in a simultaneous evangelistic campaign, home forces leading. T. W. Grafton is the able pastor.

A Message From a Famous Teacher.

The editor is in receipt of the annual greeting of Prof. T. M. Iden to his Upper Room Class, at Ann Arbor, Mich. This class now numbers several thousand and Prof. Iden sends each member his annual message. It is full of fine suggestions.

Texas Pastor Gives Useful Christmas Gift to His Congregation.

Robert A. Highsmith, pastor at Mineral Wells, Texas, Central, gave a novel Christmas gift to his congregation this Christmas. The "Mineral Wells Christian," edited and published as a monthly by Mr. Highsmith, will be financed by the pastor as a gift to his congregation. The little publication is put out from a mimeograph duplicator, and makes a fine appearance. Central church has a great field for service. No single church in Texas, few in the brotherhood, have a greater opportunity to reach people. It is estimated that 100,000 persons annually visit Mineral Wells. Through the "Christian" Mr. Highsmith and his leaders expect to be able to cover more efficiently this fruitful field.

Springfield, Ill., First, Has Annual Meeting and Basket Dinner.

At the annual meeting of First church, Springfield, Ill., Frank W. Allen, pastor, successful and progressive work was reported for the past year. A financial summary showed that about $12,000 had been raised for all purposes save that of the indebtedness on the church building; about $22,000 of this has been raised, making a total of about $35,000 for the year. About fifty members were added to the church and all the various organizations were reported in good condition. The Bible-school report showed a good attendance and splendid financial condition. This department is planning an eight weeks' campaign, under the leadership of a specialist, beginning April 1. The purpose of this is to put the school on a thoroughly modern basis. Work of the young people, known as the Fellowship movement, was given special attention. The enrollment of the Fellowship class is about one hundred and fifty. This class is studying life in the light of the teachings of Jesus. Occasionally outside speakers are brought in and an open forum is held for the purpose of discussing public questions pertaining to welfare. The annual meeting was opened by a basket dinner at 6 o'clock with about 200 people present. Dr. Granville A. Hulett, chairman of the official board, presided. Addresses were made by Joseph Farris, representing a large number of people not members of the church who are now supporting its work, and by B. R. Hieronymus, one of the elders of the congregation. A congratulatory letter was read from Miss Rose Armbruster, a member of the congregation who is a missionary in Japan and who, on account of just having left for New York City, was unable to be present. Mr. Farris in his address called attention to the interest taken in the sermons of the Rev. Mr. Allen by persons of all creeds and nationalities and commended the church for its support of a gospel of social justice.

National Benevolent Association Prospers.

Fully a half dozen annuity gifts have been received by the National Benevolent Assoeiation, in the last three or four weeks, writes J. H. Mohorter. The annuity department of the association grows. Recently one gift of $5,000 was made. An offer of a gift of $8,000, real estate, is now under consideration. Mr. Mohorter also states that Otis Hawkins and the managers of the Juliette Fowler Home, Dallas, Tex., are making a strenuous effort to finish the unfinished wing of the new building for children. The Northwest Parliament, consisting of all Disciple preachers in all the Northwestern States, was recently held in Walla Walla. They went in a body to visit the Association's Home for the Aged.

R. P. Shepherd's Institute Lecture Themes.

The following are R. P. Shepherd's lecture themes, in the institute work which he is leading at Bloomington, Ill., First church: "Working the Work of God." "Parenthood." "Life—Temporal and Eternal." "Why Is a Church?" "The Image of God." "The Educational Revolution." "The Religious Revolution." "The Living Christ and War." "The State of Religion in Bloomington." "The Social Revolution."

Disciples' School in Japan Studied by Government Teachers.

Recently the Japanese school teachers from their government schools have visited the Margaret K. Long Girls' School in Tokyo, Japan, which is under Disciples' auspices, for the special purpose of examining the Department of Domestic Science. These teachers have been greatly pleased and this department has been pronounced the finest in the empire. It will help give our already strong school their splendid standing among the Japanese.

Independence, Mo., Church, Gives $28,000 to Kansas City Hospital.

The biggest feature of the 1915 report of the church at Independence, Mo., is the giving by individual members of the congregation of $27,900 toward the new Christian Hospital at Kansas City. This church now has a total membership of 1,025. During the past year 348 persons were added to the membership. Disbursements were made of about $12,000.

Downey Avenue, Indianapolis, Reduces Building Debt.

Downey Avenue church, Indianapolis, during 1915 paid off about $12,000 on its building indebtedness, leaving a balance indebtedness of $8,000. This balance is subscribed for the most part. Fifty-three persons have been added to the congregation during the year making a total membership of 768.

New York Frontier Association Meets.

The Frontier Ministerial Association of Churches of Christ met January 3. H. F. Miller is the new president. F. A. Higgins read a paper on "The Revival of Social Religion." There are seventeen churches in the association, with a total membership of twenty-seven hundred. Eighty-six additions were reported for December. Ministers present were: B. S. Ferrall, John P. Sala, H. F. Miller, F. A. Higgins, W. D. Meir, I. L. Parvin, H. C. Bream, I. E. Reid, A. A. Sebastian, D. C. Tremain, Lawrence Weil, L. M. Moody, W. H. Leonard, Harry Green and George H. Brown.

R. A. Doan Leads in Youngstown, O., Missionary Rally.

A Foreign Missionary Rally was held in First church, Youngstown, Ohio, on January 11. R. A. Doan, assisted by two other workers, was in charge. Maps, charts, books and curios were on exhibition. There were three sessions, the first from ten to twelve o'clock; the afternoon service beginning at two, and the evening meeting at the usual hour of gathering.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—A church building has been purchased from the Episcopalians by the congregation at Sandusky, O., where R. C. Lemon ministers.

—Dr. H. L. Willett is to visit New York City and Philadelphia for several addresses about the middle of February.

—Second church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., is erecting a $30,000 brick building of twenty-three rooms. The main auditorium is to seat 650. Perry Schuler ministers to this field.

—Dr. and Mrs. Osgood, whose furlough was due this year, are remaining on the field another year for the reason that it will be more convenient for their children to enter school later and be placed in proper grades next year.

—The annual Brotherhood banquet of the men of Wilson Avenue church, Columbus, O., J. J. Tisdall, minister, was held January 14. Gov. Frank B. Willis made the principal address.

—C. C. Cline, well known to the brotherhood and now pastor of First church, Pine Bluff, Ark., has issued an appeal to the "McGarvey Boys" of the '70's and '80's to assist in establishing a McGarvey Institute at Daytona, Florida.

—I. N. McCash, president of Spokane University, Spokane, Wash., began a meeting with H. E. Van Horn and First church, Oklahoma City, Okla., January 2. Ray Howard Crittenden, formerly of Los Angeles, began his service as musical director of the church with the beginning of the meeting.

—Stuart Street church, Springfield, Ill., F. H. Vernor, minister, gave a banquet to the men the evening of January 6. Elders and deacons were ordained January 2. The quarterly assembly of the congregation was held the evening of January 12.

—Prof. James Miller, of the Department of English in Milligan College, reports that the work in that institution is going forward without interruption, despite the loss of the new boys' dormitory by fire during the holidays.

—A residence has been purchased by the congregation at Colfax, Ills., to be remodeled and used as a parsonage. Improvements are also to be made upon the house of worship. Charles Grant MacNeill is the minister.

—Leander Lane, J. N. Smith, J. C. Hay, D. W. Mizner and D. R. Dungan, of Southern California, are arranging the preliminary meeting looking to the formation of a Veteran Preachers' Association composed of men over sixty-five years of age. A membeship of twenty-five is expected.

—Ninth Street Church, Washington, D. C.—George A. Miller, minister—has purchased three residences adjoining its house of worship and will in the spring raze these and erect upon the site a modern Bible-school building to cost about$25,000.

—A new building is being erected by the congregation at Payette, Ida.—Benj. Smith, minister. It is a modern structure adapted to Bible-school work.

—L. C. Howe, of Noblesville, is preaching a series of community sermons.

—George L. Snively dedicated a fine $5,000 basement annex at First church, Warrensburg, Mo., on Jan. 2. Over a thousand persons were served at an old fashioned basket dinner. Charles E. Jackson is pastor of this church. An inspiring feature of the day's work was the coming forward of sixteen persons to make the good confession.

—Report comes that K. F. Nance, who recently resigned from the work at Hutchinson, Kan., because of ill health, is much better. Mr. Nance is recuperating at Hot Springs, Ark.

—The church at DeLand, Ill., celebrated the twentieth anniversary of the erection of its building on Jan. 9. L. O. Lehman, field secretary of Eureka, gave the chief address.

—C. W. Cauble successfully dedicated the beautiful East Lynn church, of Anderson, Ind., on December 12. Mr. Cauble is coming into recognition as a master in the dedication of churches.

—The church at Baker, Ore., W. G. Scates, pastor, on Jan. 2, burned a $1,000 note, contracted two years ago at the time of the erection of the new building. This event was followed with a revival in which T. G. Handsaker, of Heppner, did the preaching.

—P. H. Welshimer recently addressed three hundred members of the Masonic Lodge, who attended First church, Canton, O., in a body on St. John's Day. Mr. Welshimer spoke on the theme, "John, the Beloved."

—C. W. Flewelling, pastor at Ashtabula, O., was presented by his congregation with a Christmas gift of $86.

—Lenox Avenue Union church, New York City, recently featured "Les Miserables" in motion pictures.

—E. F. Daugherty, pastor at Vincennes, Ind., reports that a religious census was recently taken of the city, in which a number of First church men gave assistance. An every member canvass has been planned by Mr. Daugherty for February 13.

—J. H. O. Smith, former pastor of First church, Oklahoma City, was recently banqueted by the Chamber of Commerce of that city.

—W. G. Kershner, new pastor at First church, Muncie, Ind., was the speaker at a recent meeting of the Personal Workers' League of Alexandria, Ind.

—First church, Long Beach, Cal., is planning to erect a $100,000 building.

—E. L. Day, pastor at North Park church, Indianapolis, addressed a recent meeting of the Boy's Y. M. C. A., of that city.

—J. W. Underwood, pastor at Central church, Anderson, Ind., has been elected to the vice-presidency of the newly organized Church Federation of Indiana. Promoters of the federation, from various parts of Indiana, expect the new organization to be a dominant factor in the spiritual welfare of the state in the future, and the purpose is to bring the Protestant churches of Indiana into unity of action in movements for the uplift of all the people, whether they live in cities, towns or on farms, or whether they are within or without the church.

Prohibition Essay Contest

A friend of national prohibition authorizes me to say that he will contribute twenty-five dollars in cash to writers of short articles on any phase of the present temperance advance, prizes to be awarded to the three writers who present the most satisfactory papers. The first prize to be $12, the second $8 and the third $5.

Briefly stated, the conditions of this contest are as follows:

1. Any one may compete.
2. The articles to be limited to 1,000 words.
3. The judges will give special consideration to the outline form of the articles, that is to say, the articles may suggest in outline material for a finished address.
4. All articles are to be sent to the office of the American Temperance Board, Indianapolis, Ind., not later than March 15, 1916.
5. All articles to become the property of the above board for such use as the board may make of them.
6. All articles will be submitted without names or other marks of identification to competent judges who will pass upon the papers and make the awards.

It seems to me that literally thousands of temperance enthusiasts should enter this contest. In particular, I would urge upon our ministers that they prepare with great care such an article, since it might be used as the basis of a stirring prohibition message, such as every preacher should be using these days.

Now let the contest begin. Address all inquiries and manuscripts to the National Headquarters of the American Temperance Board, Indianapolis, Ind.

L. E. Sellers, National Secretary.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Dr. Willett's Book Now Ready

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, Ph. D.

Vol. I Ready for Mailing at $1.00

A thrilling and luminous interpretation of the Old Testament prophets, setting forth the historical situation within which each prophet lived and toward which his message was directed, and reconstructing for the modern reader the biographical story of each one of the immortal preachers of righteousness in ancient Israel. These two volumes have a tremendous value for the time in which we live—a time of war and fear of war. Dr. Willett makes each prophet live anew. No Bible student can understand the full message of the Bible who does not have a vivid grasp of the messages of Israel's prophets. There is no writer or teacher in America or Europe who has come nearer weaving the messages of these ancient moral leaders into the warp and woof of his own soul than has Professor Willett. His treatment in these two volumes will be not only a standard among scholars but an inspiration to the rank and file of Christian people for years to come.

What Now Hinders Unity?

IMMERSION-BAPTISM AND THE HISTORIC EPISCOPATE—THESE ARE THE TWO POINTS AT WHICH THE PROGRAM OF CHRISTIAN UNITY RUBS.

They are the outstanding, if not the only remaining, obstacles in the way of union, where union is earnestly desired. This is not to say that all now remaining to be done is to solve these two problems and we will have union. Far from it. What clogs the wheels of union more even than conscientious differences over doctrines and practices is the sheer sodden inertia of denominationalism. Property is involved; personal leadership is involved; pride is involved; a clannish-tempered sectarian press is involved; ignorance, and lack of vision and desire are involved. All these make up the fundamental problem of Christian unity.

But where the passion for unity has been born, where the vision has been vouchsafed, where insight into the will of Christ is not blurred by property interests or personalities or a press whose very life depends upon the preservation of the clan spirit, there the problem revolves mainly around the two questions of status involved in the dogmas of immersion-baptism and Episcopal ordination.

The question of creed is not any longer insurmountable. The great evangelical denominations are getting along practically nowadays without the use of human creeds.

The question of name is rapidly solving itself. The pride of name is relaxing. Federation has been rich with suggestion at this point. "The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America" is a title in which much of the pride of sectarian names is being sunk.

The question of open or close communion has lost its sharpness in the last one hundred years. Close communion, while not formally established, was in the time of Thomas Campbell the common practice of most sects. Today it survives in the Baptist denomination alone, and then only in the less progressive communities.

The question of ritual, it is now seen, presents no great difficulty. Even the Episcopal church tends to freely grant the right of the local congregation to adopt its own type of service without prejudicing its relation to its sister congregations.

Thus the mists are clearing away.

But as they lift, two institutions stand out in the pathway of unity, holding within themselves the conscientious convictions of their respective partisans.

One of these, the historic Episcopate, concerns itself with the status of the ministry. The other, immersion-baptism, concerns itself with the status of church membership.

The immersionist bodies raise the question of membership status by refusing to receive into their churches those Christians who have been baptized by some other mode than immersion.

The Episcopalian communion raises the question of ministerial status in its dogma of apostolic succession, refusing to acknowledge as a minister of the Church of Christ one who has not been ordained within this line of apostolic succession.

These two institutions, resting upon the basis of dogmas, are the rubbing places of all the plans for union that have been as yet devised.

There can be no union so long as one party to the union invalidates by its teaching and practice the status of the ministry of the other participants in the union.

Much less can a union be attained while one section of the Church refuses to give full and complete recognition of the churchly status, as well as the Christian character, of the membership of other sections of the Church.

Evidences multiply that in the coming World Conference on Faith and Order, to be held at the close of the war, the question of clerical ordination will be a central theme of discussion. It is now plain that, leaving Roman and Greek Catholicism out of account, the Episcopal communion will insist upon its episcopacy as essential to Church unity.

Those of us who are democrats in religion as well as in politics, have our minds pretty well made up on the issue which will thus be precipitated. But it will do no harm to study meanwhile as carefully as we may the claims and considerations put forward by Episcopacy for itself.

With respect to the use of the dogma of immersion-baptism in such a way as to put a sectarian limitation upon the churches that practice it, the Disciples and Baptists are now undertaking a re-examination of their traditional procedure. One after another leading congregations of the Baptist faith are taking down the barriers that shut out those whom Christ has received into his Church. Recently the great Fountain St. Baptist church, of Grand Rapids, Mich., adopted the practice of Christian unity in its local congregation.

Earnest men and broad-visioned congregations among the Disciples of Christ are today facing this question with troubled hearts.

The problem disturbs Disciples more acutely than it disturbs Baptists because Baptists do not have the same feeling for Christian unity that Disciples have. Baptists have never questioned their right to be a separate and exclusive sect. They accept frankly the denominational order of the Church. It has never occurred to them as a body that the denominational order is wrong and that it is wrong to be a denomination.

Therefore Baptists, as a whole, are not disturbed with a sense of inconsistency in confining their fellowship to those only who were immersed at baptism.

But in the case of Disciples the passion for unity is the root out of which this movement has grown. They cannot admit their right to practice anything whatever that makes them a separate sect, that excludes from them any one whom Christ has received into his Church.

Therefore, Disciples are troubled not only with a sense of inconsistency, but of wrong-doing, when they perceive

The Men and Millions Movement

With a Recital of Some of its Achievements.

BY A. E. CORY AND R. H. MILLER.

THE Men and Millions Movement is just entering upon the most important phase of its development. The offer of R. A. Long of Kansas City, Missouri, to give one million dollars on condition that five million three hundred thousand additional be raised in individual pledges of five hundred dollars or more was a challenge to the whole brotherhood to undertake a monumental task. The success of the Million Dollar Campaign for Foreign Missions had demonstrated both the ability and willingness of the Disciples of Christ to do great things for the enlargement of the kingdom. The Christian men who make up the Business Men's Commission of the movement, and others in various sections of America who were enlisted in the Million Dollar Campaign began to study the situation of all the interests represented by the Christian church. Individual study and various campaigns had convinced a great number of men and women in the churches that the time was at hand for a great forward movement which should include every interest of the brotherhood. Unity which had proven so splendidly effective in faith would be equally effective in work. That the minds and hearts of men and women were prepared for a great united campaign which should seek the enlargement of all the organized activities of the Disciples of Christ, has been manifested in the approval given the Men and Millions Movement on every hand.

HOW THE MOVEMENT HAS BEEN RECEIVED.

It has not been regarded as extraneous or self-seeking. The societies and colleges have been unswervingly loyal to every article of agreement and have worked together in perfect unity. The movement has been received by pastors and congregations with great cordiality. The district "set-up" conferences have been attended by large groups of representatives of the churches, and these have borne testimony to the value of the conferences to all the work of the church. The movement has become, in a very significant way, a ministry to the local church. The teams visiting the churches have given sympathetic consideration to local problems and strengthened all departments of church activity through a co-ordination of the whole task. The fellowship of team and pastor during the local campaign has been mutually helpful. The team has magnified the evangelism of stewardship in money and life, and brought to pastor and people the great demonstration of prevailing prayer. The churches have not been exploited for the movement, but in every case there has been the fellowship of mutual interest by which spiritual values have been exchanged for gifts of money and men.

There has been a lack in understanding of the relation of the church to the whole task. The cities have been cultivated and informed through numerous educational agencies and visitations, but the smaller and more remote places have had few opportunities of knowledge and stimulus. These churches have been troubled because of unequal emphasis placed on the various offerings, and have eagerly sought instruction and help in arranging budgets more nearly representative of all the interests of the kingdom.

THE EDUCATIONAL WORK OF THE MOVEMENT.

Some of the best meetings held have been those in which members of the team and pastors and Official Boards have frankly discussed the business of the church as related to the local work and the world task. The educational work of the movement cannot be easily tabulated, but it far exceeds even the great results obtained in money and volunteers. Larger regular offerings for the local work and missions, the developed sense of stewardship in individuals, and the more frequent consecration of life to the ministry and missionary service will register how needful and effective has been this work of agitation and instruction. The Men and Millions Movement then is a movement and not a campaign. Above and beyond the stated objects is the great service to the brotherhood in this hour when it is emerging as a world force and inviting obligations and receiving attention as never before.

The woes of the world are testing the faith of men. A great obligation lies upon the church in America and vast opportunities invite the Disciples to go forward. The movement is a testimony to faith and a promise to accept opportunity and fulfill obligation. Not only has the movement called out large pledges of money and many volunteers for the fields, but resources of wealth and talent have been released in the local church itself. Pastors have testified to the beneficial effects following visitation of the team which indicates that the movement has been a real evangelism among the churches.

Secretaries A. E. Cory and R. H. Miller, of the Men and Millions Movement.

RESULTS UP TO DATE.

Four states have been visited by the movement: Texas, Kentucky, Illinois and Missouri. The work has been completed in Texas and Illinois only. The campaign was conducted in Texas in the winter and spring of 1914. $500,000 was secured in pledges. The work was splendidly launched in Texas. Churches and individuals responded generously to give the movement its initial impulse. Kentucky received the movement for a period following the Atlanta Convention. The country had not yet recovered from the panic following the outbreak of war in Europe, and the campaign operated under most difficult conditions. But the churches visited received the teams cordially and responded heroically. Only a few of the centers were visited. A total of $110,000 was subscribed.

The Every Member Canvass was presented in the churches. The Life Call was put forth in churches, schools and colleges. Eighty-seven Life Cards were signed, seven volunteers for foreign missions were secured, and sixteen indicated their purpose to enter the Christian ministry. The spirit of sacrifice and heroism endowed both the churches and the representatives of the movement.

As the campaign entered Kentucky many doubts and fears were expressed of the advisability of continuing the work under such difficult and unpromising conditions. But the work in the state both justified and stimulated faith. Sacrificial giving, heroic enlistment of life, and marvelous answers to prayer testified the approval of God and men. The Kentucky campaign tested and co-ordinated the movement.

The campaign in Illinois began January 12, 1915, at Decatur. One hundred and fifty places were visited by the teams. Everywhere both pastors and congregations gave the movement most cordial reception. The total amount of pledges received was $385,000; 735 Life Cards were signed, 30 persons volunteered for the foreign field.

The Missouri campaign was opened in Sedalia, September 15. Three districts have been visited with the result in signed pledges of $250,000. In Missouri, as in other states canvassed, there are individuals who in the follow up work will undoubtedly enlist in the movement for large sums.

In Missouri, Life meetings were held in all the churches visited, and in many schools and colleges. Six hundred and sixteen persons signed Declaration Cards, forty-four enrolled as volunteers. Five hundred and fourteen high-school pupils expressed intention of entering college for preparation for Christian service.

THE THREEFOLD AIM.

Under the increasing pressure of the world task and the growing sense of unity in all Christian work the movement has, during the past year, experienced an equalizing of emphasis upon the threefold aims. The practical test of the campaign has proven the essential interrelation of the three ideals: To secure $6,000,000 in personal gifts for missions, education, and benevolence; to enlist a thousand workers for the fields at home and abroad; to introduce the Every Member Canvass in every church. "Useless each without the other."

The counsels of the Louisville and Toronto Conventions, and the Business Men's Commission have been justified in experience under this powerful triumvirate of purposes. The aim of $6,300,000 in personal gifts has been an outstanding appeal to this generation of Christians of all brotherhoods. It has aroused the churches; it has quickened the consciences of men; it has been a mighty demonstration of faith and vitality; it has wrought a revival of works; it has given multitudes of Disciples a new sense of fellowship with the Lord; it has stimulated interest and investment in every field of Christian enterprise; it has promoted unity; and it has provoked emulation.

Men and women who had been giving in hundreds give under the movement by the thousands. The whole level of individual giving has been lifted. Many who have been generous givers in the past and who have made generous provision for the separate societies, express their interest by large gifts to the united task because of what it means even aside from direct benefit to the societies involved. There has been pledged $3,150,000. to be paid on or before December 1, 1921.

In each church visited the Every Member Canvass has been presented in detail by a conference with pastor and members of the Official Board. These meetings have been among the most effective held. In them the whole question of local and missionary support has been discussed. The conferences have discovered that there is need in the majority of churches of education in the fundamentals of sound finance.

A "STANDARD PLAN."

At Sedalia, in September a Conference of State Secretaries and District Superintendents from ten states was held. A standard plan for presentation of the Every Member Canvass was developed and steps taken for its effective introduction into every church in the states represented.

Reports from these states and the churches visited by the teams of the movement indicate that the canvass is being carried through with satisfaction and success. We hope that in a few years the standard plan shall be universally adopted in the churches and be the means of solving the problems of local and missionary finance.

In every church and school visited, carefully selected groups of young people have listened to the appeal for a thousand workers. The world as a field of opportunity has been portrayed; various forms of Christian service set forth; illustrations of unselfishness and heroism from the lives of missionaries have been given; the necessity for thorough preparation emphasized and the call for the best issued. The aim of the movement is "one thousand workers," carefully chosen, adequately prepared, thoroughly equipped and sent forth to the needy fields. While the main object is to secure this thousand, a valuable by-product of the campaign will be tens of thousands of young people aroused to make preparation for definite forms of Christian service. This intensive and extensive campaign means to produce a better trained and more thoroughly equipped and devoted generation of Christians for the whole task of the church.

A card of declaration prepared for use in meetings in the churches with young people of the high-school grade contains a pledge to study the world fields with reference to opportunities for life investment, to pray and study the Word and consult Christian friends to learn what form of service to undertake and to prepare in a Christian college for the Christian vocation.

Under this pledge thousands of young people have recorded their purpose to dedicate their lives to Christ, and to secure the best possible training for his service.

The influence of these meetings with young people has already been registered in increased attendance at Christian colleges within the fields covered by the campaign.

"LIFE MEETINGS."

The call for the enlistment of life has done much to break down the un-Christian prejudice of Christian parents which has opposed the purpose of children to serve as ministers and missionaries. The claims of Christ and the world's need have come with new significance to hundreds of Christian homes where he now abides in more real and comforting presence because of the dedication of children to his cause. The family altar has been restored both for worship and sacrifice.

Life meetings conducted in the colleges and universities have issued the direct appeal for volunteers. These meetings have been unparalleled in spiritual power. The call for supreme and final decisions has changed the lives of hundreds of young men and women and put new motives into Christian education. In connection with all college meetings, personal interviews have been held with scores of students. In the colleges volunteers have been secured among the "honor" students. Teachers and professors have offered themselves to foreign service. The ministry of Christ has been exalted. The most thorough preparation for the best equipped life has been urged upon those who would serve him. Thousands who will not enter the ministry or go to the "far fields" will have a new conception of Christian service. The great challenge will give direction to Bible teaching and study, and lead Christian faith to more definite and adequate expression in the local church.

A very significant and gratifying development has been in the contribution the movement has been able to make to similar undertakings in other brotherhoods. Others have undertaken to raise larger sums of money than $6,300,000, but for the first time the whole task of a great brotherhood of Christians has been closely correlated and lifted at one time.

THE MOVEMENT AND THE GREATER CHRISTIAN WORLD.

The dominant note of unity has caught the attention of the Christian world. Everywhere it has been interpreted as an expression of, and contribution to Christian unity as well as a sincere and worthy endeavor to accomplish the whole task of the church. The comprehensive aim, the appeal to individuals, the spirit of prayer, the equal emphasis on the calls for money and life, the consideration of the problems of the local church, the bigness and completeness of the task have attracted comment and imitation.

World conditions have caused the campaign to be conducted under heart-breaking strain. A movement which began in prayer and made foolish the wisdom of men has proceeded in successive victories, "not by might nor by power but by my spirit."

During the year 1916 the movement will visit a group of the great cities of America. It will be the crucial and deciding effort of the whole campaign. "God is able."

The secretaries ask that Disciples everywhere give themselves to strong intercession, that the work of the year may receive from the great head of the church the endowment of grace and power and the plain leading of his spirit which shall result in a great outpouring of money and life. May the testimony of the Disciples in this time of doubt and distress bear to the whole world a conviction of our loyalty to Christ and our devotion to his kingdom.

REMARKS ABOUT KINGS.

(God said, "I am tired of kings."—Emerson.)

God said, "I am tired of kings,"
But that was a long while ago;
And meantime man said, "No—
I like their looks in their robes and rings."

So he crowned a few more,
And they went on playing the game as before,
Fighting and spoiling things.

Man said, "I am tired of kings,
Sons of the robber chiefs of yore;
They make me pay for their lust and their war;
I am the puppet, they pull the strings;
The blood of my heart is the wine they drink.
I will govern myself for a while, I think,
And see what that brings."

Then God, who made the first remark, smiled in the dark.

—Henry van Dyke.

CHRIST, THE FOUNDATION.

Two young men were arguing about Christianity. "But I have studied in Germany," said the one who didn't believe. "And I have been in Korea," returned the one who did believe. The world may criticise and hack away at the Christian's faith, but they only weary their own tongues and dull their own knives, for he still has a foundation which they have not, and they know it.

"Let the man who has the blues take a map and census table of the world, and estimate how many millions there are who would gladly exchange lots with him, and let him begin on some practicable plan to do all the good he can to as many as he can, and he will soon forget to be despondent."

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

A PERSONAL WORD FROM THE EDITOR

DURING the next several months while I am in attendance at the Panama Congress and the Regional Conferences in the capital cities of South America the responsibilities of the editorial department of The Christan Century will be carried by Dr. Willett, contributing editor. Rev. Orvis F. Jordan, whose department, The Larger Christian World, gives this paper a distinctive character among religious journals, will continue his contributions, and Mr. Thomas C. Clark, the office editor, will as usual, edit the Disciples' Table Talk and manage the making up of the paper.

The sense of hazard that an editor might feel in leaving his work for so long a journey is quite impossible to entertain when one's work is resting in hands so competent and generous as these. I cannot take my leave without assuring these co-workers in advance, in the presence of all our readers, of my confidence and appreciation.

It is quite impossible, too, for me to repress the prompting to publicly acknowledge the fund that has been made up with which to finance my long and necessarily expensive journey. In writing of it, President Charles T. Paul, of the College of Missions, regretted that there was no central organization among us Disciples to underwrite the expenses of a mission such as that I have been appointed to undertake. I am sure, however, that no central treasury's appropriation of a fund could have stirred my heart so profoundly as has the sheaf of personal gifts sent for this purpose to President Paul and which he has just forwarded to me. From all parts of the country these checks have come. My sense of gratitude is overwhelming. There are no words that I can say that satisfy in any degree the gratitude I feel for the gifts and the words of Godspeed that have accompanied them. My response must be, at last, in terms of the quality of service I may be able to render the great cause which they and I, as well as all readers of The Christian Century, share together.

The amount of editorial labor attaching to the office to which I have been appointed will not preclude me, I wish our readers to understand, from writing regularly and often to The Christian Century concerning the remarkable experiences that are in store for those who are privileged, as I am, to attend the series of conferences which will inevitably mark a new era in the Christian activities of the Western Hemisphere.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON.

CONGREGATIONALISTS AND DISCIPLES

CONSIDERATION of plans for closer relations between the Disciples of Christ and the Congregationalists have been much discussed of late both in the press of the two bodies and in representative gatherings.

It is natural that there should be two strongly contrasted views regarding the practicability of co-operation, if not union. It is usually the case that the first discussions of any such theme elicit both types of sentiment.

The first is that of the men who believe such an effort should be made and urge it with enthusiasm. They are likely to consider the most progressive elements in both denominations and to feel that such obstacles as are met can be surmounted easily.

On the other hand there is a much larger body of people who regard themselves as practical, and who are impressed by the difficulties which unquestionably lie in the way of such an effort. They know something of the radical difference between the two bodies in history, doctrine, practice and temper, and are not easily persuaded that union is possible.

We believe both of these attitudes to be partly right and partly wrong, and that between them there lies not only the mood of frank recognition of difficulties, but also of earnest desire that something should be done and resolute determination to make the effort.

The differences between Disciples and Congregationalists are many and cannot be ignored. Yet they are no greater than those between different groups of Disciples, or for that matter, of Congregationalists. In the fundamentals of Christian belief and practice the two bodies are closer together than either of them is to any other Christian body. In origin and doctrinal inheritance the Congregationalists are closely related to the Presbyterians, but in many other regards, the most important of which are church organization and government, the two bodies are some distance apart. In many regards the Disciples and the Baptists are closer together. At one time they were actually united for a brief period, and there seems no good reason why they should not once more come into vital union. Yet in most other particulars than the practice of baptism they are really less closely relatable than Disciples and Congregationalists.

The single feature which seems to make close relations with Congregationalists impracticable is this same matter of immersion, and at first the difficulty seems insuperable. It is not conceivable that the Disciples will abandon the practice of immersion, nor ought they so to do. On the other hand it is just as unlikely that the Congregationalists will adopt immersion as their form of baptism. But between these two positions there are practicable methods of co-operation and union. Congregationalists practice immersion when it is desired by the candidate. Many Congregationalists are favorable to the substitution of some form of infant consecration for infant baptism. In a number of churches of the Disciples this latter practice prevails as a proper recognition of the child's place in the regard of the church. Furthermore, an increasing number of churches among the Disciples receive members from Congregational or other churches into partial or complete membership, recognizing the validity of their baptism and their personal responsibility in this as all other Christian duties.

Certainly somewhere in this region of closer approximation to mutual understanding in spirit and practice there is room for the actual unity of churches representing two bodies which are so near alike in church government, in belief and, on the upper levels of their membership, in temper.

The approaches to union will be made less in formal pronouncements than in practical co-operation in local fields. There are places where one or the other, and perhaps both, have weak and struggling congregations. They ought to unite in some manner which would compromise no convictions and would retain their complete relationship with both denominations. This is already accomplished in a number of places and the numbers ought to increase.

Nor are we forgetting the fact that there is a steady increase of sentiment among the Disciples in favor of such forms of practical union with Baptist churches, where it can be accomplished without loss of the values of loyalty and historic testimony. It is a time for sincere experiments in the direction of such unity in such fields as shall demonstrate the essential oneness of the people of God and shall diminish the scandal of a divided church. H. L. W.

THE MEANING OF PREPAREDNESS

IT IS increasingly clear that the American people are being skilfully and assiduously indoctrinated with the ideal of military equipment as the only safeguard against the perils which are said to beset us on every side.

No such obsession has seized upon our national spirit since actual war days. It is astonishing to what extent the press of the nation is urging this plunge into militaristic adventure. We have frequently asked who is paying the cost of this enormous propaganda. But with the huge profits arising from the manufacture of munitions for the fighting nations abroad and the prospect of being able to continue indefinitely the same output for an alarmed people at home, the answer seems sufficiently obvious.

There is, however, one amusing feature about this pathetic business of imaginary war scares and very real descent to war levels of sentiment. It is the complexity of opinion which seems to prevail among the advocates of preparedness. No two of them agree as to just how much preparedness we need. There are at least four sets of opinions advocated by public leaders, varying in pretentiousness from the policy of the President to that of the board of military and naval experts. A year ago Mr. Wilson was definitely opposed to a policy of military enlargement; today he is preparing to make a pilgrimage to the chief centers of the nation in advocacy of a greatly enlarged scheme of "national defense." Has he really changed his mind?

And yet the President's plan is so far short of the desires of men who call themselves moderate advocates of national readiness that he is receiving an avalanche of invective for his hesitance in recommending more ambitious things.

In fact, the air is full of denunciation. The terms "coward" and "poltroon" are inexpensive and useful, and the man who wants a somewhat larger degree of preparedness than his neighbor does not hesitate to accuse him of being cowardly and unpatriotic. It is simply a question of the degree to which a man thinks we ought to go in order to be prepared. Anything less than one's own estimate could, of course, be urged only by a "coward" or a "mollycoddle!" In fact, the remark of a recent writer seems increasingly true that, "In America we are fast getting into the frame of mind where the scale of courage is measured by what the wildest jingo proposes as the correct method of licking creation."

Of course, this kind of oratory is quite inexpensive and sounds patriotic on first consideration. Yet, it is a serious question as to the real coward in the present moment. Is it more cowardly to take time to think the question through and ask seriously whither this total reversal of our national policy is going to carry us, than it is to fall in easily with a volatile public sentiment and shout for "preparedness" and "defense"? We are not pacifists if we understand the true meanings of that term, but we are wondering how the student of history looking back upon these moments of our national life will assess this outburst of militarism on the part of a people who have always insisted that their ideals and methods were not those which depended upon the sword, but rather upon education and Christianity.

Perhaps, after all, the student of history will not be permitted to comment meditatively upon this epoch in our history, but will be left only the more tragic duty of recording the inevitable result of militaristic preparedness here as in Europe.

Is it really for defense that we are planning so industriously and vociferously, or is it for war?

DR. JENKINS IN CHICAGO

LAST SUNDAY was a notable day in the calendar of Chicago Disciples. It is expected that once in the year there will be some representative of our brotherhood in the university pulpit from outside of Chicago. This year that honor fell to Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, of the Linwood Blvd. church in Kansas City.

The service rendered by Dr. Jenkins on this occasion was gratifying to the large number of Disciples who were present in the congregation at Mandel Hall. There are few preachers among the Disciples who command the attention of an audience so continuously as does this Kansas City minister.

In the afternoon there was held at the First Methodist church, in the center of the city, a mass meeting of Chicago Disciples under the direction of the City Mission Board, and Dr. Jenkins was the speaker. His message was finely adapted to the occasion. He discussed the problems of the city church as one long familiar with the work of the Disciples in such centers, and his message was an inspiration and delight to all who heard him.

In the evening an unusually large audience at Memorial church listened to a splendid lecture on Booker T. Washington. Dr. Jenkins has the ability to take the life story of such a citizen of the republic as the great negro educator and make it vital and fascinating.

Lest he should have too much leisure time upon his hands during his stay in Chicago, Dr. Jenkins was invited to address the Ministerial Association Monday forenoon on the subject of "Preparedness." That the presentation of the theme was forceful and that the discussion which followed was lively, goes with the saying.

The visit of Dr. Jenkins to Chicago has left the Disciples of this city under obligation to him and to the Linwood Boulevard church. Such visits help us to understand the extended influence of Dr. Jenkins in his own pulpit and in Kansas City.

WHAT NOW HINDERS UNITY?

that the radius of the circle of their fellowship stops short of the full length of that of the Church of Christ.

What disposition of these two obstacles to unity will be made can hardly be a matter of doubt to a mind accustomed to take account of the movements of ideal and fraternal forces in the sphere of religion.

The Episcopalians must and no doubt will find a way both to preserve their Episcopate and ultimately to extend it over the whole Church without demanding the re-ordination of the present Protestant ministry.

And the immersion practicing bodies must adopt the practice already adopted by many of their local congregations by which immersion may be given its full chance to become the universal practice without demanding the rebaptism of the present unimmersed portion of the Church of Christ.

In this way, and in this way alone, lie the possibilities of Christian reconciliation. C. C. M.

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Presbyterians for Preparedness.

The Continent, a Presbyterian journal, recently tested the sentiment of Presbyterian preachers on preparedness by sending every tenth man listed in the yearbook a post card inquiring his views on the subject. The first question: Are you in favor of complete disarmament? was answered in the affirmative by seventy-two and in the negative by 260. The question: Are you in favor of an army and navy sufficient in numbers and efficiency to withstand attack while new forces are being organized? was answered in the affirmative by 275 and in the negative by fifty. The question: Do you believe the teaching them to march and drill, with the physical training necessary to give them a good "setting-up" and endurance for camp life, would tend to create in American boys an appetite for war? was answered in the affirmative by ninety-one and in the negative by 238. In reply to the question: Assuming that all war is wrong and unnecessary, do you believe that it should be the policy of the United States to ignore the possibility of attack by some nation that does not accept that belief, that is unpersuaded by our altruistic attitude, and which is undisturbed by what other nations may think of its actions? fifty-seven expressed themselves in the affirmative and 260 in the negative.

Boy Scouts Have a Bible.

The Boy Scout Movement has published a Bible bound in khaki which is suitable to accompany the boys on hikes. As a foreword the executive committee has published the following in every copy of the Boy Scout's Bible: "The movement declares its conviction that no boy can grow up into the best sort of citizenship without acknowledging his obligation to God. Furthermore, it is the belief of many that scouting presents greater opportunities for the development of the boy religiously than any other movement instituted solely for boys. One of these opportunities is represented in the camp fire, where the boy is so keenly sensitive to every unseen influence. There is the ideal place for the reading or the telling of the age-long stories of the Bible, sure to inspire to high thinking and high living."

Wants Apocryphal Books Back.

The Protestant understanding of the canon of Holy Scripture has been attacked by a "Catholic" priest of the Protestant Episcopal church. He wants the apocryphal books restored, just as they used to be in the old family Bibles, and as they are still found in the Roman Catholic Bible. The Rev. Dr. Milo H. Gates, vicar in the chapel of the Intercession, Trinity parish, New York, insists that the omission of the apocrypha is of late origin, and that the Bible even of the reformers included these neglected books. His own denomination takes the attitude that these books may not be used to establish doctrine but may be used "for example of life and instruction of manners."

The Fellowship of Reconciliation.

The utterances of the church papers and of the great preachers of England have been mostly on the side of justifying the present war as the lesser of two evils. There has arisen a group of Christian people of various denominations now numbering several thousands who are making active campaign against war. These are organized into what is known as the Fellowship of Reconciliation, and their preachers are proclaiming in various sections of the United Kingdom that a Christian may not go into war under any circumstances.

Ministers of Chicago Meet Often.

Though each denomination has its own Ministers' Association in Chicago, there are frequent union meetings under the auspices of the Federation Council. These come regularly every two months but there are also special meetings. At the union meeting in the First Methodist church on Jan. 31, there will be an address by Rev. Morton C. Pearson, D. D., executive secretary of the federated churches of Indianapolis. He will speak on evangelism and the meeting is being held to promote simultaneous evangelistic meetings in the different local churches during Lent. On Feb. 14, another union meeting will be held, at which time Dr. Martin D. Hardin will give his much-talked-of lecture 'Civilization at the Cross Roads," an argument for world peace.

Methodists Find Editor for Daily.

The Methodists have a daily newspaper once every four years. It is issued in connection with the general conference of the church which this year will be held at Syracuse, N. Y. They have selected Dr. Stephen J. Herben to be the editor this year. He has twenty years' experience as a Methodist journalist.

New Secretary for The Laymen's Missionary Movement.

Fred B. Fisher, who accepted the call to become Associate General Secretary of the Interdenominational Laymen's Missionary Movement, assumed his duties on January 1. For the past three years Mr. Fisher has been the General Secretary of the Methodist Laymen's Missionary Movement, and it was his enthusiastic leadership which brought to pass the national conventions of Methodist men in Indianapolis, Boston and Columbus. A large number of smaller conventions and institutes have been organized and conducted by him. In his new field Mr. Fisher will give special attention to the conference and convention phase of the work. Mr. Fisher has a strong, virile personality, with a burning missionary passion and his messages appeal to the big, earnest type of laymen. He is exceptionally well equipped for the new work which he has entered. A native of Indiana, he was educated at Asbury College and Boston University with graduate work at Harvard. After graduation he had several years of practical experience in city work in Boston in connection with one of the strong downtown churches, where he organized a group of students in survey work, and had the direction of a constructive program of effort among a mixed population of Greek, Italian and English-speaking people. Later he became a missionary in India and traveled widely in other mission lands as well as in Europe, so he speaks with the authority of actual experience.

Favor Hymn of Vengeance.

In the revision of the Prayer Book of the Episcopalian church in Canada, the third stanza of the British national anthem was omitted. As a result there was considerable agitation in the country and the house of bishops requested the lower house to restore the offending verse. Acceding to this request, the lower house arose and sang right lustily the lines that had been rejected. They are:

"O Lord, our God, arise;
Scatter the enemies,
And make them fall;
Confound their politics,
Frustrate their knavish tricks;
On thee our hopes we fix,
God save us all."

Church Peace Union Opposes Armed Peace.

The Church Peace Union is composed of representatives of Roman Catholics, Protestants and Jews. It has been endowed with $2,000,000 by Andrew Carnegie. It has recently pronounced against the preparedness program and asks that the $250,000,000 now being spent annually for national defense be spent in some other way more useful to the nation.

Preachers of New York Behind Local Option.

The leading ministers of New York City have signed a communication of the Anti-saloon League asking the churches of the entire state to give attention to the proposed bill that will give residential districts in large cities the right to vote on the saloon question. The ministers assert that four-fifths of the population of the state is, under the existing laws, disfranchised on the liquor question. The new bill is called "The Optional Prohibition Referendum Bill."

Bulgaria May Become Roman Catholic.

One of the important results of the present war may be the transfer of Bulgaria from the list of countries professing the Greek Orthodox faith to the Roman Catholic column. In 1870 Bulgaria demanded religious autonomy and as a result of the controversy that ensued the Patriarch of Constantinople declared the Bulgarian church outside the pale of the Orthodox fellowship. It is stated that the prelates of Bulgaria will not resist the change provided the pope will recognize the Orthodox Bulgar prelates. As the Roman church did this in Poland a long time ago, there is now precedent for such a proceeding. It is said that King Ferdinand has long desired such a change. Eighty per cent of Bulgaria is in the Orthodox church and seventeen per cent Mohammedans. There are a few Protestant missions.

HUMBLED AND EXALTED.

Lesson for February 13.

Golden Text: For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might become rich. 2 Corinthians 8:9.

Lesson Philippians 2:1-11.

Memorize verses 5-7.

(1) If there is therefore any exhortation in Christ, if any consolation of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any tender mercies and compassions, (2) make full my joy, that ye be of the same mind, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind; (3) doing nothing through faction or through vainglory, but in lowliness of mind each counting other better than himself; (4) not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others. (5) Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: (6) who, existing in the form of God, counted not the being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped, (7) but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men; (8) and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross. (9) Wherefore also God highly exalted him, and gave unto him the name which is above every name; (10) that in the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things on earth and things under the earth, (11) and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. If there is therefore. Since there is so much in Christ show yourselves children of the kingdom by true humility and unity of spirit.—Exhortation in Christ. If Christ by his example exhorts you.—Consolation of love. One who is called to plead another's cause, an advocate, helper. If the love of Christ is your helper.—Fellowship of the Spirit. Communion with the Holy Spirit.

2. Make full my joy. Complete my joy. My happiness depends upon your conduct in Philippi.—The same mind. Have the same aim and purpose in life. Think the same thing.—The same love. Unity of sentiment. —One accord, of one mind. Harmony of soul, cherishing the one sentiment. Repetition of the thought for sake of emphasis.

3. Doing nothing. Thinking nothing.—Through faction. By way of faction.—Through vainglory. The personal vanity which urges one to fight for his own interests.—Lowliness of mind. Modesty, the absence of assumption.—Counting better. Holding high above, hence humbling oneself in the presence of others.

4. Looking. Fixing attention upon.—His own things. Selfishness is the exact opposite of the mind of Christ. A large amount of the evils and dangers of life flow from selfishness.

5. Have this mind in you. Take the thought of humility. Note the emphasis is in you not among you.—In Christ Jesus. Take Christ as your pattern of humility.

6. Existing in the form of God. He shared the attributes of God. The word is difficult to translate in English, but probably means "essence" rather than "form."—As a thing to be grasped. The existence with God was a great prize, but not too great to be laid aside for the sake of humanity.

7. Emptied himself. Laid aside the glories of heaven that he might win men.—A servant. He took the form of a bond-servant. He sought to be a man of real service to his race.

8. Becoming obedient even unto death. The scriptures exalt the obedience of Jesus. —Yea, the death of the cross. This is the climax of his humility and of his sacrifice for humanity.

9. Wherefore also God highly exalted him. Because of his obedience and humility God exalted him.—The name which is above every name. The name Paul had in mind was Jesus Christ the Lord. See verse 11.

10. Every knee shall bow. In the presence and the influence of the name of Jesus. —Things under the earth. The great persons who once lived but are now dead.

11. To the glory of God the Father. Such universal recognition of Jesus Christ as the Son of God, and our Saviour, would glorify the Father.

What is Humility?

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

The letter which was meant to be a note of thanks for a timely gift from Paul's friends has become the thread upon which are strung many precious gems of Christian thought. None are more beautiful than that concerning the grace of humility. This virtue is the path to greatness. "I believe the first test of a truly great man is his humility," said Ruskin. True humility is not an abject, groveling, self-despising spirit; it is but a right estimate of ourselves as God sees us. True dignity abides with him only who in the silent hour of inward thought, can still respect and revere himself in lowliness of heart.

To have the mind of Christ is to have the humble mind and spirit. Paul coveted for his Philippian friends the mind of his Master. To have the mind of Christ, is to have his way of looking at the world, his way of feeling toward his fellow men, his way of approaching the deep problems of life, and his way of doing the every-day tasks as they come to us. It means that we are one in the secret things we contemplate and love, one in the choice of material out of which our life is made. It is more than learning a code of rules or committing a few precepts; it is rather the achievement of a ruling spirit which possesses and actuates all one says and does and is in the world.

To have this mind is also to be helpful to those about us. It will enable us to make our religion a part of our every-day tasks. We can count others better than ourselves when our minds have been sobered by true humility, and our imaginations have been stimulated so that we can put ourselves in another's place.

A child who had more playthings than she knew what to do with, stubbornly refused to take any of them to the "Giving Christmas" of her Sunday school until she had been to the hospital and had seen for herself the suffering children, and how one poor little doll was cherished by many "little mothers." Face to face with the real need her selfishness changed to the most generous eagerness to give the children all she had.

Ruskin says in the last chapter of his "Modern Painters": "So far as you desire to possess rather than give; so far as you look for power to command instead of to bless; so far as your own prosperity seems to grow out of interest or rivalry of any kind, with other men or nations; so long as the hope before you is for supremacy instead of love, and your desire to be greatest instead of least, first instead of last, so long are you serving the Lord of all that is last and least in the world."

The life of Jesus was lived for others. He is the supreme example of love, the greatest accomplishment of history.

James Buckham has expressed this thought in the following lines:

"Large is the life that flows for others' sakes,
Expends its best, its noblest effort makes.
Devotion rounds the man and makes him whole:
Love is the measure of the human soul."

A SUGGESTIVE PROGRAM FOR MINISTERS.

The following was published by the Congregationalist some weeks ago as "One Minister's Start for the Autumn." May it not prove suggestive to many ministers at the beginning of the New Year?

I am going to wear intellectual blinkers at the side of the eyes of my mind at least two solid hours every day, that absolutely impervious to wandering thoughts and scattered impressions I may concentrate upon real study.

I am going to be out of bed at six o'clock every week-day that I may get at least one of these hours in before breakfast.

If I can gain some intellectual self-respect in this way, I am then going to try to gain some spiritual efficiency. * * *

I am going to clean up my inner life. There are three distinct demons that have troubled me much in the past that I am going to lay for good this winter. I have been drifting; this is going to be a winter of mastery.

I am going to make a card catalogue with the names of all the young people in my parish, and I am going to go over each card every month, holding each soul in my soul for a moment, and linking each life in some way with the life of our church.

I am going to cut all that has become unreal in my life and conversation, stock public prayers that mean nothing any longer, pulpit phrases that have lost their savor, and all social cowardices and hypocrisies.

Disciples Table Talk

Brotherhood Organized at Anderson, Ind., Central.

A commendable feature in the work of the new brotherhood recently organized at Central church, Anderson, Ind., is that any man in the city may become a member. About a hundred men attended the organization meeting on January 10. Almost without exception the plans for the organization as proposed by the committees in charge, were endorsed and accepted. The meeting date was set for the second Monday night in each month. The second Sunday evening in each month also was chosen as the date for the services at which the men of the Brotherhood will have entire charge. The East Lynn, Arrow Avenue and Ovid churches are uniting with Central church in launching the new society, and the membership in the brotherhood is open to all men who may be interested, whether they belong to any church or not. J. W. Underwood, pastor of Central church, under whose directions the work is being started, made an address on "Brotherhood Vision," in which he explained the work of each of the fifteen committees, outlining their duties and telling what the value of the work would be to the members and to the community. As the men enrolled for membership they were put on whatever committees they preferred, and as others are taken in they, too, will be put to work. The committees organized were: Program, social, advertising, music, devotional, membership, missionary, evangelistic, civic, boys, temperance, fraternal, financial, personal workers, employment.

Missouri Pastor May Run for Governor.

For twenty years A. N. Lindsey has been a pastor in the Christian church, and is now active pastor at Clinton, Mo., and he declares that, should he be elected to the governorship of his state, as his friends are planning he shall be, he will continue to preach every Sunday he is able to do so. Mr. Lindsey is a graduate of Christian University, Canton, Mo., winning the class honors. For several years Mr. Lindsey served the Missouri school as Professor of Science and Political Economy. At present he is one of the Board of Curators. Mr. Lindsey has rendered the State of Missouri efficient and disinterested service for several years as General Secretary of the Missouri Federation of Commercial Clubs. He was also elected, several years ago, Secretary of the Better Roads Federation of the State. He is the President of the Board of Managers of the State Hospital for the Insane at Nevada and is familiar with the real problems and needs connected with all State institutions. Mr. Lindsey says there are two reasons why he should be Governor of Missouri: First, that nobody in the State would be embarrassed in the Governor's presence; second, that he would add to his own brain the best minds in the State in an honest effort to give the commonwealth a disinterested, unselfish and successful business administration. His promise is "A Clean House at the New Capitol." Of his determination to continue preaching should he be elected Governor, he says: "A lawyer does not give up his law, nor a banker his bank, to be Governor and why should I give up the ministry? I am not sliding out of the ministry to get into politics but rather am going to give my best efforts to deepen and strengthen every ministry of every church in the state."

J. L. Garvin in "Community-Upbuilding" Campaigns.

Joseph L. Garvin, of Chicago, formerly pastor of First church, Seattle, Wash., and president of William Woods College, is now in the evangelistic field, and is at present in a series of meetings at Waukegan, Ill. Mr. Garvin goes at his work in rather an unusual way. In his student days Mr. Garvin worked as a reporter on a New York daily and while in Seattle wrote "Garvin's Corner" on the editorial page of the Seattle Star for several years. He has learned to study and analyze situations at first hand and some of his experiences furnish illuminating sidelights upon timely issues of today. The purpose of Mr. Garvin in all his meetings will be not simply to enlist new members for churches, but to revitalize and energize the moral life of the entire community. Mr. Garvin, referring to his work at Waukegan, said: "Towns are awakening as never before to some great unrecognized facts of every day living together, and it is strange to many business men to find that these facts have a white hot religious meaning. The churches are being re-discovered in France and Germany; a new idealism is growing out of the war, and people and preachers are getting together. People are beginning to see that the church belongs to them and is their best asset after all. These city dwellers are beating a path from their caves and homes to the church building again. The churches themselves are cultivating their neighborhoods and seeking ways to get together. They are emphasizing their resemblances. They are helping people. No question is so up-to-date as religion, and people are quick to respond to a vital note. What are we going to do down at the First Christian church? Why, we are going to have a 'get-together' mission for a few days. Nobody will go to sleep. On the other hand, they will keep wide awake."

Cedar Rapids Pastor Seeks Co-operation Between Churches and Business Men.

Closer co-operation between the Cedar Rapids, Ia., churches and the local Advertising Club was urged by Walter M. White, pastor of First church. in an address before the Advertising Club in the auditorium of the church last week. Mr. White declared that the church of today and the church of a generation ago are two entirely different institutions so far as efficiency and methods are concerned. To illustrate his contention, he described the church of his young manhood and then conducted the members of the Advertising Club through the modern plant which houses the congregation and activities of First church. It was pointed out by Mr. White that six years ago the congregation of First church numbered between 300 and 400. Today, he declared, this church touches at least 2,000 people. Not all of these are members of the church but they are influenced by the church. He took no undue credit for this change himself, but declared that it was due to the fact that the church is introducing business methods into its work. According to Mr. White, Cedar Rapids' churches represent an investment of nearly $1,500,000. Such property, in his opinion, is too valuable to be used only one day out of every seven. He asserted that the First church plant is now used seven days out of each week and that the Sunday service is now but one of the many features of the church life. Not that the spiritual life has been neglected but that some attention is now being paid to the temporal condition of the church's people. Mr. White believes in advertising a good thing and he declared that the progress made by his congregation was due, in no small measure, to the publicity given the work and plans of the church. This has been done through paid advertising, newspaper articles, church bulletins, public announcements, personal work and circular letters. Co-operation between the church and the business men was urged by the pastor. "If the community will support the churches," he declared, "the churches will return every dollar invested by giving to industry and business young men and women of sound character."

F. D. Kershner to Lecture at Drake University.

The lectures under the Ministerial Association of Drake University will be given Feb. 7-11, by F. D. Kershner, late president of Texas Christian university, now editor of the Christian Evangelist. His afternoon lectures will be on the general subject: "The Vital Problems of the Christian Religion," as follows: "Christianity in Its Essence." "The Life Worth While." "The Call of the Cross." "Spirituality—What It Is." "The Problem of Suffering." The evening lectures will be on the general theme "The Inspirational Value of Great Literature." This is the course of lectures delivered some years ago by Mr. Kershner, who was for four years staff lecturer for the Extension of University Teaching. Following are the subjects: "Rebellion Against Society." (King Richard III.) "The Optimism of Youth." (Twelfth Night.) "Deeper Problems of the Human Soul." Othello. "World-Chaos." (King Lear.) "Robert Browning, the Apostle of Immortality."

Telling Statistics of Kansas City Churches.

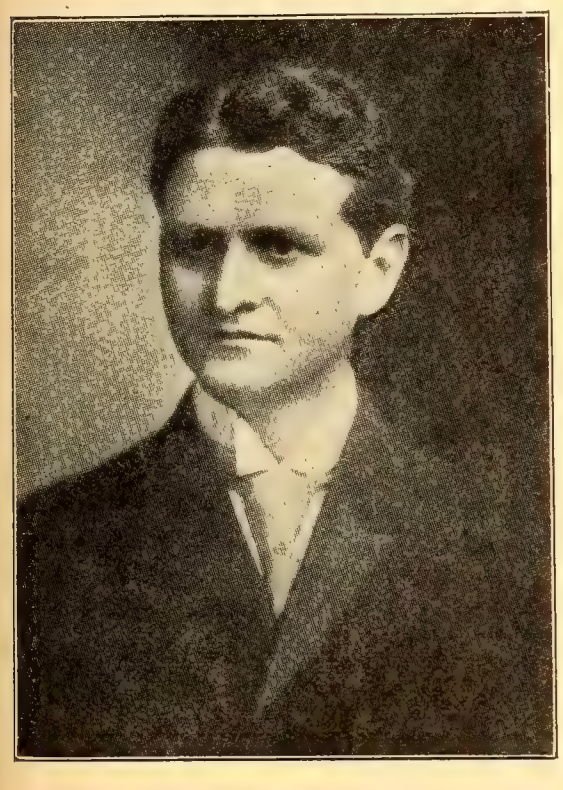
Kansas City, Mo., has a Joint Board, through which the general work of the churches is promoted and unified. Frank L. Bowen is the city missionary. These two facts are largely responsible for the fruitful work being done in the churches of the city on the Kaw. The 18 self-supporting churches and 9 mission churches of Kansas City recently made the following reports: Their church membership is 11,475, their Sunday-school membership, 13,000; their average church attendance, 6,850; average Bible-school attendance, 7,200; their expenditure in 1915 for church maintenance, $82,478; for Bible-school maintenance, $6,350; for new church buildings and repairs, $90,000; and for support of missionary work in Kansas City, under the direction of the Joint Board, $4,065.

Colorado Church Appoints "Centurions."

One of the most encouraging signs of the times in church life today is that the churches are realizing as never before their responsibility to actually exert an influence upon community life. An excellent report of plans comes from Pueblo, Colo., Central church, where W. T. Hilton ministers. Mr. Hilton has worked out a great program of social life and service for Central church, for 1916. Definite plans have been accepted by all departments to unify the social activities of the members and bring them into closer fellowship. The field has been divided into six districts with centurions over each district. These centurions form the pastor's cabinet. A large number of members have joined a personal workers' league and many a prayer circle.

Jefferson City, Mo., Church is "Unanimous."

Jefferson City, Mo., church makes a fine showing in its report for 1915. The church now has 824 members; 401 were added during the year 1915. The church treasurer reports all current bills paid, with a balance of $175.43 on hand. The Sunday-school attendance for the year averaged, per Sunday, 368. This church is also "unanimous," having given something to all Missionary and Benevolent enterprises. A. R. Liverett is the pastor and will soon close his fifth year with this congregation.



The Preacher and "Present-Day Topics."

The feature of a recent meeting of the Christian Pastors' Association, Dallas, Tex., held at Central church, was the reading of a paper by John G. Slayter. His subject was, "To What Extent Should the Minister Discuss Present-Day Topics in His Sermons?" The paper was discussed at considerable length.

Dedication of Franklin Circle Bible School and Community House Cleveland, Ohio

On January 9, F. M. Rains dedicated the new Bible School and Community House erected by Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, Ohio. For over fifteen years the church has been using an "Annex" owned and donated by the late Abram Teachout. Last year the A. Teachout Estate donated the lot on which the old "Annex" stood adjoining the church proper, and upon this the new plant was erected.

The building is a two story brick, each having a mezzanine floor. The first floor contains a gymnasium and bowling alleys with showers and locker rooms adjoining, kitchen and store rooms. The mezzanine contains a double suite of offices and class alcoves. This story is the home of the Junior and Intermediate Departments of the Bible School.

The second story, including the mezzanine, is the home of the Senior and Adult Departments and contains a Friendship parlor, class rooms, club room, pastor's study, baptistry, robing and rest rooms, each story articulating with the church proper, in the first story of which the Beginners and Primaries operate.

The organ is rebuilt, a new heating and ventilating system has been installed throughout, making the plant a complete modern workshop valued at over $100,000.

History of the Church.

The Franklin Circle church was organized in 1842, with twenty-six charter members gathered together on the west side of the Cuyahoga River, then called "Ohio City." The following year the organization moved east of the river near the public square. After a short time the congregation divided, a part going farther east to form what is now the Euclid Avenue church and part returning to the west side where in a few years a frame structure was erected on Franklin Circle, from which the church secured its present name. In 1875 a handsome two-story brick building was erected on the cathedral style of architecture, during the ministry of Alanson Wilcox, who in his eighty-fourth year, an elder in the church, participated in the dedication of the new Bible School home, and preaches at Wellsville, near by, with the regularity of his younger days.

Among the early pastors were A. S. and William Hayden, Lathrop Cooley, A. B. Green, James A. Garfield, B. A. Hinsdale, Silas E. Shepherd, Isaac Errett and J. M. Atwater The more recent ones, S. L. Darsie, J. W. Allen, W. W. Sniff, Edgar D. Jones and E. B. Bagby. Miss Jennie Jenkinson is the present assistant to William F. Rothenburger who is in his eighth year with the church. Six of the above pastors became college presidents and one was elected to the chief place in the nation.

The First Disciples' School in Ohio.

The church has always had a strong body of business men who helped to mould its policy. In it the first Bible School among the Ohio Disciples was organized in 1844. This department has always been emphasized and its growth in recent years demanded a modern equipment. A high educational program has always been urged, the number of its young people in the various colleges last year being fifteen and in the high school of the city, sixty. Each second Sunday evening service of September is planned as "Educational Night," at which time the speakers are drawn from the young people. Since the earliest years of Hiram College the church has sent from one to seven young people each year to "the college on the hill," and in each of these recent years it has presented one of its own young people with a free scholarship.

Missions have held a large place in the program of the church. It was among the earliest to become a living-link. It has long been a living link in the State, American and Foreign Societies, and in 1914 assumed the support of the station of sixteen native workers at Nantungchow, China. From it have sprung the Highland Avenue mission, the West Boulevard and Lakewood churches on the west side of the city, and other Christians of the thousands who have enjoyed its fellowship are scattered throughout the world. In the last ten years it has sent the following young people into the ministry, mission field and association work: John and Marion Bradshaw, Earl and Frank Brown, Miss Cora Hofrichter, C. C. Wilson, Mrs. Edna Kurtz Settlemeyer, China,

Secretary F. M. Rains, who dedicated the new Building.

Harry Knowles; and during a few previous years the following dedicated their lives to the cause of Christ: Louis Betcher, Dr. Fred Cline, J. J. Tisdall and A. Shupe. During the seventy-four years of its history the church has contributed to all purposes approximately $600,000, but its greatest contribution has been in life. Its annual budget is $15,000, $4,000 of which is for missions and benevolences; its present membership approximates 900 and its regular attendance in the Bible School is over 600.

A Congregation With "Vision."

"Franklin Circle" is now a "down-town" church. Its people are scattered over the city. Its splendid growth in the last ten years or more which necessitated a larger equipment is due largely to the vision of its men, many of whom have seen other churches follow the tide and move out. Within a block is a mattress factory operating in one of the first churches of the city. But these men have heard the cry of the great "down-town"; they have seen their opportunity; they have given of their time and means in an unusual way, as have the women, and are now glad to come long distances to promote the kingdom of God in one of the most strategic centers of the Sixth City. The Franklin Circle church is just rounding out its last year in its three-quarters of a century of service, believing that the last quarter in the century is to be the most serviceable of all.

New York Disciple Students to Meet at Dinner.

At Columbia University and in Union Theological Seminary there are more than a score of students representing different colleges of the Disciples of Christ; these have recently organized a Disciples' Club. The purpose of the organization is largely social. Central church will entertain the club at dinner on February 1. This church has assumed the pastoral care of these students while they are pursuing their research studies in the universities, and provides a church home for them. At the dinner, Finis S. Idleman, the new minister, will give an address of welcome on behalf of the Disciples in New York City. P. F. Jerome reports that a new Christian Endeavor Society of forty members has just been organized at Central. This is a significant and hopeful sign of future accomplishment in the difficult field to which this historic New York church ministers.

Noted Missourian at Kansas City Church.

Judge William H. Wallace, well known as a candidate for governor of Missouri several years ago, spoke recently at Independence Blvd., church under the auspices of the Anti-Saloon League upon "Saloonless America." Judge Wallace predicted that it will be only a matter of a short time until the entire United States will be dry.

Dr. Combs Discusses Prayer at Galesburg, Ill.

The dedication of the Galesburg, Ill., church, was followed by a week of preaching by George H. Combs, of Kansas City. In one of Mr. Combs' sermons, he evoked great interest by a discussion of prayer. "Does anything happen when you pray?" Dr. Combs asked. "Does anything come to pass that would not have come to pass if you had not prayed? Is any force created or liberated by prayer?. Is there anything objectionable which has happened? It is not whether something has happened to you, but whether something has happened outside of you as a result of your prayer. No doubt the farmer's muscles are cultured by the plowing and sowing, but what we want to know is, whether the plowing and sowing accomplish something. Many people shy at the thought of prayer because they think that prayer is a violation or rather the suspension of natural laws. My answer is that this is a universe of laws. The reign of law is everywhere, but what happens is this: The operation of a higher law is modified by the lower law. It is the law of a stream for water to run down hill. What happens when we put a pump down? Do we violate the lower law? On the contrary we have simply introduced another law. Prayer is a higher law which modifies the lower. To others again prayer seems futile because they conceive that it must change the will of God. Now the will of God is eternally wise and good. God has already willed the best for us all. Why should we change it? We do not change it. We merely create conditions which render possible the exercise of God's will. A teacher wills that a backward student should be trained in mind and character, but the student is a sluggard, a shirker. He will not be trained. Does the teacher will to educate him? He does. But he cannot. Now something happens. That backward student comes to an awakening. He changes front. He determines that he will do his part. He goes to his teacher and tells him that he is sorry for his shirking and intends to do his duty from that day on. What has happened? This—from that day forward the teacher can choose for the student what he could not do for the student before the change. Has the teacher's will been altered? No. But the teacher through the changed attitude of the boy is able to exercise his own will." While at Galesburg, Dr. Combs addressed the students of Knox College.

P. H. Welshimer in Atlanta, Ga.

P. H. Welshimer, of Canton, O., delivered three addresses in Atlanta, Ga., on January 18. The First Baptist church of Atlanta was responsible for Mr. Welshimer's coming.

Iowa Pastor Gets Ford Car as Gift.

The church at Oakland, Iowa, presented its pastor, F. H. Green, and wife, with a new Ford touring car at Christmas time. This is a testimonial to the faithfulness and efficiency of Mr. and Mrs. Green during their ten or twelve years' ministry.

Valparaiso, Ind., Church Strong on Missions.

The church at Valparaiso, Ind., Claude E. Hill, pastor, raised $6,500 during the past year. Seventy-one persons were added to the membership. The church overpaid its missionary apportionment. All departments are in a flourishing condition.

Tennessee School Doubles Attendance Without Contest.

The Bible-school of Decatur Street church, Memphis, Tenn., has doubled its attendance and offerings in the past two months by steady growth and without a contest. The attendance upon the mid-week prayer-meetings averages 50 per cent of the membership.

Ohio Pastor is Appreciated.

Traverce Harrison, pastor at Bellefontaine, O., recently declined a call to a Detroit church at a salary of $2,400 per year. Now the Bellefontaine congregation have increased their pastor's salary from $1,500 to $1,800 per year.

Bible Schools at Work

Portland, Ore., School Has High Aims for 1916.

George Darsie, formerly pastor at Central church, Terre Haute, Ind., but now pastor at Portland, Oregon, First church, is setting out to achieve great things in the Bible-school field at Portland as he did in the Hoosier city. He has recently been elected general superintendent of the school, and the following aims have been set as a 1916 goal: 1—An enrollment of one thousand. 2—An average attendance of five hundred. 3—An average offering of $20 per week. 4—Every member a contributor to missions. 5—Every member aglow with zeal. 6—Every member of the church a member of the school. 7—Every eligible member of the school a member of the church. 8—An Easter Decision week resulting in 100 added to the church. 9—Consecrated aid rendered the Chinese and Armenian schools. 10—All officers, teachers and workers regular attendants at the Workers' Conference each Thursday evening. These high ideals were adopted at a recent banquet.

Rev. George Darsie, pastor at Portland, Ore., First.

Iowa School of Methods at Cedar Rapids.

Iowa Disciples are planning a School of Methods to be held at First church, Cedar Rapids, where Walter M. White ministers. The date set is February 14-18. The school is under the general supervision of the National Bible-school secretary, Robert M. Hopkins, with other of the national workers assisting and also the state superintendent, Leon S. Dudley. Abbott Book, director of religious education in First church, has charge of the local arrangements. If you are planning to attend write him that arrangements may be made for entertainment. The church will furnish bed and breakfast, and other meals will be provided in the church parlors. The great new building is an ideal place for such a gathering and there should be a state-wide attendance.

Louisville School of Methods.

The third annual Louisville School of Methods for the Bible-schools of Louisville, Jefferson county, and adjacent territory will be held in the Clifton church, February 21-25, 1916.

Big Men's Class Holds "Booster Meeting."

E. A. Cole, minister of Knoxville church, Pittsburg, Pa., delivered an address on "Men in the Bible-school" at a men's "booster meeting" at the church at Charleroi, Pa., January 13. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Baraca class, of which the minister, E. N. Duty, is teacher. This is the largest men's class in the city and one of the largest in the Monongahela valley. Mr. Duty will begin a series of meetings with the Greensburg church on January 31.

Week Night Bible Schools for the Training of Street Preachers.

J. D. Reynolds, minister of the church at Wilmington, N. C., makes an interesting report of the work in his church and school. He is teaching a Bible-school two nights a week, the pupils of which are preparing themselves to do street preaching and similar religious work in the city. The Willing Workers' Class recently raised $40 for a local work and the Aid Society a similar amount.

A Class That Produces.

The Loyal Berean Class at Nickerson, Kan., furnishes a preacher, elder, president of the board, three deacons, two trustees, clerk, superintendent, six teachers, five choir members, superintendent of Junior congregation and three helpers, vice-president and two division leaders of the C. W. B. M. Mrs. Ella Whitt is teacher.

Fathers' Day in St. Louis School.

The Hamilton Avenue Christian school observed Fathers' Day January 2. A unified program was used, and the pastor, L. W. McCreary, delivered a special sermon for the occasion. Fathers having sons and daughters in the Bible-school were given bows of ribbon of various colors, the colors being significant of the department in which their children have membership.

Contest on in St. Louis.

Fourth Church Bible-school, St. Louis, Mo., has challenged the Bible-school of First Church, East St. Louis, Ills., to a contest, which will continue through March. The schools start about even. L. A. Chapman is minister of Fourth Church and Meade E. Dutt minister at East St. Louis.

Oklahoma in Bible School Advance.

Two important gatherings that concern the Bible-school workers of Oklahoma are the Oklahoma State School of Methods, to be held at Muskogee by the middle of March, with the national workers in charge of the instruction, and the State Bible-school Convention at Tulsa, March 28-30. Prof. Walter Athearn. of Des Moines, will be one of the instructors at the latter. There will also be other workers of prominence.

teubenville, O., First Church Cultivates ıe Young People.

First Church, Steubenville, Ohio, E. H. Vray, pastor, has recently completed its ıird annual every-member canvass with ood results. The men who were sent out ere sent with instructions to stress three ıings: church attendance, liberal offering nd subscription to one of the church papers. ıs a result of the first canvass made three ears ago at the beginning of the present ıinistry the increase in offerings was about ne hundred and forty per cent. The second anvass resulted in an increase of about two undred per cent. This last canvass resulted ı an additional increase of about twenty er cent. Mr. Wray writes that on January , R. A. Doan of the Foreign Society, gave a alk to the Men's Bible Class, and also spoke t the morning hour of worship. "I don't ınow when our hearts were so touched and tirred from their very depths as when we ıstened to him tell of the great need on the oreign field," writes the pastor. Following his, on Monday night, the Men's department f the church gave a "Father and Son Banuet" at which a large number of men and oys sat and enjoyed the evening. The main bject of this meeting was to hear W. J. Clarke, Adult Class Superintendent. He poke on "The Men's Department," then fter a short business session gave a masterly address on "The Efficient Laymen." The church observed January 16 as "Educaion Day." The Christian Endeavor society, vhich is by far the largest in the city, all at in a body for the morning service. The ıddress for the day was delivered by Dr. A. P. Finley, of Bethany College. He presented he benefits of a college education, not beause it enables one primarily to do somehing, but to be something. Then he presented the need of the present age in such ı way as to appeal to the red blood of both young men and women.

Bowling Green, Mo., Trebles Bible School Attendance.

Arthur Stout is just beginning his third vear as pastor of the church at Bowling Green, Mo., and J. D. Hostetter, one of the deacons in the Missouri church, writes most appreciatively of his work. During this brief period Mr. Stout has practically trebled the attendance at Sunday School, not only of his own church but, by friendly rivalry, of all the other churches in Bowling Green. He has increased the membership of his church about twenty-five per cent. Mr. Hostetter reports that his pastor has been the ruling spirit in procuring concerted action among the churches in community interests. Because of his broad and wholesome views, his strong personality, and his ability to mix with people, he has become a strong and influential factor not only in local affairs but in surrounding communities. As readers of these columns will recall, the old church building was destroyed by fire last October; services are being held now in temporary quarters, but Mr. Stout has already succeeded in raising something like $12,000 for the erection of a new church, in which it is expected to install a pipe organ. This energetic pastor's activities in the community are not confined to church work; he was elected Secretary of the Commercial Club of the city, and always manifests a deep interest in all things pertaining to community progress.

A Missouri Church that Ministers to Three Hundred Students.

The resident membership of the church at Columbia, Mo., Madison A. Hart, pastor, is 960; the non-resident membership 165. The number added during the year by confession, letter or otherwise is 137; number lost by death and removal 45; net gain 92. The church has the following organizations through which individuals may have a special opportunity for doing Christian work: Junior and Senior Ladies' Aid Societies, Auxiliary to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, Nellie Hart Missionary Circle, Intermediate and Senior Christian Endeavor Societies and the Bible school. All of these are to be commended for the efficient work they have done during the year, writes Mr. Hart. The amount of money raised through the church and its various organizations last year was $8,548.30. Of this amount $2,678.83 was used for missionary and philanthropic work. In addition to this, $3,500 was given through the Men and Millions Movement for missions and education, making the total amount of money raised $12,048.30. Some of the larger amounts were paid out as follows: For local charity, $250; for American Missions, $250; for Education, $100; for Ministerial Relief $100; for Church Extension, $100; for National Benevolent Association, $100; for the Anti-Saloon League, $140; for the support of Dr. Jennie Fleming, Living Link in India, $609. The Edith Circle, one of the Sunday-school classes, gave $175.50 for the Home Economics equipment in a Girls' School in Tokyo, Japan. Miss Edith Parker, who is home from Japan on furlough, teaches in this school. The Auxiliary to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions gave $508 for missionary work. The present enrollment of the Bible-school is 957. There are 275 students enrolled in the several student classes and as officers and teachers. The Christian Endeavor Societies have been doing splendid work. The attendance and interest taken in the Senior Society are the best in its history. The Intermediate Society is the newest organization, but is already achieving fine things.

Richmond, Ind., First, Becomes Living Link Church.

First church, Richmond, Ind., L. E. Murray, pastor, has closed one of the most prosperous years in its history. Money raised for all purposes, $6,073.35. Old debts to the amount of $2,100 were paid and $1,010.73 was given for missions. All bills were paid, with a balance in the treasury at end of year. There were 47 additions to the church. The pastor made 1,007 calls, had 15 weddings and 9 funerals, 20 baptisms. The church voted to become a "living link" in the Foreign Society this year.

First Church, Philadelphia, Buys New Lot for Future Work.

Irving S. Chenoweth and First church, Philadelphia, have a difficult problem to keep things going in the community ministered to at present by First church. The people are rapidly moving out of this district. In consideration of this fact the report of the past year's work at the church is a splendid one, and one that reflects credit both upon Mr. Chenoweth and his devoted people. The total amount of money raised by the church, including Ladies' Aid, Sunday-school, Three C Club, and all organizations, was $8,864.92. Of this amount, $1,117 was given to missions and benevolences, divided as follows: Church, $504.15; Sunday-school, $122.63; C. W. B. M., $177.60; Mission Circle, $105; Relief Fund, $207.62. The amount cleared at the Fall Festival held in November was $329.49. New members received during the year numberd 46, 28 of whom came by baptism, while the loss was 21 by letter and two by death. Looking forward to a greater future, a new lot has been purchased in a better section of the city for $16,280, a payment to be made this month of $5,000. Mr. Chenoweth writes that, in comparison with other sales in that vicinity, this is a great bargain and the congregation will be able to sell enough land to bring the final cost of the lot to a figure between seven and ten thousand dollars.

Endeavor Society Edits Paper.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the church at Langdon, Kan., will edit and publish the Langdon Leader for two weeks. Bearing the C. E. pledge in mind, "That I will Strive to do whatever Christ would have me do," the Endeavorers will use that pledge as the measuring stick and guide in conducting the paper. The editor and proprietor of the Leader will be away for two weeks and he has tendered the paper to the Endeavorers to edit in his absence. He offered the society all they could make out of it while he is gone.

New Missions Established in Arizona Field.

Claude C. Jones, pastor at Phoenix, Arizona, is working in a difficult field, but has a good report to make in spite of that fact. The following are some of the features of the past year's work: Number of sermons and special addresses 178; calls 1,243; additions to church, 62; additions in meeting in Tempe, 15; amount of money raised by all departments of the church, $4,461.77; for missions and benevolences, $1,152.40. On July 4, a mission Bible-school was started in the East Side. It has been a success from the beginning. This is the third mission started and conducted successfully in two years.

Uniontown, Pa., Makes Good 1915 Report.

The church at Uniontown, Pa., has suffered somewhat from the bad business conditions prevailing in the East, but the report of Cloyd Goodnight, pastor of the church, is a splendid one. There were added to the church during the year 66 by baptism and 15 by letter and statement. The church and its auxiliaries raised for missions and benevolences $2,284.35, while they spent for all current expenses, $5,311.66.

Veteran Des Moines Disciple Passes Away.

W. L. English, one of the oldest residents of Des Moines, a veteran of the civil war and a devoted Disciple, died at his home in East Des Moines, January 14. He was 73 years old. He was a member of the 24th Infantry, famous in the annals of Iowa regiments, until it was so depleted that it was disbanded. He then re-enlisted in the 18th Infantry in which he served until the close of the war. He was married soon after the close of the war to Miss Lydia A. Pitzer, who, with five daughters, survives him; Mrs. E. S. Dustin, Centerville, Iowa; Mrs. Alice Moore, Mrs. R. M. Davidson and Miss Bertha English of Des Moines; and Mrs. C. D. Smith of Vega Baga, Porto Rico, with whom he spent the winter a year ago. The funeral was held in the new Grant Park church and was conducted by the pastor, W. F. Mutchler, with the Kinsman G. A. R. post attending in a body, of which he had been a prominent member for many years.

Colorado Church Has Board of Education.

The church at Canon City, Colo., where Charles L. Dean has ministered since Oct. 1, 1915, held its annual meeting January 12. The past year has been prosperous despite the fact that the church was without a pastor for nine month of the year. Sixty-six new members were added during the year and the Sunday-school increased its regular attendance from an average of 165 in 1914 to 184 the past year. Almost $2,000 was raised during the year and $625 paid on the church debt. An innovation in the Bible-school is the selection of a "Board of Education," which will have charge of all the affairs of the church school, including the appointment of officers and selection of teachers. The entire sisterhood of the church has been organized under the leadership of Mrs. Dean and every section of the city will be looked after.

Akron, O., Loses Life-long Disciple.

L. N. D. Wells, pastor at High Street church, Akron, O., reports the death, on Jan. 13, of Joseph Cammern, of Akron, a life-long member of the Christian church. The funeral was from the home of his sister, Mrs. Harvey Kryder, at Akron, interment being at Shreve, O.

Petersburg Adult Class Gives $500 for "Men and Millions."

The church at Petersburg, to which Samuel E. Fisher ministers, is a Bible-school church, and has a famous class—the Iscah Class. This organization pledged $500 to the Men and Millions cause. The same amount was pledged also by each of four members of the church. Mr. Fisher has just closed his first year with the church, and that his work is appreciated is seen in the fact that the congregation has recently increased his vacation period from two weeks to a month, giving him also a check for $100. The church raised $2,128.51 during the year. For missions and benevolences, $759.64 Fifty persons were added to the membership.

February 6 is Christian Endeavor Day.

The first Sunday in February is Christian Endeavor Day. Under the direction of National Superintendent Claude E. Hill, Valparaiso, a very fine program has been prepared for use on that day in the interests of Christian Endeavor work. Send to the National Superintendent for copies of this program.

Howett St. Church, Peoria, Gets Gift of Lot.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob A. Hausam have presented the Howett St. church, Peoria, Ill., with a piece of property adjoining the church. The congregation will erect a handsome church edifice in the spring.

A Gift for William Woods College.

Seven thousand dollars was designated to William Woods College in gifts recently made through the Men and Millions Movement.

Will Your Endeavorers Observe "Endeavor Day?"

A number of Christian Endeavor Societies, not finding it convenient to use the exercise, "The Least of These," on Endeavor Day, are planning to use it some other Sunday in February or March. It has a distinct educational value and can be used at any time. If your society has not ordered, write Box 884, Cincinnati, Ohio, giving number of members, and ask for the literature.

Belding, Mich., Church Will Have Tithers' Band.

At the annual meeting at Belding, Mich., an address was given on "Tithing" and a number of members discussed the matter later; as a result Belding church will have a "Tithers' Band." C. M. Pease is doing fine work as pastor. The meeting held by the Whistons was a great uplift to the church. Belding is the beautiful city where they manufacture beautiful material for beautiful gowns for beautiful women; in other words Belding is known as "The Silk City." Belding Bros. do a big business in that hustling Michigan city.

Sterling Place (Brooklyn) Preacher Has Record Pastorate.

M. M. Amunson has served Sterling Place church, Brooklyn, N. Y., seven years. This is the longest pastorate in the history of the church. The following are some figures from the 1915 report: Sermons, 98; additions, 19; funerals, 6; weddings, 4; calls, 563. Treasurer's report: Church receipts, $6.726.85; expenditures, $6.703.60; balance, $23.24; liabilities, $648.96; assets, $540.36; deficit, $108.60.

Michigan Brotherhood Hears Lecture.

The brotherhood of the church of Cascade, Mich., recently enjoyed a lecture by Grover A. Jackson, Chaplain of Jackson State Prison, on "Lights and Shadows of Prison Life."

Continuous Charity at Eugene, Ore.

Monrovia, Cal., Pastor Will Go to Japan.

Clark H. Marsh, for the past ten years pastor of the church at Monrovia, Cal., has resigned and will go to Japan with his family, to become an instructor in Christian missions. Several years ago Mr. Marsh obtained a two-years' leave of absence which he spent in the Orient. Since that time he has had frequent calls to return and take up his work there again. He will not give up his pastorate until arrangements are made for a successor.

Another Living Link at Anderson, Ind., Central.

Many of the churches which have long supported their own missionary on the foreign field are coming to see that they cannot be content with just one missionary, but as they grow their missionary spirit should likewise grow. The church at Anderson, Ind., is one of these congregations. A few years ago this church started out with one living link missionary and the people felt this was a great advance step. Now they have three. J. W. Underwood, the minister, and others, are confident that the church will soon have another.

Deland, Ill., Church Gives $3,500 to Missions.

The annual meeting of the Deland, Ill., church was held this year as an interesting feature of the twentieth anniversary of the dedication of the church building. L. O. Lehman, of Eureka, gave a splendid address on education. The Deland church gave to missions the past year, through offerings and individual gifts a total of over $3,500. L. O. Crown is the successful pastor at Deland.

Dr. Craig to Live in San Bernardino, Cal.

William Bayard Craig, formerly pastor at Redlands, has moved to San Bernardino. He was to undergo a somewhat serious operation this month.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—Forty members of the Bible-school at Butler, Mo., R. M. Talbert, pastor, had perfect record in attendance during 1915.

—F. F. Sutton has completed five years of his ministry with the church at Utica, O. During this time the membership increased from about eighty to 266. During his ministry $4,000 has been raised on the debt, and the church commences a new year without any indebtedness in any department except the debt on the building. The past year is reported to have been the best in the church's history since its organization in 1905. The Senior Endeavor Society is giving about $2 a week to missions. During Mr. Sutton's service there all departments have about doubled in attendance and offerings, the Bible-school having increased from an average of about sixty to 150.

—Claris Yeuell recently lectured on "Jamaica" at Arnold's Creek, Ashley and Mt. Pleasant, in West Virginia and took up offerings for missions.

—L. N. D. Wells, of High St. church, Akron, O., spoke at Franklin Circle church, Cleveland, on Jan. 21, at a Father and Son Banquet held by 46 churches of the city.

—J. G. Slater, pastor at East Dallas, Tex., gave an address before the Columbian Club, at Denison, Tex., on Jan. 25.

—Women of the churches of Christ in Greater Kansas City, are sewing the linen and necessary garments for use in the new hospital. They have established headquarters, and the churches have been assigned special days for their women to labor there.

—Ernest Reed, who has preached for the past year at Humboldt and Mason will continue during this coming year at Mason and has entered upon a new work at Kinmundy.

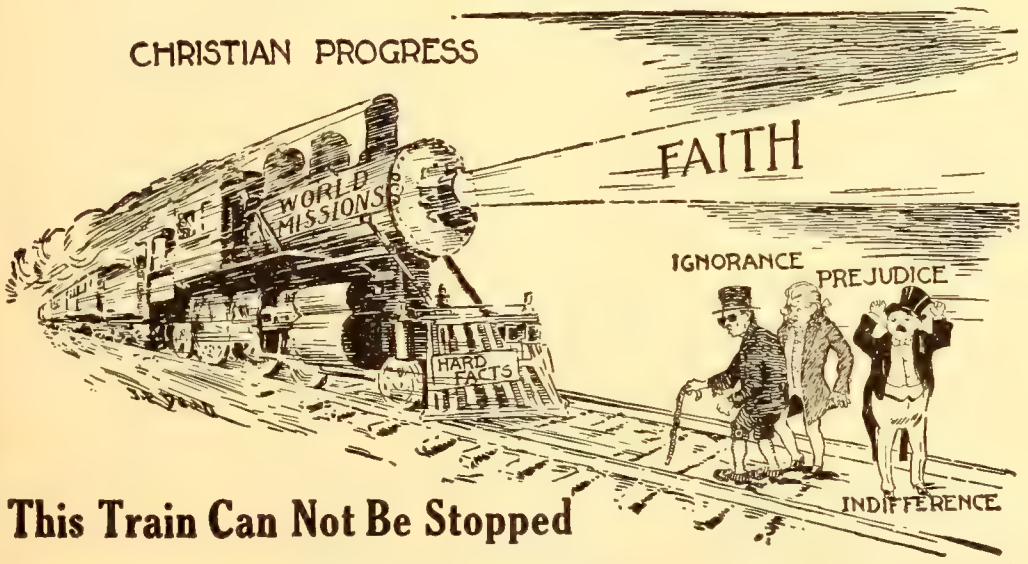
—In order to wipe out a floating indebtedness, Belmar Church, Pittsburgh, to which Charles Darsie ministers, raised in gilt-edge pledges the sum of $600.

—A campaign for a new building was commenced January 9, by the church at Cuyahoga Falls, O., with which A. J. Sever ministers.

—East Side Church, Wellington, Kan., is adding a wing to its present house of worship to accommodate increased audiences and Bible-school.

—First Church, Leavenworth, Kan., has purchased property adjoining its present building with a view to erecting a larger house of worship in the near future.

—Harley Jackson, pastor at Pullman, Washington, Washington State College town, has been re-elected mayor of that city.



—Hugh Wayt has commenced the eighth year of his ministry with the church at Zanesville, O. During his service there 688 have united with the church, a $30,000 building has been erected and the Bible-school has grown from the smallest to the second largest in the city.

—B. S. Ferrall, of Buffalo, N. Y., received the gift of an automobile from his friends at Jefferson Street Church to enable him to meet the demands of that growing work.

—The Garrett, Ind., church plans to spend $15,000 on a new church building which will probably be erected next year.

—The Havensville, Kan., church, J. J. Rupert pastor, is planning an addition to the building for more efficient Bible-school work. The "Home-coming" held at Havensville on January 9, was reported the greatest meeting the church has ever had.

—A feature of the revival now being held at Hyde Park, Kansas City, is moving pictures of historical and educational import. These are presented every night during the services. Sam I. Smith is preaching at these special services.

CLEAR THE TRACK FOR THE MARCH OFFERING!!!

WHY THE MARCH OFFERING

IF you have no missionary budget, you will of course observe the March Offering.

IF your budget is imperfectly worked out, you will need the help of the March Offering.

IF your budget is well-established, you will need the March Offering to keep it in force.

IF you need a larger missionary education, you must make the most of the March Offering.

IF you want to enlist those not reached in the Every-Member Canvass, you will emphasize the March Offering.

The March offering supplies are better this year than usual. They were prepared by Secretary Stephen J. Corey. Please order today, free of charge. Address, F. M. RAINS, SECRETARY, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

THE NEXT EIGHT MONTHS

of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Will be the most significant period in the history of the publication. As readers of the "Century" know, Mr. Morrison has been chosen Editorial Representative of the Panama Congress, with the task of interpreting its deliberations to the secular and religious press of North America. Mr. Morrison will also accompany the deputation of sixteen from Panama to the series of Regional Conferences to be held in four capital cities of South America—Lima, Santiago, Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro. He will interpret these conferences also to the press and will compile their deliberations into a volume to constitute Volume Four of the "Proceedings" of the Panama Congress.

Readers of The Christian Century will be pleased to learn that Mr. Morrison has promised to send articles concerning the Congress and Conferences for first publication in the columns of The Christian Century. These will be the first authoritative reports of this great religious council, second in importance only to the Edinburg Conference, held in 1910.

HERE IS A SUGGESTION

You will wish your friends to enjoy these stirring reports of the achievements of these epochal meetings. Here is the way for you to realize this desire: The publishers have arranged to furnish The Christian Century during these eight months at a special rate of 75 cents per subscription. Get your friends themselves to subscribe for the paper at this special rate, or pay for their subscriptions yourself. You can do them no greater favor than to enlist their interest in this great gathering which looks forward to the conquest of South America for Christ!—Office Manager.

What Are Religious Fundamentals?

THEOLOGY HAS EMPHASIZED DOCTRINES, ORDINANCES AND RITUAL AS WELL AS FUNDAMENTAL ELEMENTS OF RELIGION. THE PROPHETS AND THE MASTER EMPHASIZED LOVE AND THE SACRIFICIAL LIFE.

Out of the practice of putting stress upon the former type of things have come all the denominational controversies and separations in Christian history. By putting the latter into the foreground, the power of Christianity will be restored and the divisions of the church will be healed.

The Roman Catholic Church has given prominence to the centralization of power in a priesthood, and the efficacy of sacraments for salvation. These features it regards as fundamental, and all who deny them rest under Roman disapproval.

The Church of England, and its American branch, the Episcopal church, insists upon the Apostolic Succession as essential to valid church orders, and believe this to be so fundamental a principle of Christian organization that no group of people lacking this sanction can be regarded as entitled to fellowship in the universal church.

The Calvinist regards the doctrine of the divine sovereignty as essential, and similarly the Methodist makes free will his most outstanding religious asset. To the members of those great religious bodies the two doctrines are fundamental.

Various kinds of Baptists regard immersion as fundamental, and in some cases they would even go so far as to exclude the immersed not only from church membership, but from participation in the communion service as well.

And there are various other theological holdings which are regarded by certain sections of the church as fundamental, such as particular views regarding the trinity, the atonement, the inspiration of the Scriptures, the organization of the church, the qualifications of the ministry, the doctrine of the Holy Spirit, and the like.

Meanwhile great numbers of men and women whose desire it is to think clearly and to act in loyalty to the highest truth, find no satisfaction in allying themselves with church organizations to which matters in these debatable fields are fundamental. They cannot gain their consent to the belief that God is very much concerned over questions which have so little relation to love and the sacrificial life.

It seems to them that if the deity is actually concerned with these merely formal distinctions, which have to them the appearance of triviality he must be a trivial kind of God; and for such a being they have no reverence. For this reason they are remaining outside of all church relationships, content to practice the arts of service and sacrifice as best they can either in other organizations or alone.

It is easy for the informed Christian to reply that the day is past when these above-mentioned matters were really fundamental after all. We are glad to believe that he is right. But there are sufficient survivals of the old bondage to dogma, form and custom to point the criticism that the church is still only partly concerned with the real ideals of her Master.

Is it not astonishing that through the centuries these crippling and divisive items should have maintained so firmly their hold when the entire current of biblical teaching is of another sort? Doutbless there have been values in particular forms of belief and practice in religious communities, and these will be employed to the end of the day. But the prophets and apostles, and most of all our Lord himself, were little concerned save with the great elements of righteousness, the real fundamentals of religion.

When the priests of Israel were asked what was essential to divine approval, they had a long list of commandments which they affirmed they had received from God, and which they imposed upon the nation. But when the psalmists were asked their opinion of the man who found acceptance with God they responded, "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart. Who hath not lifted up his soul to folly and hath not sworn deceitfully. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord and righteousness from the God of his salvation."

And when the prophets were confronted with the same question, Micah answered for all of them in the noblest utterance of the Old Testament, "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good. And what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God?" When Jesus was approached by one who asked what he meant he must do to inherit eternal life, he answered explicitly that the total requirement was love to God and love to man. He made no mention of any of the beliefs or forms which have been regarded too frequently as essential to the holy life.

In this description of the great assize, the judgment upon human life, he made it clear that men would be approved or condemned not upon the basis of beliefs or conformities, but on the principle of their acceptance or rejection of the life of love and sacrifice. To those who were approved the judge would say in that time, "I was an-hungered and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me."

If men had been held to the observance of doctrines and ceremonies in the apostolic days, very different would have been the story of the New Testament. The first interpreters of Christ were concerned only to ascertain if men believed in the Master and were willing to accept his point of view and his program. The simple social customs by which they signified their identification with the new movement were merely incidental to the great act of making him their ideal and teacher.

If any of these first Christians had been catechized regarding their views on the trinity or inspiration or the atonement or church orders or ordinances, they would have made but a sorry showing. Yet they seem to have met the entire approval of the apostles. Cornelius, the Shall the Minister Be Pensioned?

BY W. R. WARREN

FOR several years our ministers have been asking with increasing urgency that the Board of Ministerial Relief inaugurate some sort of mutual benefit plan. Some of them, seeing what other churches are doing, have felt that we ought to have a permanent and comprehensive system of pensions on which the minister and his family could depend with confidence, and without embarrassment.

Most of them are paying out from $30 to $300 each per year for life insurance, and few are getting what they want. Only endowment policies, which are too expensive for ministers to carry, provide for the man's own old age. If he be stricken in middle life with blindness, paralysis, or other disabling disease, his wife has the threefold impossible task of keeping up insurance premiums, caring for an invalid husband and rearing their children. The most urgent work of the Board of Ministerial Relief has been found in helping to meet such situations. Even when the minister dies before his wife, the insurance money, by the terms of most policies, comes to her in a lump sum. She has neither training nor opportunity for handling it to advantage. The actual records show that, in nine cases out of ten, the money is soon gone. Life insurance is good, especially if it is carried with the Presbyterian Ministers' Fund, which is now open to all Protestant ministers on equal terms, but it stops short of meeting the most important emergencies. Even where it applies, the policies of $1,000, $2,000, $3,000 and $5,000, which are as much as most ministers can carry, give only partial and temporary relief.

THE MINISTERIAL RELIEF SYSTEM.

While the minister is thus unable to depend upon life insurance, he is unwilling to depend upon our present Ministerial Relief system, even if its resources were outrunning the demands, which he knows they are not. All we can say about our present pensions being long overdue payment for service rendered, or a recognition of service for which no adequate payment can be made, is discounted for him by the fact that one must prove his need, as well as his worth, before he can be enrolled. He feels that this is all right for the pioneers, and for emergencies and exceptional cases of misfortune, but not for normal dependence. We must honor the manly self-reliance of his attitude, even while we see the futility of the steps he is taking, or hopes some day to take, to keep himself and his family from ever "coming on the board."

But the churches have more at stake than the ministers have, and an adequate and dependable pension system is therefore even a more pressing necessity for them. The lack of such a system involves the brotherhood in four great losses in its ministry, which is its chief asset: a loss in efficiency through paralyzing economy; a loss in power through divided attention and commercialized service; a loss in permanence through defection to other callings; a loss in recruiting through the opposition of parents and friends. The chief outlay of our churches is for buildings and ministers—about $4,000,000 each per year. The houses we carefully insure against possible loss by fire. We are beginning to see the necessity of safeguarding the men against certain loss by old age, disability or death. Even if we were insensible to the obligation we owe to those who have given their all to the church, and incapable of the grateful affection we ought to show our fathers in the faith, in sheer self-preservation we must be able to read the clear logic for the present situation. Of course, in the measure that we long for the Christian conquest of the earth, all that affects the leadership of God's people concerns us most deeply.

But it is one thing to say we must have a pension system, and another to frame a plan that will meet our needs, our resources and our disposition. No ready-made or second-handed system will fit the Disciples of Christ. Moreover, this is the brotherhood's problem, and not merely the board's. So, after careful consideration, and in recognition of the trust imposed in them, the Board of Ministerial Relief submits the following plan, not as a recommendation but as a basis of inquiry. Does the brotherhood want a more thoroughgoing pension system than we now have? If so, does this plan meet the requirements? If not, how should it be changed?

THE PENSION.

It is proposed that we aim to provide, at the age of 65, or 70 if the minister himself prefers, a retirement pension of $500 per year for men who have served 30 years or more. For earlier disability the basis of pension shall be $100 for the first five years of preaching and $10 per year for each additional year, with graduated extras for 20 years and more. Widows shall receive three-fifths of the amounts to which their husbands would have been entitled. On the death of both parents minor children shall receive a like equitable allowance.

Half the life-service of our present ministry has been accepted by the churches without provision for pensions. Here is a vast accrued liability which we could not begin at once to fully discharge, even if the whole brotherhood were aroused and ready to begin the support of the new system. So it is doubly necessary that payments begin on a lower basis and increase as the fund grows.

Whatever may be done by large gifts from individuals it is thought good, as well as necessary, to ask the ministers and the churches to assume the chief burden of the system, in the ratio of one to four. This would bring one-fifth of the cost from the minister and four-fifths from the rest of the brotherhood.

THE PREACHER'S PART.

It is proposed that every minister who wishes to enroll himself and his family for the benefits accruing from this system shall pay into the fund, on an actuarial basis according to his age at entrance, an amount sufficient to pay for a pension of $100 per year at old age retirement and corresponding allowances for other contingencies, as mentioned above. From the records of the Presbyterian ministry for over a hundred years expert actuaries have calculated just in good health, and there are as many as what this requires.

If those who go into the system are 300, to make the law of averages hold good, the cost for retirement at 65 would be as follows: for those entering at 23, $21.57, at 30, $25.15, at 35, $30.28, at 40, $38.22, at 45, $50.61, at 50, $71.77, at 55, $114.22. Those over 40 should be allowed to elect retirement at 70, with correspondingly lower dues: at 40, $25.89, at 45, $32.52, at 50, $42.74, at 55, $59.77, at 60, $93.69. Payments could be made quarterly, semi-annually, annually or in one lump sum. Those who feel unable to make the full payment might be allowed to pay half rates and receive corresponding benefits.

Since the payments by the ministers are thus definite, and would of course be held sacredly for the one purpose, the board could guarantee from the first one-fifth of all the proposed benefits.

THE CHURCH'S PART.

As the contract between the board and the minister thus would enable the board to give him something definite on which to rely, it would also allow the board to go to the churches with a practical proposition and an inspiring challenge. Let each congregation pay regularly an amount equal to 5 per cent of its minister's salary. This is the rate that would be required to maintain the church's four-fifths of the system's cost, if all were participating and all accrued liabilities fully provided for, so we dare not ask for less. As the introduction of the plan will be harder than its continuance, we dare not ask for more, but will have to depend upon the greatly increased individual gifts which definite action on a worthy basis by ministers and churches will stimulate, and then simply make the pensions of the first few years what the state of the fund allows, giving our system time to grow to normal proportions.

These beginnings will be the more modest, since the present system will have to be carried along parallel with the new, and we cannot ask any church for more than the one offering per year, though of course, any that can and will may go beyond 5 per cent.

Meanwhile the minister-member has four substantial encouragements. That which is guaranteed is more and better than he could get elsewhere for the same outlay. The benefits will grow year by year, not only during the time that elapses before his retirement, but after his pension begins. The probability is that many years will pass before he is either disabled or retired. If at any time his necessities are beyond the fixed benefits of the new pension system, the brotherhood still stands back of him with the old Ministerial Relief fund and its increasing assurance that "We will not forget."

A POSSIBLE OBJECTION ANSWERED.

If any church should be tempted to think of the 5 per cent as beyond its strength, it will realize on reflection, that it is just such congregations that must suffer most by our failure to provide Ministerial Pensions, exactly as it is the church that had the greatest struggle to build that can least afford to let its house stand uninsured. For the brotherhood as a whole, if our ministers are worth the $4,000,000 per year we are paying them, it would certainly be wise to add 5 per cent. in pensions to secure 100 per cent. enhancement in service. So especially, the poorest church can well afford to add a nickel on the dollar to what it is paying for preaching to get better and more certain preaching. It is not an improvement of 5 per cent. but a doubling of the power of our ministry, that we are proposing. Furthermore it seems scarcely possible that any self-respecting congregation will let its minister pay his share regularly, and fail to send its monthly check, though the relation of the two is not contractual, but better, moral and religious.

The Members of the Board of Ministerial Relief are happy to count themselves "servants of the servants of our Lord," not alone for the preachers' sake but for the sake of the Church of Christ which he purchased with his own blood. They rejoice in the splendid increase of contributions during the last three years, a gain of 129 per cent, and believe they can count on the people who have made this response to give wise and earnest consideration to the questions submitted above. It is God's work, and vital to all the interests of his kingdom. Let us seek his direction and rely upon his might to carry through whatever is clearly seen to be his will.

Liberal Education and the Ministry

BY MADISON A. HART

PREPARE as he may, the honest, conscientious worker in any field of endeavor soon makes the discovery that he can not deal successfully with all the issues involved, all the problems that come up for solution. Why should the ministry be an exception to this general rule? This does not cast any reflection on the honest toiler who is doing the best he can with meager preparation and equipment. It comes rather as a challenge to the ministry as a whole to impress the world with the signficant fact that the richest endowed lives must be found in the pulpit as well as in law, medicine, science and philosophy. The time has not passed for God's demand for the finest of the wheat and the firstlings of the flock. This must still be our ideal. Otherwise we shall help the world to believe that the soil is more important than the soul, that the material has greater value than the spiritual.

THE TIME ELEMENT.

As a mere matter of economy of time a liberal education has great value. The more poorly we are equipped the greater amount of time it takes to do a given task. Today the average minister's work is increasing in geometrical proportions. He must, therefore, be able to do a maximum amount of work in a minimum amount of time. "If the iron be blunt, and one do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength; but wisdom is profitable to direct." A dull tool not only makes a demand on strength, it makes, if any difference, a still greater demand on time. Why work with dull tools when there are so many intellectual grindstones ready for service? The proper use of thirty minutes of time per day marks the difference between efficiency and inefficiency.

Many paintings are shorn of beauty and power because the artist failed to give the correct perspective. Many great, fundamental truths fail to bring definite, worth while results, not through any fault per se, but because of a failure on the part of the speaker—his mental perspective, like that of the artist, spoils the effect. A man with a liberal education is less likely to make this sort of a blunder. His more definite and intimate knowledge of the manners and customs, ideas and ideals, prejudices and passions of people is a great safeguard against grievous generalizations and unwise and unwarranted interpretations.

To be most effective truth must always be properly related to other truths. Here is where much harm is done by sincere, honest people. We make enough "bone-head" interpretations with as good mental perspective as we can command. What must be the state of affairs when we close our eyes to the great world of truth that lies round about us? Every truth fits naturally and normally into all truth. God is not a God of confusion, but of order.

DURABLE SATISFACTION.

A poorly prepared worker is not apt to be a very happy workman. While happiness in our tasks is not the first great essential, it is nevertheless an essential. That which marks the difference between drudgery and delight, is the facility or lack of it in our avocations. It is not merely to produce more bushels per acre of corn, wheat and oats, that we should have evangels of scientific farming, but that the farmer with this increased increment of knowledge, may get more genuine joy and durable satisfaction out of his daily toil. The fertilization of the soil, like the fertilization of the soul, not merely produces greater yield of bushels but of permanent joy.

Why should it be considered a small matter to be happy in our work? Is there not a real need today that many of us have restored the joy of our salvation? Jesus gives peculiar emphasis to this truth in "The Parable of the Talents." Thrice does he ask that we make a proper use of our talents that we may enter into the joy of our Lord. What he commends we may well accept without question.

If the minister of today would broaden his service, he must unquestionably broaden his culture. All good grist is good for the mill if we know how to grind it. The right sort of liberal education will make any workman not only more efficient, but more liberal in the use of time, talent, energy, enthusiasm, sympathy and love. We are here in this world "not to be ministered unto, but to minister" and to give our lives as a sacrifice for the world. The best is none too good.

"Mammon"

Two Poems by Thomas Curtis Clark.

DIVES.

I HAVE built me a kingdom of my own.
Great walls encompass me about.
No man can fret my soul.
My ships have scoured the Orient,
And have brought to me gems and gold.
My board is weighted down with delicacies.
My daughters are clothed in ermine and purple.
The art of the world is on my walls..
No other man can equal me.
No man can envy me, to attack me;
For my castle gates are barred,
And my walls are strong.
What though the cursed mob be penniless!
What though babes and children starve,
And women cry for bread!
They cannot steal my joy;
For my gates are barred,
And my walls are strong.
O my victorious soul, take thine ease,
Eat, drink and be merry;
For thou art alone in the earth;
Thou hast wrought mightily;
Thou hast built for thyself
A kingdom of thine own..

THE CHILDREN OF ESAU.

FROM the dreamless sleep of the well-fed
They rise at the morning-time.
They feel no joy at the glory of the sunrise,
They see no heaven reflected in the drop of dew;
They hear no God clear-speaking to the heart of man
In the freshly-blown rose.
What care they to be called "sons of God,"
If the appetite of sense be satisfied?
What care they for Bethel dreams,
If only the forests are full of venison?

What profits it to think?
Grows not the body lean with much thinking?
Why speculate on future years?
May not life's present good be lost in speculation?
This is the end of life: To eat, to drink, to sleep,
To feel no gnawing of the appetite;
To strive not after things far distant.
Soon cometh death? Much more then must we haste
To find the good this world can give.
Spirit? The word falls dead upon our ears.
Flesh, let the flesh be satisfied!

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

MEN AND MILLIONS

NOTHING has tended to bring the Disciples of Christ into greater prominence as genuinely interested in the forward movements of religion in our time than the Men and Millions campaign.

Comparatively little has been said about this work in our religious press. This was as the promoters of the campaign wished it. They desired to make a quiet, but intensive, canvass of the different states in the interest of all our great missionary and benevolent causes.

The educational value of the enterprise thus far is incalculable. Under the stimulus of the Men and Millions campaign individuals and churches have been led to realize their privileges and responsibilities as never before. To widen the vision from parochial to world-wide fields is to impart a new sense of the wonder and value of life. To convert from his sinful conduct a man who has been contributing five dollars a year and who could give five hundred, is to offer him a new means of satisfaction and efficiency.

The campaign is now taking on a more intensive form. The tragedy of the great war has led to enormously increased activities in the manufacturing centers of our country. It seems wise, therefore, to turn from the general canvass to the visitation of such industrial cities at the present time.

Men who are making money out of the manufacture of the munitions of war ought to have a humbling sense of the need of some form of expiation for their sins, and those who are being enriched by the industrial quickening in other and legitimate lines of production should rejoice in the opportunity the Men and Millions movement presents to them for co-operation in world-wide philanthropy.

We congratulate the leaders of this campaign, Messrs. Cory and Miller, upon the wisdom of their new strategy. We congratulate the returned missionaries, the educators and the laymen who are associated with them in this splendid work. And we congratulate the churches to which they come with their inspiring and informing messages.

The Brotherhood of Disciples will not forget to be much in prayer in behalf of this movement and its leaders.

MR. MORRISON'S JOURNEY

THE Panama Congress in the interest of Christian work in Central and South America is a very notable event in the religious history of the continent. Even among informed leaders of the Roman Catholic church concern is felt about the moral conditions prevailing in the lands where for centuries that church has been practically the only religious force making any effort to replace the primitive paganism. And in wide areas the Roman system seems little better than paganism itself.

The gathering at Panama is to attempt an intelligent and comprehensive consideration of the entire field of Latin America. The enormously rapid growth of this region in industrial competence and wealth makes it imperative that its moral and religious training should not be left in incompetent hands in so plastic a period.

The Panama meeting is to be followed by a series of regional conferences in various portions of South America. Nothing so comprehensive has ever been attempted in American missionary work. What the reports of the Edinburgh Conference were to world-wide missions, the reports of the Panama and the succeeding conferences will be to the students of the American field.

It is a matter of profound pride and satisfaction to the Disciples that three of their number have been given most honorable responsibility in connection with these gatherings. Mr. Inman has been the executive head of the movement, with offices in New York for many months past. President Paul has been one of the foremost workers in the development of the plan. And Mr. Morrison has been chosen as the official editor of the reports that will go out to the secular and religious press, and of the volumes of the official report that will be issued immediately following the conferences.

No reader of The Christian Century needs to be told how worthily this honor has been bestowed on Mr. Morrison. It is the sincere belief of those associated with him in the conduct of The Christian Century, now at liberty in his absence to express themselves freely, that he is the most versatile and brilliant editorial writer among the Disciples. And in this judgment a great company of our people share.

The entire Christian Century family looks forward with eagerness to the beginning of the series of articles from Mr. Morrison's pen in interpretation of the conferences, and in description of the interesting experiences which lie before the members of the Commission. They will combine the fascination of a travel story with the inspirational values of missionary education. Everyone is anxious to learn all he can about South America. All our business men are turning eager eyes in that direction. Our educators are studying its problems. Our missionary leaders are sensitive to the openness of that vast region to evangelical influences today. For these and many other reasons we shall want to read every word of Mr. Morrison's narrative, and shall want our friends to share the experience.

A NEW STEP IN CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

IT WILL be remembered that the first week in February is Anniversary Week in the calendar of the Christian Endeavor Societies. At that time Christian Endeavor will be thirty-five years old.

Naturally many of the churches and all of the Endeavor societies will make a good deal of that week, and especially of Sunday, February 6.

Among the Disciples it will be a favorable opportunity to emphasize a new and important step in our Christian Endeavor activities. For we are inaugurating a field secretary of Christian Endeavor, in the person of Frank M. Lowe, Jr., of Kansas City.

For ten years past almost the whole burden of Christian Endeavor promotion, so far as denominational devotion among the Disciples was concerned, has fallen upon the shoulders of Rev. Claude E. Hill, of Valparaiso, Ind., our national superintendent. This service, entirely unrewarded save in the appreciation of the Disciples, was no light obligation. It seems appropriate, therefore, that something of this burden should be shared, and accordingly the new step has been planned.

There are, of course, no funds with which to finance this new venture save those contributed by the Christian Endeavor Societies themselves. It will cost about $2,000 annually. The societies are, therefore, asked to make offerings for this purpose in connection with their anniversary services the first week in February. In this manner they can assist in the extension of Christian Endeavor enthusiasm among the Disciples, and at the same time manifest their appreciation of Mr. Hill's long and continuing service.

BIBLE SCHOOL ARCHITECTURE

THE report of the dedication of the Bible-school building of the Franklin Circle church, in Cleveland, is symptomatic of a widespread movement to give to the church school its rightful place in the life of the church.

From all sides there comes the news of similar efforts to adequately house and equip the Bible-schools of our churches. The study of Bible-school architecture is receiving fresh attention.

The Bible-school movement has passed through several phases. At first it was regarded merely as a somewhat necessary, but hardly important feature of church activity. Later the stress was laid upon attendance, and much interest was aroused by reports of great companies of men and women, running up into the hundreds, who composed Bible-school classes.

It is legitimate to enroll as many persons as possible in the Bible-school, but this is not the most important feature of Bible-school promotion.

Today this phase of number worship is passing, and happily passing. It is recognized that efficient work can only be accomplished in smaller groups and with adequate equipment. This does not mean a diminution in zeal for large attendance upon the Bible-schools, but it means that wise leaders are unwilling to sacrifice efficiency to numbers.

The study of public school architecture has reached an advanced stage of adaptability to the needs of popular education. The church school has the same claim upon public attention, and it is an encouraging sign that it is beginning to receive it.

A DISCIPLE AS A SUCCESSFUL EDUCATOR

THE Disciples are always sensitive to the popular approval of one of their number in any line of public service. Friends of Prof. Ernest P. Wiles, superintendent of schools at Evansville, Ind., regard him as one of the most successful of present-day public school educators. His experience at Muncie, Ind., and other places fitted him admirably for his present work. He has brought the public school system of Evansville to a high state of efficiency. The schools themselves, both district and high schools, are models of efficiency. The physical welfare of the pupils, both as to diet and exercise, receives careful attention. The manual training and domestic science departments have reached a high level of effectiveness. A great stadium has recently been constructed for athletic events. Courses of lectures are maintained both for pupils and teachers. Mr. Wiles' influence has gone far out into Indiana educational circles, and he is a prominent official in the State Teachers' Association. He is now actively engaged in preparing courses of biblical instruction which are to be used under the general scheme of the North Dakota plan in the public schools of the state. Mr. Wiles is a devoted and enthusiastic Disciple, a strength to the church in Evansville and a credit to the brotherhood.

WHAT ARE RELIGIOUS FUNDAMENTALS?

Roman captain, may have had some instruction in the theories of his pagan faith, but Peter required of him no technical knowledge of religion in any form. He only said, "In every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." Nor did that other captain with whom Jesus spoke in Galilee know more of the subtleties of religion. But the Master said of him, "I have not found such faith, no, not in Israel." And to the dying thief, who had opened to him his confidence, he said, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise."

Men have tried to conceal the significance of these great sayings by insisting that in some strange way the conditions of life were changed after the Lord's departure, and the same assessments of life were no longer valid after the Day of Pentecost. But Jesus' words are of an eternal quality. The simple truth is that he cared only for the life of love and sacrifice. Wherever he found it, he was satisfied. Wherever he found it lacking, he was disturbed.

It is sometimes asserted that the church is weak today because the so-called "fundaments" of Christianity are not sufficiently stressed; and to uphold the tottering ark of God men hasten to print articles or pamphlets or books on "revelation," or "miracle," or "prophecy," or "inspiration," or "vicarious atonement," or "the scheme of redemption," and to affirm that a particular view of these and other doctrines is basic as a condition of acceptance with God. And all the time the life and words of the Son of God make clear the fact that what the Father wants is love and the sacrificial life.

To believe in God as Jesus believed in him; to follow Jesus as he bade his disciples do; to use the Bible as a vivid and precious record of the greatest religious experience of the ages, and the disclosures of the life of Christ; to work in the church as the best of the means by which men have been associated for the attainment of the life of love and sacrifice; to practice the life of prayer, of trust and of holiness in companionship with Jesus; to rejoice in the privilege of sacrificial effort in behalf of the world which Jesus loved and helped to save; and in this spirit to begin here and now to live eternally—these are elements worthy to be called fundaments of the Christian faith.

A PRAYER

This world has not provided for my heart. It has provided for my eye; it has provided for my ear; it has provided for my touch; it has provided for my sense of beauty; but it has not provided for my heart. Provide thou for my heart, O Lord. It is the only unwinged bird in all creation; give it wings, O Lord. Earth has failed to give it wings; its very power of loving has often drawn in into the mire. Be thou the strength of my heart. Be thou its fortress in temptation, its shield in remorse, its covert in the storm, its star in the night, its voice in the solitude. Guide it in its gloom; help it in its heaviness; direct it in its doubt; calm it in its conflict; fan it in its faintness; prompt it in its perplexity; lead it through its labyrinths; raise it from its ruins.

I cannot rule this heart of mine; keep it under the shadow of thine own wings.

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

A Conference on Methodist Reunion.

A conference will be held in Evanston, Ill., a suburb of Chicago, and the seat of Northwestern University (Methodist) at which various members of the divided Methodist groups will speak on the problem of reunion. The meeting will be held under the John Richard Lindgren Foundation for the promotion of international peace and Christian unity. The proceedings of the conference will be brought out in the form of a volume before the next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Carranza Pledges Religious Freedom.

The relation of Carranza to religious parties in Mexico has been a very interesting question ever since the United States government recognized him. The Washington representative of Carranza has thus stated his attitude: "The Laws of Reform, which guarantee individual freedom of worship, according to everyone's conscience, shall be strictly observed. Therefore, the Constitutionalist government will respect everybody's life, property and religious beliefs, without other limitation than the preservation of public order and the observance of the institutions in accordance with the laws in force and the constitution of the republic." The Catholic hierarchy in America fought bitterly against the recognition of Carranza, and are now compelled to admit their humiliating defeat. Carranza has aided Protestant mission work somewhat in the past and recognizes the value to Mexico of such work, especially in its educational aspects.

Church Statistics Appear.

The statistics for American Christianity for 1915 have made their appearance. The religious bodies have made another good year's growth. The gains in membership reported by the large denominations for 1915 are as follows: Presbyterian, North, 55,000, the largest annual increase in its history; Disciples, 50,000; Baptists, North and South, 145,000; Episcopalians, 26,000; Lutherans, 60,000; Methodists, North, 104,000; and Roman Catholics, increase in population not in enrolled membership, 242,000. It is interesting to note how large a percentage of the religious population is in nine leading religious bodies. These have 33,800,000 out of the reported church population of 38,725,000. The percentage of gain is less than it used to be, and is now less than the percentage of growth in the population.

"Come to Church" Effort in the East.

West Philadelphia has promoted a "Come-to church" campaign with very complete organization. Large bill posters were put over the cities, and cards were hung in the street cars. The population was carefully canvassed and the results given to the pastors. Post cards have been issued to the ministers, fifty thousand in number, which are sent to the people whose absence from church has been noted.

Baptists Talk of City Temple and Headquarters.

The Baptists are still talking of establishing a great building in Chicago which shall serve somewhat the function of Tremont Temple in Boston, and Ford Hall. It is proposed to put Johnston Myers in the field to raise a half million dollars to erect a new building on the present site of the Immanuel church on the south side. This building would be at once a place of worship and an office building for the Baptist interests of the city. Dr. Myers raised last year for his local church about fifty thousand dollars.

Wants Prayers for Animals.

The war is bringing to the front the recrudence of older points of view religiously. Archdeacon Wilberforce of Westminster Abbey in England advocates prayers for animals engaged in the war and himself uses one that was first given to the world by St. Basil in 370 A. D. He expresses faith in the everlasting life of animals and asserts that the following worthies of the past have believed in such a doctrine: Luther, Wesley, Toplady, Cowper, Southey, Tennyson, Bishop Butler, John Keble, Pope, Byron, Charles Kingsley, Dean Stanley and General Gordon.

Antagonism Between Catholic and Protestant.

Bad feeling between Catholics and Protestants has been fostered by certain elements in each camp in recent years. The prosecution of the Menace in the courts has resulted in a verdict of not guilty, which is hailed as an evidence of the truthfulness of the allegations made by this rather strenuous journal. In Buffalo, the Knights of Columbus counsel their members to show tolerance to Protestants. Catholics are exhorted to affiliate themselves with Protestants in civic enterprises, and members of the older church are urged to be more considerate, more charitable and more Christian. The Knights in Buffalo condemn the policy of supporting Catholics for public office just on the ground that they are Catholics. If Catholic defense is always to take on this character, there will be an era of better understanding.

Dr. Abbott Celebrates Birthday.

Dr. Lyman Abbott, editor of the Outlook, formerly pastor of Plymouth church in Brooklyn, was the guest of honor at that church on Jan. 14, on the occasion of his eightieth birthday. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis presided at the dinner.

Young People's Day.

The first Sunday in February is set apart in the various denominations as Young People's Day. In many denominations, special programs have been prepared which are given by the young people themselves at the evening service.

Churches Observe Community Week.

Rogers Park is a residential suburb of the city of Chicago and five leading churches co-operated in that section recently in a Community Week. The speakers were Dr. Shailer Mathews, Dr. Edgar Hill, Dr. Theodore Soares, and Dr. Graham Taylor. The meetings were well advertised and the community responded to this effort at a get-together week on the part of the churches.

New Book on Bishop Asbury.

Bishop Asbury, the first American bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church, died March 31, 1816. In anticipation of the celebration of the centenary of his death, the Methodist Book Concern is bringing out on February 1 a memorial volume by President Ezra Squire Tipple on "Francis Asbury, the Prophet of the Long Road."

Holy Name Societies.

The Holy Name societies of the Roman Catholic church in the archdiocese of Boston have a membership of 100,000 people. The purpose of this society is to work against the blaspheming of the holy names used in the Christian religion. The members of this society remonstrate against profanity, and where the profane one is drunk or unreasonable, they are pledged to offer to offended deity a prayer to atone in some measure for the sin committed by the other man.

Largest Y. M. C. A. Branch in the World.

By an increase in membership of no less than nine hundred during the year 1915, the New York West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association has become the largest branch of the organization in the world. Its membership is now 7,114, the nearest approach to this figure being Boston, with 7,100; Detroit, with 6,948, and Chicago Central, with 6,061. Under the able and earnest direction of Mr. E. Graham Wilson, the religious department of the West Side Branch ministered to 257,566 men at a cost of $14,596. This work includes noon-hour shop meetings, lobby meetings, meetings held at street corners and in the building auditorium. The educational department at the close of the year had an enrollment of 3,763, with a total attendance for the year of 85,453 and an income of $95,831. The physical department has a membership of 3,338, with a class attendance of 44,975 for the year. The employment department reports having obtained positions for 2,642 men during the year out of 3,428 applications for work and 4,908 calls from employers. The total attendance at the branch during the year was 873,327. The annual report of the treasurer, Gilbert Colgate, places the total budget receipts at $316,903, with expenses reaching practically that amount. Mr. William M. Kingsley will head the Board of Directors as chairman for another year, and an extension of activities is planned for the opening of spring.

Lesson for February 20.

THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERHOOD AT JERUSALEM.

(Temperance Lesson.)

Golden Text: Love one another from the heart fervently. 1 Peter 1:22.

Lesson Acts 4:32-5:16: verses 4:32-5:5 printed.

Memorize verses 34, 35.

4 (32) And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and soul: and not one of them said that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common. (33) And with great power gave the apostles their witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all. (3) For neither was there among them any that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or homes sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, (35) and laid them at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto each, according as any one had need.

(36) And Joseph, who by the apostle was surnamed Barnabas which is, being interpreted, Son of exhortation, a Levite, a man of Cyprus by race, (37) having a field, sold it, and brought the money and laid it at the apostles' feet.

5 (1) But a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, sold a possession, (2) and kept back part of the price, his wife also being privy to it, and brought a certain part, and laid it at the apostles' feet. (3) But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thy heart to lie to the Holy Spirit, and to keep back part of the price of the land? (4) While it remained, did it not remain thine own? and after it was sold, was it not in thy power? How is it that thou hast conceived this thing in thy heart? thou hast not lied unto me, but unto God. (5) And Ananias hearing these words fell down and gave up the ghost: and great fear came upon all that heard it.

VERSE BY VERSE.

4:32. One heart and soul. The heart is the seat of our deepest emotions and the soul is life. The expression is used to denote the deepest unity of life purpose.—Not one of them said that aught of the things he possessed was his own. They counted what they had as in trust for the good of all.—They had all things common. It was held for the common good. This was voluntary and not at all compulsory.

4:33. Great power. With convincing and persuading effort.—Gave. Literally, gave back, as something they were in duty bound to give.—Great grace was upon them all. God's gift was helping them, they were filled with his spirit.

4:34 Neither was there among them any that lacked. Since they held their property in trust for others, no need went unsatisfied. As many as were possessors. This was done as the need arose. Human nature is ennobled by the example of generosity.

4:35. Laid them at the apostles' feet. A figurative expression indicating the method of giving. It may be following the oriental custom of giving gifts to kings. The apostles were the ones best fitted to receive the gifts. As any one had need. No equal distribution, but charitable or generous giving to the needy.

4:36. Barnabas. He was a cousin of John Mark and afterwards a companion of Paul. —Son of exhortation. This literally means "the son of a prophet." Not so much prediction as teaching.—A Levite. Originally the Levites were forbidden to hold land.—Man of Cyprus. This may account for the fact that he had land for sale.

4:37. Having a field. To support the poor.—The money. The sum of money.

5:1. But. Suggests a contrast with another man.—Ananias. One of the men belonging to the church in Jerusalem.—Sapphira. The name means "beautiful."—Sold a possession. Property of any kind, but in this case probably land.

5:2. Kept back. The verb means "to set apart for one's self;" hence to appropriate wrongfully.—His wife also being privy to it. They had planned together the deceit. One was as guilty as the other.

5:3. To lie to the Holy Spirit. To deceive the Holy Spirit. A lie may be acted as well as spoken. God's spirit is always present with his children. He is also present when the collection baskets come around.

5:4. While it remained. In your possession.—Remain thine own? It appears from this verse that the property given was wholly a voluntary gift. The sin was in the pretense that the part they brought was all.—Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God. Ananias had not only sinned against human brotherhood, but also against the spirit that makes it possible.

5:15. Gave up the ghost. Died. Used only in Luke. It occurs in the Septuagint, and in medical writings.

Test Questions.

1. What was the size of this church?
2. Who was the leader at this time?
3. What was the theme of his sermon?
4. Were there many poor in Jerusalem?
5. How were they cared for?
6. What sin troubled the church?
7. What is the meaning of, "They had all things common?"
8. Wherein lay the sin of Ananias?
9. Was the lie spoken or acted?
10. What do you consider a lie?
11. How did Jesus regard shams?
12. How may we keep back part?
13. Contrast the characters of Barnabas and Ananias.
14. What is the temperance application?
15. What application has the lesson for our day?

Brotherhood

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

He who denies the brotherhood of man in thought, word, or deed, is just as much an infidel as he who denies the fatherhood of God; they are parts each of the other. The one cannot exist without the other. Seneca said, a long time ago that "we are members of one great body, planted by nature in a mutual love, and fitted for a social life. We must consider that we were born for the good of the whole." "None of us liveth to himself, and none dieth to himself."

The foundation of this thought is love. Our Lord said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." It was this principle that caused God to give, and Jesus to live and die for the highest good of the world. This has been the foundation of a long line of philanthropic and benevolent organizations the world over, and shall continue to be the inspiration of the thought of brotherhood to the end of time. Just as rapidly as this principle is crowned king among the nations war will vanish and all men will be brothers again.

Most of us are quite willing to help the man who is in trouble through no fault of his own; but some of us stumble when we are called upon to help the man who is the cause of his own helplessness. We have not measured up to the ideal of Jesus until we are willing to help the man who plunges himself into trouble.

Just as long as men are not equal in brain, or physical power, to live it will be the duty of those who do possess these powers to help their weaker brothers. It will be their obligation to aid them in such a way as to help them to their higher self and not to pauperize them. Much of the aid given in the past resembles that of the man who robbed a fellow man of his possessions, then donated him enough to get home. What most men want is not charity, but justice.

Until we come to realize that we owe more to our fellows than their wages, we cannot claim to be thoroughly Christian. The head of the house owes more to her cook than wages. The merchant owes more to his employees than their weekly wage. We owe to those we meet on the street every day more than half of the sidewalk. They are our brothers and sisters and they deserve our love and sacrifice.

What shall we say of our brothers from across the seas? They are here and they are in a very real sense our brothers. If the man in need is our neighbor, they are surely our neighbors and have a right to expect our care and leadership. They are human and should receive human treatment at the hands of a Christian nation. Christ died for them just as he did for us, and we cannot claim kinship to Jesus and withhold it from them. "Inasmuch as you did it not unto one of these least, ye did it not unto me."

When we recognize our common brotherhood the community will be a safer place in which to live. Every effort will be made to keep temptation of all sorts out of our brother's path, and give him every inducement to live an upright life. A brother would not put in the hands of another the thing that will take his life, under the guise of friendship. Beware of the man who has no more interest in you than your money will buy.

Americans could, with profit, imitate the church manners of the Japanese. A missionary says: "Japanese audiences are models of politeness. No one yawns, snaps his watch, shuffles his feet or goes out, even though the speaker is talking in an unknown tongue. Every eye is upon the speaker. When he begins to speak he is greeted by a polite obeisance from every one in the audience; and when he concludes, another low bow from every one in the room says silently 'I thank you.' After the address, song, a prayer, and benediction, and then what? A grabbing of hats and canes and overcoats and a 'break' for the door? Ah! no; the Japanese have not learned thus to close their worship. All drop into their seats again; for a full minute they sit with covered eyes and bowed heads, and then slowly and reverently pass out of church or break up into little groups."

W. B. Clemmer Doing Remarkable Work at Rockford, Ill.

On January 23 Central church, Rockford, Ill., celebrated with W. B. Clemmer the seventh anniversary of his coming to the Rockford work. When Mr. Clemmer began his ministry at the Illinois city, the congregation was worshiping in a remodeled frame flat building, the whole property worth about $10,000. On this there was an indebtedness of $4,100, which has made the task of building the new church that much more difficult. On Feb. 13, the new church will be dedicated, worth, without the lot, about $30,000. The congregation has raised in cash during the last three years over $22,000. There is a continually growing membership which now numbers 328 resident with a Bible-school enrollment of 304, of which Mr. Clemmer is also serving as superintendent. The growth during the past two years almost equals the four preceding ones. Mr. Clemmer paid a tribute to his wife at this meeting for her wise counsel and hearty support in his work. The congregation is in most expectant mood looking forward to the entrance of the new auditorium, where they believe the real task of the church will be properly begun in the city. J. R. Golden, of Bloomington, will assist the pastor in a week's meetings before dedication day, beginning Sunday, Feb. 8.

17th Annual Dinner Meeting of New York Disciples.

The big event in the social life of the Disciples in New York is the Annual Dinner of the Disciples' Missionary Union. In 1916 the dinner will be given on Tuesday evening, February 8, at 7 o'clock, reports P. F. Jerome. The place selected is the Fifth Avenue Restaurant, corner 23rd St. and Fifth Avenue. The tickets are $1.25. A large private dining room seating 200, has been reserved for the dinner. The program will be of the usual high order. The topic of the addresses will be "Christian Unity," and the speakers will be F. W. Burnham, of Cincinnati; Finis Idleman, of New York, and M. M. Amunson, of Brooklyn. The toastmaster is W. M. Haushalter, of East Orange, N. J. The Disciples' Missionary Union, of New York, promotes mission work in the metropolitan district at five different locations. The annual budget is about $5,000. Mr. A. U. Chaney is president of the union.

"Each-One-Win-One" Campaign at Memphis, Tex.

Memphis, Texas, church, to which Samuel H. Austin ministers, is planning an "Each-One-Win-One" campaign for the Bible-school. It is hoped to bring about a revival in the community, which is inclined to be cold and indifferent spiritually. This church is in need of a good plumber, a jeweler, cement contractor and osteopath physician, writes Mr. Austin.

"Centurion Band" Promoting Efficiency at Richmond Avenue, Buffalo.

Not long ago Charles M. Fillmore, pastor at Hillside church, Indianapolis, organized a "Centurion Band" among his church members which met with great success. John P. Sala, of Richmond Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y., advised with Mr. Fillmore, and is now promoting this plan elaborately in his church. This is a 100 day campaign through which the following aims will be realized, if Mr. Sala's desires are fulfilled: 100 special pledged workers, 100 additions to church membership, 100 increase in church attendance, 100 calls per week, 100 new pledges to current expenses and missions, $100 per 100 members in every member canvass, 100 singers for the choirs, 100 attending prayer-meeting, 100 attending Christian Endeavor meetings, 100 increase in Bible-school attendance, 100 cents increase per Sunday Bible-school offering, 100 in Home department. Each of these goals will be under the direction of some individual or organization. The campaign began with the annual meeting, January 12, and will culminate April 23.

International Leaders in Louisville.

February 13-18 will be a week of unusual interest to the Bible-school workers of Louisville and Kentucky. The 13th will be a great rally day for all the organized Bible classes of Louisville. It is hoped the number may reach ten thousand men in Sunday-school that day. On Monday night, February 14, there will be a great mass meeting at the Second Presbyterian church, when there will be short addresses by Marion Lawrance, W. C. Pearce, Prof. J. R. Sampey, E. W. Halpenny, Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner, John L. Alexander, J. Shreve Durham, W. A. Brown, and others. Every feature of organized Sunday-school work will be presented in an interesting way. Tuesday at 6 p. m. there will be three banquets for different groups or workers, the Elementary at the Temple Methodist church, the Secondary at Klein's on Fourth St., the Ault at the First Christian church. The mornings and afternoons will be devoted to conferences. A large number of the members of the International Committee, representing all of North America, are expected to be present. The meeting of this committee will be held Feb. 17-18.

W. C. Pearce, who will be one of the speakers at the coming Bible-school rally at Louisville, Ky.

A "Pastor's Class" at Canton, Mo.

Henry G. Burgess, pastor at Canton Mo., has organized a pastor's class of young church school children to meet once a week—Friday afternoon of each week until Easter. The members of this class will be candidates for membership in the church at the completion of this course of lessons on "Christian Doctrines." Mr. Burgess writes that he has examined many texts, but has decided that "The Training of Church Members" published by the "Disciples Publication Society" is the best. On Jan. 9, the Methodist pastor at Canton exchanged pulpits with Mr. Burgess. The congregations were completely surprised by the change, which was for the morning service.

R. A. Doan at Springfield, O.

C. M. Burkhart, pastor at Springfield, O., reports that R. A. Doan visited his church an January 23. He spoke to over 100 men in the Bible-school service and to a full house at the morning church service. Mr. Burkhart is now engaged in a series of evangelistic services, doing the preaching himself and being ably assisted in the music and personal work by Miss Katherine Netz. A feature of the meetings is a Junior Chorus, which sings each Friday evening. Springfield has a Bible-class of nearly 400.

Norwood, O., Makes Record Offering to Missions.

The annual reports of the various departments of the Norwood, O., church, C. R. Stauffer, minister, revealed a grand total of $11,200 raised during 1915 for all purposes, 131 persons were received into the membership of the church; 19 were lost by removal and two by death, making a net gain of 110 in membership. The Bible-school averaged 601 in attendance for the year. The largest amount was contributed to missions, in the history of the church, and over $3,000 was paid on the building debt in spite of hard times. S. J. Corey, F. M. Rains, R. A. Doan, N. F. Dean, J. H. Fillmore and C. R. Stauffer are the elders of this congregation.

Disciples Congress to Meet in Chicago.

The Disciples Congress will meet in Chicago, April 25-27. The plans are going steadily forward, reports F. E. Lumley, secretary, and the program is rapidly taking shape. The outlook for a fruitful meeting is bright. Great and timely themes are to be discussed and big men are to discuss them. Some of the notables to be present are: W. D. Ryan, Youngstown, O.; H. E. Stafford, Massillon, O., Prof. C. E. Underwood and Prof. W. C. Morro of Butler College; Prof. Charles M. Sharpe, of Chicago, and Editor F. D. Kershner, of the Christian Evangelist. It is very desirable, writes Mr. Lumley, that all who are interested should take notice of the date of the meeting and plan to attend. This is the reason for early publication of the date. Further announcements will appear from time to time. Persons wishing further information should apply to Frederick E. Lumley, College of Missions, Indianapolis, Ind. J. H. Goldner, of Cleveland, is president of the Congress.

Birmingham, First Church, Gets Rid of "Dead" Members.

Henry Pearce Atkins has entered upon his fourth year of service with First church, Birmingham, Alabama. In the three years of his pastorate the roll of active members has increased from 325 to 469; the roll of out-of-town members from 79 to 86; and the roll of inactive members reduced from 195 to 140. These 55 on the inactive roll were induced to exchange their nominal membership in the First church for active membership in other congregations. A debt of long standing was recently removed and the church enters upon the new year with its valuable property unincumbered without deficit in its current expenses. Mr. Atkins writes that, of the members of First church who have rendered conspicuous service to the community, Mr. R. M. Goodall stands pre-eminent in his contribution to the Anti-saloon League of Alabama. He is the most liberal contributor in all the state and his generous gifts to the cause supplied the sinews of war for the present state-wide prohibition. Mr. W. S. Stallings, general secretary of the local Y. M. C. A., has brought this association to first place among the cities of the South. Mr. J. R. McWane, president of the American Cast Iron Pipe Co., has inaugurated a welfare work among his employees that is attracting national attention for its contribution to the problem of the uplift of the negro. Mrs. S. P. Moore, president of the Birmingham Graded Sunday-school Union, and field worker for Alabama, has rendered efficient service both in the city and throughout the state; while Mr. E. B. Pennington, as superintendent, has brought the First Church Sunday-school to the best period in its history.

Full-Blooded Indian Addresses New York Church.

On Wednesday evening, February 2, at Central church, New York City, was held a special missionary meeting. The leader of the meeting was Mrs. Finis Idleman. Special interest attached to the meeting on account of the speakers selected. Rev. Henry Roe Cloud, M. A., B. D., special representative for the Roe Indian Institute, of Wichita, Kansas was chief speaker. Mr. Cloud is a full-blooded Winnebago Indian, and is the hereditary chief of his tribe. His subject was "The Present Indian Situation." Miss Rose Armbruster, a missionary of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, from Tokio, Japan, spoke on "Japan and Christian Missions." Miss Armbruster is at home on a furlough, and taking special studies at the Bible Teachers' Training School.

To Build for Larger Things at East End, Pittsburg.

The annual membership banquet of East End church, Pittsburg, John Ray Ewers, pastor, was held Jan. 19, with a large attendance. Reports show that during 1915, 78 new members were received, 25 by baptism. Twenty-two letters were granted and four members were lost by death. Net gain, 52. The active membership is about 600. A little over $14,860 was the total amount of money raised during the year. The Building Committee at East End is hard at work and it is expected that the new building will be begun within 1916. Probably there will be a large Bible-school house, an auditorium seating 1,300 and a four story dormitory for young men. The minister's salary has been substantially increased, making it possible for him to own an automobile. This church has for its ideal steady, solid, substantial growth, working always for very large ultimate things.

Albion, Ill., Church, Promotes "Century Class" for Christian Training.

About two years ago the church at Albion, Ill., where T. J. Clark ministers, successfully dedicated a splendid $15,000 church home. Too often it is true that a new building breaks the back of a congregation and the work retrogrades. This has not been true at Albion, as reports indicate: The money pledged on the new home is coming in regularly, the Sunday-school keeps at about 200 attendance, and in the last few weeks about fifteen young married people have enlisted in the work of the church. One of the outstanding events in recent months is the organization of a "Century Class" for the training of the church membership for service. Seventy-five persons are now enrolled, with bright prospects for reaching the 100 mark in a few weeks. The Albion work is Mr. Clark's third charge in forty-five years. His former pastorates were at Vincennes and Bloomington, Ind.

Herbert Yeuell Will Lead in Wabash, Ind., Meetings.

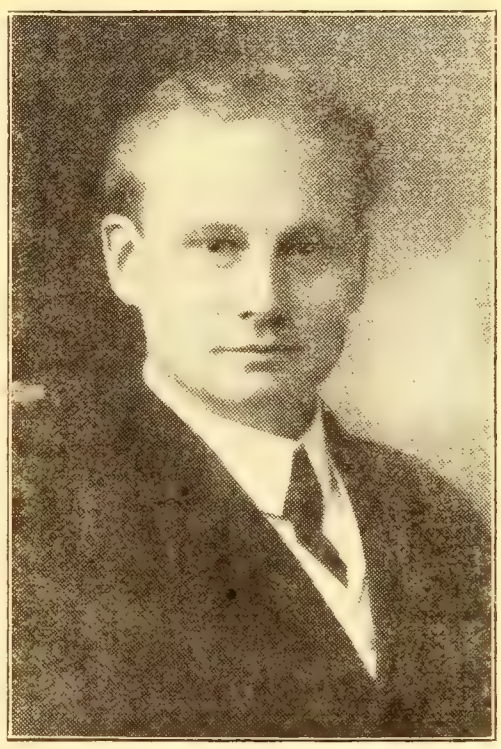
Evangelist Herbert Yeuell will assist Frank E. Jaynes, pastor of the church at Wabash, Ind., immediately following the National Convention at Des Moines. Mr. Jaynes states that Mr. Yeuell was not selected at random as the evangelist for this field, but because of the high character of his work and peculiar fitness for that strong and intellectual church. A representative of the Wabash church was present at many of Mr. Yeuell's inspirational addresses and lectures recently given at Memorial church, Chicago.

Secretary G. W. Muckley Goes to Panama.

Secretary Muckley goes to the Panama Latin-American Congress to represent the Board of Church Extension. Mrs. Muckley is making the trip also. They sailed from New Orleans on a fruit steamer, yesterday. Mr. Muckley reports that he attended the Home Missions Council, in New York, ten days ago, being a member of the Rural Fields Committee, also of the Church Building Committee. Secretary Grant K. Lewis was also present, as a member of the Business and Executive Committees.

Baptists and Disciples Co-operate in Meetings.

The members of the Baptist church, at Rialto, Cal., are co-operating in a meeting being held at the Disciples' church there by Bruce Brown. J. E. Pickett is the Rialto pastor. Twenty-six persons were added to the membership in two weeks, large audiences attending each night in spite of rain. Mr. Brown's next meeting will be at Pico church, Los Angeles, with S. M. Bernard.



Report of Central Church, Terre Haute, Ind.

J. Boyd Jones, pastor at Central church, Terre Haute, reports that the congregation raised a total of $14,713.25 during the year just closed. This amount came from the following sources: Current fund, $10,044.91; Bible-school, $3,078.84; Social Union, $653.22; Ludeans, $452.06; C. W. B. M., $295.22; the Circle, $45.00; Christian Endeavor, $44. The Bible-school had an average of over 600 attendance for the year. Mr. Jones writes that this is a great united church.

Danville, Ind., Bible Class Presents Organ to Church.

The Third Anniversary Banquet of the Twentieth Century Bible Class, of Danville, Ind., church, was held in the dining-room of the church, Wednesday evening, January 19. There were 275 who partook of the banquet feast. The wives and husbands of the members of the class as well as the officers of the Bible-school, officers of the church and the Board of Control, were the invited guests of the evening. The menu consisted of 12 turkeys and one deer, besides other bounties. Most of the program was rendered by the class. A challenge was given to this class by 25 of its members that if the class would maintain an average attendance during the next year (excepting August) of 101, they would pay the expenses of the next Anniversary Banquet. This challenge was accepted and last Sunday there were 117 present at the class period. This remarkable class has been a great factor in the church life at Danville. The social spirit which it fosters and its ministries to the sick have endeared it to many people. Its aim is to follow a practical religion instead of a merely theoretical one. When the new building was erected a new organ was needed. An offering was made by Mr. Andrew Carnegie to furnish $1,250, if the other $1250 could be procured locally. This class raised the amount and presented the organ to the church. It also furnished its class room, which is also used for Christian Endeavor, prayer-meeting, and general service room of the church. It also provided the dining room with enough splendid collapsible tables to seat 250 people. The class is recognized as a factor in the community life and these annual banquets are one of the great occasions of the calendar year of the church. The class is taught by the minister of the church, Charles O. Lee.

Rev. W. W. Sniff, in whose school at Newcastle, Pa., the first week's collection in each month goes to missions.

Ohio Has "School of Inspiration and Instruction."

Wilford H. McLain, Ohio Bible-school Superintendent, reports a successful "school of inspiration and instruction" held by the state society for Bible-school workers at the Marion Christian church. Ninety-five persons enrolled, representing sixteen schools, and seventeen persons fulfilled the requirements necessary for an international certificate. C. A. Pearce, the pastor-superintendent, and his workers had secured a large amount of advertising space in the local papers and did much personal work before the school began. The Marion Tribune had a reporter at every session of the school and gave accurate and generous reports of each of the lectures. The faculty was composed of Walter S. Goode, Youngstown; E. W. Thornton, Cincinnati; J. J. Tisdall, Columbus; Mrs. Phebe A. Curtis, and the Ohio State Superintendent. Those in attendance were so well pleased with the work that they set on foot plans to have a similar school each year.

New Castle, Pa., School Gives First Collection in Month to Missions.

Some very interesting figures are gleaned from the annual report of First church school, New Castle, Pa. The average attendance at the school's sessions for 1915 was 430, a gain of 33 over the year preceding; the total collections were $1,395.47, an average of $26.84 per Sunday and an increase over 1914 of $416.14. The school paid $400 on the debt of the church. In this school the first collection every month goes to missions. W. W. Sniff is pastor at New Castle.

F. E. Billington Tells of Pioneer Work in the Northwest.

In the great northwest district of the United States lies a fruitful field for Bible-school development, the more so for the reason that much of this country is sparsely inhabited and the work of the pioneer sort. F. E. Billington has the good fortune to have been chosen to lead the work in the northwest with headquarters at Spokane (Altadena Apts.) Of recent progress made he writes thus interestingly: "We are very happy in the northwest just now to be able to report a decided gain both in the number of schools giving to American missions and in the amount given. Last year we were ahead of the previous year, but for this year, and at this time, our gain over last year is 56 per cent in the number of contributing schools and 46 per cent in the amount sent in. The standard of work in our schools is better than last year. The spirit of our workers is broadening and deepening. The educational idea is beginning to grip our churches in an effective way. We have organized five new schools within the last two months. Three of these are in school houses in the country in eastern Washington, one at Idaho Falls, Ida., and the other among the Chinese people in Spokane. This will be a sort of mission for our schools in the city. There are at least a score of places where we should have Bible schools, but it is a difficult task to find people who will take the responsibility of the work. At Harlowtown, Mont., and Snohomish, Wash., we have committees acting as a sort of "Trust Companies" for organizations as soon as places of meeting can be secured. If our people in the great "Center" knowing of consecrated Disciples living in communities where we have no churches, will give me names and addresses, I shall count it a great favor." * * *

Those who live on the mountain have a longer day than those who live in the valley. Sometimes all we need to brighten our day is to rise a little higher.

Herbert Yeuell at Memorial Church, Chicago.

Dr. Yeuell belongs to Memorial church probably more than to any other congregation of the Disciples. He is rarely there, but Mrs. Yeuell is one of the valued members of the congregation. His homecoming during the holiday season made possible the planning of a two weeks' mission at the church. It was not intended that this should be a revival meeting in the usual sense of the word, but it was felt that a series of lectures and addresses such as Dr. Yeuell could deliver would be of great value. He was there on three Sundays and the two intervening weeks. On Monday and Friday evenings he delivered illustrated lectures on such themes as would interest any audience. Many of his pictures were very beautiful. On the other evenings and the Sunday morning he preached earnest and straightforward sermons such as would promote church efficiency, would accentuate the values of the Christian life, and would bring men and women to decision to become members of the church. The weather was exceptionally unfavorable during almost the entire period of his stay, which greatly limited the attendance, but those who were present profited by the meetings and greatly enjoyed both the addresses of Dr. Yeuell and the singing of Mr. Earl Yearsley, his assistant. There were a number of additions to the church by confession as well as by letter. A longer period of similar work would undoubtedly have greatly increased this number. The people at Memorial were glad to become so well and favorably acquainted with Dr. Yeuell, as they already knew and prized the association of Mrs. Yeuell and their son Don. They can now understand something of Dr. Yeuell's success both as evangelist and lecturer elsewhere.

Miss Josepha Franklin Visiting Indiana Relatives.

Miss Josepha Franklin, who for twenty-five years has been engaged in mission work in India arrived in Anderson, Ind., early last month, and is a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Wright, relatives of the missionary. Miss Franklin is one of three sisters who have worked in the mission field of India. One sister, Mildred, who is now married and lives in Utah spent a number of years in heathen lands, and is yet doing mission work in the state where she resides. Stella Franklin is still in India. Miss Josepha Franklin left India early last spring, and in June reached California, where she attended the National Convention at Los Angeles. Subsequently she suffered from nervous breakdown, brought on by constant responsibility in teaching the gospel to Hindoo children. Miss Franklin was ill for many weeks in California, then visited her sister in Utah, following which she was the guest of another sister, Mrs. Grace Homan, in Cleveland. Miss Franklin is the living link in India for the Christian church at Kokomo, Ind. Since she left Anderson, both her father and mother have died. They were pioneer church workers in Anderson and charter members of Central church. Stella Franklin, the sister missionary, will soon reach Anderson on a furlough.

Bloomington, Ind., Church to Build New Bible School Home.

Plans have been ordered drawn for a new church edifice to be erected by the Kirkwood Avenue Church, Bloomington, Ind. It is hoped to begin actual construction work early in the spring. It is the present plan of the building committee to erect a structure not to cost more than $30,000 to be known as the working part of the building so as to accommodate the rapidly growing attendance at the Sunday-school which is now between 400 and 500. Later, the main structure will be erected for the general church work. W. H. Smith is pastor at Kirkwood Avenue.

Activities in African Missions.

W. R. Holder and his new wife write that they have reached Moneika, Africa, in the best of spirits; that they are located in their home there and planning for large things for the station. Dr. and Mrs. J. G. P. Barger, who went out at the same time, are located at Bolenge. This is their initial service on the field, and they write that the outlook, the surroundings, the work and the missionaries have all inspired them more than they had even dreamed. Dr. Barger, Dr. Frymire and Dr. Jaggard are making the rounds of the various stations for difficult surgical operations. Many of these patients have the dread disease of elephantiasis, the cure of which has been very successfully handled by our medical men. Some of these patients have been obliged to wait a year for the operation.

Christian University and the Missouri College Union.

On October 26, a committee appointed from the Missouri College Union visited Christian University, at Canton, Mo., for the purpose of inspecting equipment and organization, with a view to its admission to membership in the union. The committee consisted of J. C. Jones, Dean of the College of Arts and Science of the State University, chairman; Professor Baskett, of William Jewell College, and Professor Vosholl, of Central Wesleyan College. The report of the committee, just out, is favorable to the school. The members of the committee take occasion to say some very complimentary things about the present position of the school and its future prospects, the chairman going so far as to say that, in his opinion, Christian University was destined to become the strongest college in the state.

Michigan Leader Makes Fine Record.

Since State Evangelist J. S. Raum, of Michigan, began his ministry fifteen years ago there have been 2,491 persons brought to decision for Christ and his church.

Central Church, Houston, Texas, Building Up Attendance.

Central church, Houston, Texas, has inaugurated an attendance campaign covering a period of six weeks. The city is divided into four districts with a captain over each. The duty of the captains will be to arouse an interest in the church by a larger attendance from their particular district. Cards for registration have been provided and every one in attendance requested to register the service present and as to whether a member or a visitor, and church preference, if not already a member.

Son of Laura D. Garst Marries.

"Morry" Garst, son of Laura D. Garst, well known and loved in Iowa, and among Disciples of many states, was married to Miss Bertha Lampson of Fairfield, Ia., on Christmas day. The wedding was the culmination of a four years' acquaintance at Iowa State college, Ames. The groom was formerly a West High football player and later an Ames tract star. He was born in Japan, where his parents were missionaries under the Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

Benton Harbor, Mich., Church Soon to Have New Home.

Benton Harbor, Mich., church is making an heroic effort to complete the new church building by April, 1916. It is going to be one of the finest auditoriums in the city The church began a friendly contest with the Dowagiac Sunday-school Jan. 1, and the church at the same time entered upon a great educational campaign, leading up to a special evangelistic meeting in April. Additions are reported nearly every Lord's day. T. W. Bellingham, the pastor, completed seven years' pastorate last November, when the church gave the minister and wife a fine reception.

New Teacher in Chinese University Studies the Field.

Dr. Clarence Hamilton has been enjoying visits to the churches in the Chuchow District with W. Remfry Hunt. The history of these churches around the great evangelistic district of Chuchow covers a period of twenty-five years. Mr. Hunt has been in the Chuchow field since its opening, being the only surviving missionary of the four pioneer founders of our work in that city. Dr. Hamilton says the experience is a wonderful education in the origin and development of mission churches. While in the Chuchow field, Dr. Hamilton is studying the Chinese language and preparing for his work in the chair of philosophy in the University of Nankng.

Missouri Church Meets in Theater.

Meetings of the church at Princeton, Mo., E. T. Cornelius, minister, are being held in a theater owing to the fact that the congregation has sold its old building and has not completed the new one. Because of the absence of the minister, conducting a meeting at Ravanna, the men of the Princeton church have been conducting the Lord's Day evening meetings.

Lowell, Ind., Pastor Cares for Mission Points.

S. O. Landis has received 115 into the fellowship at Lowell, Ind., the past year. The congregation gave more than $7,000 for all purposes and has been mothering a number of mission points, Mr. Landis having preached three and four nights a week throughout the surrounding country. The congregation recently had the joy of ordaining two of its members to the ministry.

"Get Together Campaign" at Berkeley, Cal.

H. J. Loken is leading in a "Get Together Campaign" in his church at Berkeley, Cal. He reports that never before in the history of the church have so many persons taken hold of the church tasks. Hundreds of calls and phone messages are speeding the campaign on its way. Mr. Loken writes as follows of the new ideals which have aroused the enthusiasm of his workers: "We have set our heart on a committee of a hundred boosters who will stand around this thing until it is an assured success. The object is to get together in our common enterprise of bringing the Kingdom of God to men. More concretely, it is to secure the co-operation of every member of the church in making of our church an evangelizing agency; two hundred scholars taking regular work in our Bible-school; one hundred young people brought into touch with the two C. E. societies; at least fifty women, including the young women, enlisted for mission study once a month; a missionary budget of $400 per year paid in monthly or weekly; our current expense budget met promptly every month; at least fifty new members added to the church, and the best and most efficient choir in the city—these are some of the big ideals we are working for."

Independence Boulevard (Kansas City) Has "Whatsoever Circle."

The "Whatsoever Circle" of Independence Boulevard church, Kansas City, Mo., has a membership of 225 women. In the past year they have contributed to the current expense of the church, to seven charitable institutions of the city and to needy families and individuals. They have maintained a scholarship in William Woods College, conducted devotional services at a girls' home, a summer camp and for individuals, and conducted a vacation Bible-school and a "Mothers' Circle." They have pledged $1,000 for the furnishing of the orthopaedic ward of the new Christian hospital.

Missionary Books Become Best Sellers.

The Foreign Society is selling a large number of missionary books this year. The rally teams report that never before have the people been so eager to buy literature. The annual sales of missionary books by the Foreign Society are from 5,000 to 10,000 copies. It looks as though this year would be a phenomenal year in that regard. Among the best sellers are "In Cherry Blossom Land," by Mrs. Madden, "Epoch Makers of Modern Missions," by A. McLean, and "Among Asia's Needy Millions," by S. J. Corey.

Los Angeles Pastor Considers Modern Problems.

A series of Sunday evening sermons was recently preached by Scott Anderson, pastor at South Park church, Los Angeles, on the timely subject, "Is This a Christian Nation?" The question was answered from various viewpoints on successive Sundays, as follows: Is This a Christian Nation—(1) Historically, (2) Politically, (3) Religiously, (4) Educationally, (5) Socially, (6) Industrially, (7) Internationally? Mr. Anderson recently wrote a two-column editorial for the Los Angeles Examiner in criticism of the billion dollar loan made by this country to the allies.

Indiana Churches Making State Survey.

The State Survey of the Christian Churches of Indianapolis is now in progress. The state workers, including C. W. Cauble, Garry L. Cook, Fred R. Davies and Mrs. O. H. Griest, began at the East Columbus church, January 3. The counties of Bartholomew, Jackson, Scott and Jefferson were visited the first week in January. The first thing in order in one of these county surveys is to hang up a map of the county, with the townships and most important towns given. Then every church in the county is located accurately on this map and the condition of every church is investigated.

Efficiency Institute at Fort Worth, Tex.

Magnolia Avenue church, Fort Worth, Tex., is to have an Efficiency Institute on February 21-25. The subjects and speakers are: Ministerial Relief, Dr. Clinton Lockhart; Benevolences, Otis Hawkins; Foreign Missions, H. D. Smith; Christian Woman's Board of Missions, Mrs. Terry King; American Missions, S. W. Hutton; Education, Clifford S. Weaver; Church Extension, L. D. Anderson. In addition to these features, local church talent will discuss phases of Bible-school work.

A Victory at Ft. Wayne, Ind.

O. E. Tomes and West Jefferson Street church, Ft. Wayne, Ind., are happy over the payment of an old debt of $4,400. They not only pledged the amount needed, but $1,000 additional. Mr. Tomes has been at Ft. Wayne two years, has had 300 additions, and has done a lot of substantial work. West Jefferson Street is ready now for an advance. A revival meeting was scheduled for January, Mr. Tomes preaching and Prof. Sturgis singing.

A Distinctive Reason

What is the chief reason for the superiority of Royal Baking Powder?

There are several good reasons, but there is one which distinguishes Royal from other baking powders.

This reason, which every woman should know, is that Royal Baking Powder is made from cream of tartar, which comes from grapes. This means a healthful fruit origin. It means natural food as distinguished from mineral substitutes used in other baking powders.

There is no alum nor phosphate in Royal Baking Powder.

Solving the Mid-week Prayer Meeting Problem.

The problem of the mid-week meeting in a New York church bids fair to be happily solved by the new plan inaugurated at Central church. Finis S. Idleman, the new minister, has adopted the plan which proved successful for three years in his church of 3,000 members in Des Moines. The program provides for bunching the week's church engagements into one night and combines a devotional period, a conference session and a social gathering. It is called the 'triangle meeting" combining as it does the three different angles of church work. The devotional period begins at 7:45 p. m. and is distinctively a meeting of song and prayer. Mr. Idleman suggests the various branches of religious activities, general and personal, as the objects for intercession for the meeting and a number of members are then asked to pray for these special topics. A good pianist and chorister insure the right kind of songs. The conference period follows at 8:30, at the close of the devotional period, and the meeting breaks up into different groups representing all the organized activities of the church work. In one corner the young people talk over Christian Endeavor plans. In another corner the publicity committee reviews its work of the week, and plans its campaign for the future. Similarly in different rooms or parts of the church one can find conferences of trustees, deacons, missionary societies, etc. Mr. Idleman believes that successful supervision of church work requires more frequent meetings than once a month, and the new plan of a weekly conference is a fine stimulus to the workers. Persons present not related to any of the conferences are asked to join in any one for which they have a preference. The social period begins at nine o'clock. Conferences are over and tea is served by one of the societies, and a half hour of fellowship and acquaintance making closes the evening. This "triangle meeting" has already increased the attendance at the mid-week meeting nearly threefold. The plan will be watched with interest by other churches.

Ashland, O., School Entertains Experts.

The church at Ashland, O., A. B. Robertson, pastor, aimed to have all of the church in the Bible-school on Sunday, January 2, and to have all of the Bible-school in the church the following Lord's day. W. H. McLain, State Bible School Superintendent for Ohio, and Miss Hazel A Lewis, National Elementary Superintendent, were present at the school on January 9.

Every-Member Canvass at Pittsburg Church.

Carl R. Berry, minister to the Hazelwood, Pittsburg, church, led his people in an every-member canvass on January 9, which resulted in more money being pledged to the work.

Most Successful Year at Omaha, First.

At the annual business meeting of First church, Omaha, Neb., it was reported that the past year has been the most successful from every standpoint that the church has ever experienced. The reports showed that all the local expenses have been paid and that there is money in the church treasury. The church mission paid about $1,000 more to these expenses than in any preceding year. There has been a net increase of 246 in church membership. The Every Member Canvass was recently promoted with splendid success. Thirty-seven men reached every member of the congregation.

Moline, Ill., Pastor a Fruitful Evangelist.

Moline, Ill., First church, James A. Barnett, pastor, received during the year 70 members, as follows: By baptism, 45; by letter, statement and reclaimed, 25; making a net gain of 65. The present enrollment is 346. The Bible-school had an average attendance of 224, the banner attendance being 354 on June 6. Total amount of money raised by church and auxiliaries, $3,377, of which $2,980 was expended locally and $397 for missions and benevolences. The church raised $2,525, the Bible-school, $670, the Ladies' Aid Society $202, the Christian Endeavor Society $57, and the C. W. B. M. (recently organized) $18. The pastor reported for the eight months of his ministry with the church as follows: Sermons and addresses, 112; calls, 166. He spent six weeks in meetings elsewhere, preaching 53 sermons and receiving 64 additions. Including his evangelistic meetings before locating at Moline in May, he received a total of 331 additions to the churches during the year 1915.

North Yakima Ladies' Aid Pays $5,000 on Building.

The annual meeting and election of officers in First church, North Yakima, Wash., were held Jan. 13. Reports were heard from every department. Total receipts were $7,034.25. Of this $1,944.60 was applied on the debt and $449.77 to missions. The church property is valued at $53,000. The present debt is $7,500, with a legacy of $3,000, due this month and the balance pledged to be paid within eighteen months. The Bible-school averaged 414 per Sunday in attendance and $10.14 in offerings, with total receipts of $840.49, of which $209 was for missions. Total enrollment in all departments, 783. There were 73 confessions from the school during the year. There are 45 teachers and 18 officers in the North Yakima school. J. W. Tapp is the superintendent and Mrs. Mary Yeager, educational director. Ladies' Aid receipts were $1,106.37. There are five divisions all working harmoniously. This organization has paid $5,000 on the new building to date. The C. W. B. M. has 61 active members. The ministers' report showed 97 sermons, 657 calls, 408 meetings attended, 58 weddings, 44 funerals and 140 additions to the church. The present resident membership is 988, with 156 who live in other towns in the valley. Total, 1,144. The church voted to ask the minister, W. F. Turner, and his assistant, J. W. Tapp, to hold a "home force" meeting this winter. This will be their third in four years.

Sharon, Pa., Church Points to Fine Results of New Pastor's Service.

R. J. Bennett went to Sharon, Pa., from Wilmington, O., Dec. 1. The following Tuesday night the church held a reception. L. G. Batman, of Youngstown, O., an old friend of Mr. Bennett, and D. P. Shafer, his father in the gospel from Central church, New Castle, were present and gave talks in commendation of the new preacher. The "White Gifts" service was given at Sharon at Christmas. One person made the "good confession" at this service. About fifteen families of the community were remembered with baskets, while a barrel of canned goods was sent to the Cleveland Christian Orphanage. The first week of the new year the pastor preached every night in an effort to get the correct addresses of all members. This was called "Enrollment Week." On Thursday night of that week a church social was held after the preaching service. The Sharon Bible-school is alive and thoroughly organized. The classes have monthly meetings and annual banquets. This fosters a good spirit of service. The Christian Endeavor is reorganized with one of the High-school teachers as president. Another High-school teacher is superintendent of the Bible-school. Sunday night, Jan. 23, the church observed Education Day with a special service on "Christian Education." Prof. Robt. W. Peden, of the High-school, spoke on "The Place of Hiram College Among the Colleges of Disciples," and Prof. Elmer Stillings, also a High-school teacher, spoke on "Hiram's Ideals." These men are both graduates of Hiram. Mr. Edwin Stillings, at present a student at Hiram, read the Scripture. Prof. Perry A. Jones, a graduate of Bethany and at present Principal of Sharon High-school, spoke on "What I Owe To Bethany College." The pastor is also a Bethany graduate and he spoke for both Hiram and Bethany. There have been fourteen additions at the church since Dec. 1. The church and Bible-school have voted to adopt as an aim the doubling of the enrollment, attendance, offering and efficiency in five years' time.

The Indiana Plan of County Conferences Works.

Indiana Disciples are proud of the results being obtained by the newly adopted plan of county organization. This is an outgrowth of the old yearly county mass meeting of the churches. It contemplates the continuance and further development of that meeting wherever practicable. The plan provides for an organized co-operative fellowship within the county which shall always be on the alert for the interests of the common cause, which shall continuously study the problems of the churches in their local relations and their co-operative activities, and shall give support to and promote the whole program of work as a brotherhood of churches. Announcement comes of the first series of county conferences planned for late February in the Eastern District: Johnson County at Franklin, February 14-15. Shelby County, at Flat Rock, February 15-16. Rush County, at Rushville, February 16-17. Hamilton County, at Noblesville, February 17-18. Madison County, at Summitville, February 21-22. Grant County, at Marion, February 22-23. Howard County, at Fairfield, February 23-24. Tipton County, at Kempton, February 24-25. Garry L. Cook, Indiana's Sunday-school Superintendent; T. J. Legg, pioneer state evangelist, and Mrs. O. H. Greist, of the State C. W. B. M. will be associated with the Eastern District Evangelist, G. I. Hoover, in this series of conferences.

Charles S. Earley Leaves Oskaloosa, Ia., Church at Close of Fruitful Service.

Two years ago, Charles S. Earley went to Oskaloosa, Ia., to conduct a series of meetings. His effort was successful and of a character that made him desirable as a minister of the church which at that time

Ray E. Rice, of Damoh, India, writes that Mrs. Rice has taken charge of the Girls' School in the town and he has taken the Boys' Orphanage School from Mr. Rioch. Mrs. Rice and he have charge of a non-Christian Sunday-school in the town.

Dr. Mary McGavran reports a busy month in the medical department. The attendance at the dispensary ran 119 a day for the whole month. A great many of these people came from distant villages. The miles traveled by the patients to and from the hospital numbered 4,170. The season has been an unusually bad one for malaria, hardly one escaping.

Dr. C. L. Pickett, of Laoag, P. I., reports 30 baptisms for the month; 74 Sunday-school classes taught regularly, average attendance being 1,774; total number of medical treatments, 1,688; minor surgical operations, 31; major surgical operations, 71; in-patients admitted to the hospitals, 72.

Leslie Wolfe, of Manila, P. I., reports 29 conversions for the month from the various points in the Tagalog provinces.

Dr. W. A. Frymere reports the average daily attendance at the dispensary as being 35; the treatments given in the month, 1,613.

P. A. Davey, of Osaka, Japan, writes: "Last Sunday a student of Waseda University was baptized. Early in December the Tokyo district preachers attended a two days' conference. Eleven Japanese evangelists and F. E. Hagin had dinner and a social hour in the Davey home.

F. E. Hagin reports that the Christians in Hachiojo Islands are conducting their own Sunday-school and prayer-meetings. They have no preacher.

D. O. Cunningham, of Bilaspur, India, writes that the average attendance of the Sunday-school for the month was 486. He writes ,also, that a hearty welcome was extended to Mr. and Mrs. Saum, and to Mrs. Benlehr, also to the workers to the Woman's Board.

Word has been received of the death of two children, one the child of Mr. and Mrs. McCall, of Akita, Japan, and the other the child of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. B. Baird, of Luchowfu, China.

Two series of rallies are being conducted: The one in the West led by Bert Wilson and H. C. Hobgood and C. E. Robinson; the one in the East conducted by R. A. Doan and M. B. Madden. The Anderson church, under the leadership of J. W. Underwood, made most elaborate preparation for the raily. It was announced three times in the daily papers, and announced at all the services preceding the rally. The ladies of the church served both dinner and supper. A male quartet rendered two selections. The aim was to have 300 present at the supper. With such enthusiastic preparation the rally could not but be a success.

was without a pastor. A call was extended Mr. Earley and he accepted the same conditionally—that he be permitted to return to his evangelistic field after a certain term of service for the church. He assumed charge of the pulpit on the first Sunday in January, 1914, Mr. Earley now feels called to the wider field of evangelism, and has resigned the Oskaloosa pastorate against the wishes of the congregation. Mr. Early went immediately to Capitol Hill church, Des Moines, where he is engaged now in a revival. Oskaloosa will continue to be the permanent home of Mr. Earley's family and the headquarters of the evangelist. During Mr. Earley's administration the church at Oskaloosa has prospered, as the following record will show: Three hundred and thirty-three persons have responded to the invitation extended by the minister. The Sunday-school has averaged the largest in its history and has been more efficiently organized. Attendance at the regular services has been the largest for years. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions Auxiliary has increased about 50 per cent. A Mission Circle has been organized among the young women of the church, which is the largest ever organized in a Disciple church in Iowa. This circle is increasing in membership and interest. The Y. P. S. C. E. has increased in efficiency and interest and an Intermediate Society organized which is doing good work. Gospel team work has been launched among both the men and the women, and much good work done by them. The Aid Society and Philadora Club have both done splendidly in their respective fields of work. The church has made its largest contribution to missions, and is supporting its own missionary in India. It has undertaken its largest budget for the year 1916—$6,500—and has this amount nearly subscribed.

Evanston, Ill., Pastor Interprets Last Year's Work.

O. F. Jordan has considered the 1915 work of his congregation critically and reports some interesting findings. He writes: "The economic factor has had much to do with church work the past year. We had the largest number of baptisms and the smallest number received by church letter, of any year in our history. The latter fact was due to nothing but economic causes. The smallest number of weddings was celebrated of any year in eight years, which is symptomatic of the economic conditions! If the church had had the same expenses as in 1914, there would have been no deficit. Three hundred dollars less were received on pledges than in the previous year, but special enterprises enabled us to meet all obligations. There are many encouraging facts about the work. The membership made a net gain of four, in spite of conditions unfavorable to recruiting. The attendance gained in both our morning and evening services, and for the morning service is the largest in our recorded history. Less than one-half of one per cent of our personal pledges defaulted. We gave through our various organizations nearly a hundred dollars more for missions than the previous year, the largest amount we have given since we have been in the new building. Only one year since our building was dedicated have we given more money for all purposes than we gave last year. The Every-Member Canvass starts us off on the new year with much more favorable footing. The 105 pledges are thirty per cent more than we have ever had before at this time of year, though not enough to finance our present budget entirely."

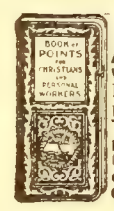
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE BOARD NOTES.

The work of the board under the direction of the new secretary, L. E. Sellers, is developing in a most encouraging way.

Word from every quarter of the country is of the most cheering character. The fact is, our preachers and churches are simply going to support this work as they support our other national interests. Nothing can block the progress of Prohibition, and our churches know that through this regularly organized medium, the disciples of Christ can best help on to glorious victory. Loyalty to our own church board in the great national struggle with the liquor traffic will be the best way, and with many churches the only way, of helping on to certain victory.

The board hopes that every church in the brotherhood will accept the apportionment for this work or arrange for an offering for it as a special cause.



National Secretary L. E. Sellers, is ready to accept invitations to address temperance meetings, speak in "dry" campaigns and to present the claims of the Temperance Board before our churches anywhere. Write him for dates.

The office is prepared to furnish all kinds of temperance supplies and literature, much of which may be had for the asking.

SOME STRIKING FACTS

The Foreign Society has established missions at the most strategic points in the heart of Africa, China, Japan, the Philippine Islands, India, and Tibet. This is a fact of very great importance.

The Foreign Society has emphasized with great strength the need of medical missions, and has planted hospitals in leading stations throughout the world.

During the brief time our missionaries have been in the Philippine Islands they have baptized over 7,000 people.

Our work at Batang, Tibet, is the only mission station among these 7,000,000 people, and is the most remote mission station in the world.

The work in Africa is one of the most outstanding missionary undertakings in the world. The native churches there support more than 100 evangelists of their own. There are 5,000 converts after seventeen years of work.

In the district of Nantungchow, China, there are 6,000,000 people for whom our four missionaries are responsible. One of the greatest, most open, and most untouched fields in the world.

The missionaries of the Foreign Society have created for the people a written language in Africa, have translated much of the New Testament, printed a lexicon with 5,000 words, a grammar, school books, and a Christian paper on the mission press.

The Sallie Long Reed Hospital, at Laoag, P. I., under the direction of Dr. Pickett, has practically eliminated the dread disease of yaws, and receives $3,000 a year for expenses from the Filipino government. The number of patients treated last year was 15,476.

Our missionaries preach in ten different languages and in eight different lands. The sun never sets on the mission stations of the Foreign Society.

At Tumba, Africa, far distant from our mission stations, where R. Ray Eldred, our martyr missionary, lies buried, 307 people were recently baptized.

At Batang, on the Tibetan border, the first Sunday-school, the first Christian day school, the first kindergarten, the first baptisms, and the first church for the Tibetans have been made possible by the Disciple missionaries.

In Japan, the private secretary to Count Okuma, the premier of the Japanese Government, is a Japanese Disciple. The two chief interpreters for foreign speakers in Japan are Disciples. One of the chief Japanese Christian educators is a Disciple, and one of the five converts in Japan is a Disciple.

In Nankin, China, a highly educated Chinese man, who is a graduate of Hiram College, refused a government position at $2,000 a year to accept a position as teacher in our mission at $600 a year. His brother left a position paying him $1,200 a year to accept a salary of $300 in our Bible College in Nankin.

The Foreign Society conducts an orphanage at Damoh, India, of considerable importance. There is a farm of 400 acres. The orphanage is for boys only. There have been as many as 400 boys in this institution at one time. The boys that go there have no homes. They are given an education. They are taught the Bible every day. They also learn a trade. This institution has been supported by the Endeavor Societies from the first.

The Foreign Society conducts a printing press at Jubbulpore, India. It does a great quantity of printing during the year. It publishes pamphlets and booklets and papers. It is a strong agency for the extension of the Kingdon in that land.

The Foreign Society has received and expended $6,163,333 in forty years, or since its organization in 1875. We are sure every friend is more than satisfied with the results.

The offering for Foreign Missions in our churches is the first Sunday in March. If you have not already done so please order March Offering Supplies to-day, free of charge.

A Notable Success

The welcome that has been given by the leaders in the churches and Sunday schools to the little book just issued by the Disciples Publication Society:

"The Training of Church Members"

is evidence that this text has come to meet a very definite need in the churches.

The following are typical letters received from leaders concerning the book:

FROM REV. H. CLAY TRUSTY, Seventh Street Church, Indianapolis: "I have examined thoroughly the manual, "The Training of Church Members," and think it a very fine thing. We need to spend some time with young Christians on the fundamentals of our Christian religion and church life. This affords a splendid guide."

FROM REV. L. C. MOORE, Waterloo, Ia.: "This book is filling a long known need in our mid-week service. I am more than pleased with it. The attendance was doubled in four weeks by the use of the text."

FROM REV. IRVING BROWN, Sac City, Ia.: "I am much impressed with it. Shall introduce it either at the C. E. or mid-week prayer-meetings. We all need the training it supplies."

FROM REV. L. J. MARSHALL, Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo.:

"This is a timely piece of work. Its clear and simple presentations of the lessons to be taught should make it popular among Christian workers."

How You May Use "The Training of Church Members in Your Work

(1) As a book of study in your mid-week or Endeavor prayer-meeting.

(2) As a text-book in your young people's Sunday school classes.

(3) As a text for study in a special "Pastor's class" organized for training of young Christians and meeting either through the week or on Sunday.

(4) As a teacher-training course.

The New Year is at hand. Make it coun or something in genuine, substantialt training in religion.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Will be the most significant period in the history of the publication. As readers of the "Century" know, Mr. Morrison has been chosen Editorial Representative of the Panama Congress, with the task of interpreting its deliberations to the secular and religious press of North America. Mr. Morrison will also accompany the deputation of sixteen from Panama to the series of Regional Conferences to be held in four capital cities of South America—Lima, Santiago, Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro. He will interpret these conferences also to the press and will compile their deliberations into a volume to constitute Volume Four of the "Proceedings" of the Panama Congress.

Readers of The Christian Century will be pleased to learn that Mr. Morrison has promised to send articles concerning the Congress and Conferences for first publication in the columns of The Christian Century. These will be the first authoritative reports of this great religious council, second in importance only to the Edinburg Conference, held in 1910.

HERE IS A SUGGESTION

You will wish your friends to enjoy these stirring reports of the achievements of these epochal meetings. Here is the way for you to realize this desire: The publishers have arranged to furnish The Christian Century during these eight months at a special rate of 75 cents per subscription. The Great Refusal

AN ATTITUDE OF UNWILLINGNESS TO RECEIVE LIFE WITH ALL ITS INSPIRING POSSIBILITIES IS ESSENTIALLY THE GREAT REFUSAL.

When Dante walked with Virgil through the menacing gateway of the Inferno, he found himself in a desolate and arid region where sighs and wailings were heard, and where brooded the dim twilight of a lifeless world. It was not yet the abode of the damned, but only the place where those without blame and without praise were left to wander. There, too, was that caitiff choir of angels, neither rebellious nor faithful in their former celestial home, but for themselves. Heaven chased them forth to keep its beauty from impair, and the deep hell received them not, for the wicked would scorn them, men and angels alike.

There Dante saw the shadow of one he knew, the wretched man who from cowardice made "the great refusal." The commentators have supposed this to refer to an Italian churchman who was elected to the papacy in 1294 with the title of Celestine V. But the papacy was a dangerous honor in those times, and after five months the craven pontiff resigned his office. To Dante, with his stern views of the divine character of both church and state, this seemed an act of unspeakable recreancy, and the vigorous term he used to describe the cowardly act has become classic. He could not bear to look upon the shadow, and eagerly yielded to Virgil's suggestion regarding the entire company of neutral souls, "Let us not speak of them, but pass on."

Human nature sometimes reveals itself in this negative form. There are those who decline to live, as much as it is possible to put away the gift. They fear to take up life with vigor, but prefer to remain half-born.

Mrs. Gilman has a suggestive poem about the worm who was shocked to find himself becoming a butterfly, and protested against the tendency of his wings to grow. He did not want to be a fly, he only wanted to be a worm. And the last seen of the unhappy insect, he was madly trying to crawl back into his chrysalis.

Whenever a human being puts life aside for something less valuable he makes the great refusal. Thousands are committing that sin in the effort to find comfortable ease. The vigorous effort of living irks them. They do not want to accept the obligation of a straight-out, earnest career. They only want to be comfortable.

Others choose popularity rather than life. In the effort to make no enemies, but to steer a smooth middle course where forthrightness would imperil their chances to avoid giving offence, they sacrifice the whole in order to gain an unsubstantial part.

Another group of people, particularly women, are trying to achieve certain social preferments. These are

Not less true is it that wealth is desirable provided it comes honestly in the effort to serve the community by industry or commerce. But when it becomes an end in itself instead of one of the by-products of worthful endeavor it degrades character and endangers higher success. Many a man has made the great refusal of life, many a woman has paid a ruinous price, for one or another of these secondary possessions, and at the last has found that even the gathered fruits were but apples of Sodom.

The people who are neutrals in the odious moral sense are never worthy world-makers. They are for themselves alone. Duty can never be accomplished with doors closed against danger and sacrifice. When the cry comes for help no one dares to sit comfortably by his fire in the hope that some one else may answer the call. Every enterprise that has the promise of benefit to humanity requires toil and peril for its achievement. The people who excuse themselves from activity in noble attempts to accomplish needed reforms or to take a worthy part in the world's work are among those who make the great refusal. Such are the men and women who yield to, or actually devise, some form of sickness to save them from the distress of really living a vigorous and worthful life.

It is the fear of living that turns multitudes into mere tenants of the twilight.

The business world has its numberless illustrations of this truth. There are plenty of men who are content all their days to work for others, because they have neither the courage of independence nor the power of initiation. Many a man could break away from the leading strings of his small salary and achieve success for himself and for others in some new commercial adventure if he could gain his consent to make the first plunge. But timidity overpowers him at the thought, and he goes on through life treading the beaten path of routine.

The fear of living a full life with its needed sacrifice and struggle prevents thousands of young people, particularly young men, from marrying and creating a home. It is so much easier to live in the comparative independence of bachelorhood, with no obligations or restrictions, and the years slip away and the best of life is cast to the winds. Unconsciously, perhaps, the great refusal has been made.

Nor is selfishness of this kind confined to the unmarried. The gift of life is declined by multitudes of married people on the ground that they do not wish to be inconvenienced by the presence of children. There are many unborn little ones knocking at the doors of childless homes only to receive the refusal of entrance on the part of the selfish and pleasure-loving men and women within. In

Faith and Fortitude

BY EDGAR DE WITT JONES

"For we walk by faith, not by sight."

THE second Epistle of Paul to the Corinthians is a most human document. Students of the Scriptures are of the opinion that nowhere else do we get so close to the heart of the great Apostle as in this letter. Having dispatched his first Epistle to the Corinthians by the hand of Titus, Paul awaited the news of its reception with no small anxiety. Six months passed and then in Macedonia he met Titus, who reported that the Corinthian Christians had received the Epistle cordially and immediately set about the accomplishment of the reforms advised by Paul. This information greatly encouraged the Apostle and he at once wrote the second Epistle, the first part of which is given over to expressions of gratitude and affection.

"THE EVERLASTING ARMS."

The Apostle's gratitude overflows like a river in time of flood. He is sure of God. He walks by faith. Whatever his weakness he rests upon the divine power of the Everlasting Arms. His anxieties have been more than compensated for by the willingness of the Christians at Corinth to correct the abuses that had crept into the church there, and by the repentance of the wrongdoers.

As for any affliction, he calls it "light," and but for the moment, working all the time "an eternal weight of glory." The decay of the outward man, he explains, means the growth of the inward man, and as the temporal fades away the eternal becomes more and more luminous and glorious. Then, the Apostle sets forth a most enchanting view of death. He believes that as the bodily frame fades and dissolves, it exposes to view a building from God eternal in the heavens. The tent gives away to the mansion, the mortal body to a spiritual body; it is as if there is a body within a body; as the one decays the other grows and at death the spiritual emerges from the physical. The mortal is swallowed up of life. The poet builds upon Paul's words for his great lines:

"This body is my house, it is not I;
Herein I sojourn till in some far sky
I lease a fairer dwelling, built to last
Till all the carpentry of earth is past."

This servant of Christ is constantly thinking of his Lord and of his meeting him shortly face to face and he writes: "Whilst we are at home in the body we are absent in the Lord." And here it is that he throws in by way of parenthesis the words, "For we walk by faith, not by sight," and affirms that he and his fellow-workers make it their aim whether at home (with Christ) or absent (from Christ) to be well pleasing unto him.

BUSINESS RUN ON FAITH.

"For we walk by faith, and not by sight," or "appearances." That we do, and not only in the sense in which the Apostle uses the word here, but likewise in another sense of the term we walk by faith every day of our lives. It is not optional with us, we are compelled so to walk; our daily affairs are done by faith,—not necessarily faith in God, but faith in one another, faith in institutions, faith in organizations, faith in something. Two or three homely instances of this fact are in order.

A man takes a long journey, he plans to cross the continent. He will travel in the course of that journey several thousand miles, and he will perforce travel by faith. A train on which he is riding may be wrecked and his life crushed out. A hotel in which he is sleeping may burn and consume him. He may become ill on the way and die far away from home and friends. There are a dozen ways in which his life may be lost or his body bruised and mangled on that journey. He will simply have to make that journey by faith. True, if he is a wise man he will minimize all the risks and safeguard his life and facilitate his traveling in every way possible; he will purchase his ticket over the best road, or roads; he will run no unnecessary risks; he will attempt to keep himself in the best physical condition. And yet, withal he will have to make that trip by faith.

Here are two men who are about to embark in business. They have formed a partnership. They purpose to establish a store or a manufacturing concern, and they are compelled to do this by faith. They are running certain risks; one of the partners may prove dishonest, they may be unable to establish their credit, they may not be able to keep pace with the fierce current of competition. And, inasmuch as above ninety per cent of business enterprises fail, they are certainly making a venture of faith. If they are wise men, however, they will reduce their risk to a minimum; each will endeavor to satisfy himself as to the integrity of his partner; both of them will look well to their credit; they will consider the wisdom of a good location; they will be cautious in outlays and seek to keep expenses down. But even so, they will have to make their business venture by faith.

IN THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.

Here are two young people about to build a home—not a house but a home—an enterprise that calls for faith at one of its highest ventures. There are a hundred and one things that may make that home building process a wreck and ruin. They may be incompatible in temperament and unable to live in peace; one or the other may be extravagant; their kinspeople may interfere and bring about annoyance and domestic infelicity; sickness or adversity may come and death may leave either husband or wife to face the future with a family of helpless little ones and no money. If they are wise young people they will reduce these risks to a minimum. They will not let the little blind god delude them and they will be reasonably certain that they can live together happily and usefully. They will have some outlook financially before they make a venture so important as this, and they will, if they are wise, deal gently and patiently with any family relationship that might threaten to mar their marital happiness. Yet, even so, they will have to build their home and plan their wedded life by faith.

"For we walk by faith, not by sight." Indeed, if we do otherwise we can not walk at all. We live every day of our lives by faith. We get up in the morning by faith and at night we lie down to sleep by faith. We mail letters by faith, we send telegrams by faith. We eat and drink by faith. We sow and plant by faith. We put our money in the bank by faith, and we draw our checks by faith. We came down town this morning by faith. We are in this building now by faith, and by faith we shall be returning home in a little while.

SOWING AND PLANTING FAITH.

Not only do we live by faith daily and walk by faith hourly and conduct our business and build our homes and take our place in society by faith, but every now and then our faith receives a tremendous shock. Men and women in whom we have had faith disappoint us and fail us, and some betray us with a "Judas kiss." Institutions in which we have believed with all our heart go down over night to wreck and ruin. Organizations in which we put our faith disintegrate and dissolve in failure. Yet, nevertheless, while these experiences are not uncommon, they are the exceptions rather than the rule and despite them we continue to walk by faith, for if we try to walk otherwise our days of usefulness are ended and we are stranded on the barren shores of doubt and distress.

SOME DIFFICULT "WHYS?"

"For we walk by faith, not by sight." In the sense that Paul meant this, we walk by faith scarcely more than in the daily conduct of business and home and our relation to society in general. Strangely enough, (or is it strange?) when we turn to the real of the unseen and consideration of the great questions, "Whence am I?" "Whither am I bound?" we are prone to stumble and to stop at the very thought of walking by faith. We want to see, we want to know. We crave certainty. We plead for proof. And little wonder! The mystery of life perplexes us. We come into this world and we are not here very long until we learn that it is a world of inequalities, of tears, of pain, and of suffering. We look about us and we see that righteousness is not always rewarded here. We behold some of the best and most unselfish souls suffering poverty and heavy affliction. We see others who do not live lives of honesty and sobriety and helpfulness, yet they are prosperous and live in luxury. We see some men and women bearing grievous burdens of mental and physical stress who deserve the best that life can bestow; we see death strike down the most useful members of society and leave untouched for years characters that are worthless to themselves and to the community. And we are perplexed, we are sorely distressed, we wonder why?

"This is the cry
That echoes through the wilderness of earth,
Through song and sorrow, day of death and birth:
'Why?'
"It is the high
Wail of the child with all his life to face,
Man's last dumb question as he reaches space:
'Why?'"

Frankly, there are only two ways that we can meet these vicissitudes of life and the mystery of death; one is to try to think them through, to reason them out; and the other is to meet them in simple faith, "believing where we can not prove."

GOD BOTH GOOD AND ALMIGHTY.

And, if we are wise men and women we will do in this great matter as we are doing daily in other matters. We will reduce the risk and the chance to a minimum. We will take advantage of every provision for the life of faith in God. Princely provision has been made for us; the father hath sent his son, and the son has shed upon life's dark mysteries a great and mellow light. His was a life of faith, and such a faith the world has never known before nor since. It was steadfast and stable. It was captivating and contagious. He was sure of God, Jesus was. No experience, however dark, could hide the Father's love. For a single brief period on the cross, enshrouded by thick clouds, he thought himself forsaken and then, breaking out of the darkness, light and love from the Father flooded his soul. With this father he lived in daily communion, he conversed with him freely; he found a fellowship with him unto the end. Even so, the life of our Lord was fraught with suffering, and the author of the Hebrew Epistle declares that he was made "perfect through sufferings." Jesus' faith triumphed over pain, over misunderstanding, over malignment, over rejection, over the cross, over the grave. As faith saves us, so faith saved our Saviour. The great founder of the Christian Faith did not accept the dilemma that if God is good he is not almighty, and if he is almighty he is not good. He taught and believed that God is both.

KNOWING GOD IN THE GARDEN.

A study of Jesus in Gethsemane should help us all to walk by faith the sorrowful way over which, sometimes, our feet must go. It was in the garden that the great souls of earth have come to know God best. It is in the garden that we shall meet the ministering angels. The Apostle, from whose letter the text is taken, declares to the church at Rome that "all things work together for good to those who love God." "Work together for good," yes, but this process is a long one and we can not see the end now. And, yet, there are those who have lived long enough to know that some experiences which overwhelmed at the time with grief were for the best. Before we can determine that loss and separation and death of dearly beloved have in them naught but ill we must survey them from a distance, we must view them from the high hills of hope where the horizons widen wonderfully. Time is a sure and stalwart vindicator of all God's plans.

Some years ago I was talking with a business man who was sorely perplexed and distressed. There had taken place in our community the sudden, though not unexpected, death of a splendid man in the full strength of mature life, a man of integrity, of keen insight, and a citizen of high ideals and wide influence. The man who had died was formerly a business associate of the man with whom I was conversing. We were speaking about his untimely death, the brave fight he had made for life, and the business man voiced the doubt and difficulty of thousands when he said to me with some emotion: "I can not understand it. Walking the streets of our city this morning are men that you and I know are worthless. They are hindrances instead of helps both to their families and to the community. Some of these men humiliate and even harm their families, and yet they are living today and this good man is dead. It is all dark and doubtful, and I can not think my way through it." I did not answer him at once. I could not. But after a little silence I replied: "No, we can not think our way through a problem of this kind. We have to trust our way through. We have to walk by faith." And I remember his serious face and how he solemnly shook his head as he said: "Yes, I suppose that is the best way, but it is not an easy way." Then a silence fell upon us again. At some time or another I dare say we all feel as this man felt. Faith is seldom, if ever, easy at first. Yet, even so, the way of faith is easier than the way of doubt which darkens more and more to the dismal night, and faith shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

THE GAIN FROM DEATH.

I recall a memorable conversation I once had with a man for whom I cherish an abiding affection. We were talking of this problem of suffering, of separation, and of death, and he told me that many years ago his sister, after a little more than a year of married life, died in a far western state leaving a motherless babe. He described to me the coming of the funeral party to the old home of the young woman. It was in midwinter and the snow lay deep upon the face of the earth. He said he recalled that together with other members of the family he sat up until midnight talking in subdued tones of their great loss, the first great loss that had come to that home. He told me that his sister was one of the most beautiful characters he had ever known and that it seemed to him and the other members of the family that if either the mother or the child had to die it would have been better that the beautiful life of the young mother be spared. He said they welcomed tenderly the little life to that home, yet cherishing still the feeling in those first days of bitter grief that it would have been far better had the child died and the mother lived. That was more than thirty years ago, so he told me, and the child had grown into sturdy manhood and a useful career, and he said: "My sister has spoken through the life of her son and through him served the world as she, perhaps, never could have done had the child died and her life been prolonged for many years."

The testimony of that earnest man is eloquent, but not so eloquent as the fact that thirty years of his life were necessary before he could bear such witness. By faith we must walk, else we shall faint and fall by the way. With John Henry Newman, let us learn to say: "I do not ask to see the distant scene, one step is enough for me."

WHAT IS FAITH?

Faith? What is faith? Like "love" and "light" and "truth," it is a hard word to define. Some have called faith the sixth sense, the eyes of the soul, the sense of the unseen. Yet, while faith is difficult to define, it readily yields to illustration. And I can recall no lovelier illustration of faith than a letter written by Robert J. Burdette on the bed of pain from which that preacher-poet went to be with his Lord not long after his tired fingers penned these words:

"Ever since June, 1912, when I made my last public appearance, we have been living in our summer home down here by the sea. 'Eventide,' Mrs. Burdette named it, because it faces the sunset. It is very pleasant, this 'afternoon land,' in spite of sickness. I watch the sunset as I look out over the rim of the blue Pacific, and there is no mystery beyond the horizon line, because I know what there is over there. I have been there. I have journeyed in those lands. Over there where the sun is just sinking is Japan. That star is rising over China. In that direction lie the Philippines. I know all that.

"Well, there is another land that I look toward as I watch the sunset. I have never seen it. I have never seen anyone who has been there; but it has a more abiding reality than any of these lands which I do know. This land beyond the sunset—this land of immortality, this fair and blessed country of the soul—why, this Heaven of ours is the one thing in the world which I know with absolute, unshaken, unchangeable certainty. This I know with a knowledge that is never shadowed by a passing cloud of doubt. I may not always be certain about this world; my geographical locations may sometimes become confused. But that other world,—that I know. And as the afternoon sun sinks lower, faith shines more clearly, and hope, lifting her voice in a higher key, sings the songs of fruition."

What music that! What a swan song of the soul! And who but a follower of the Christ could so shout "Halleluiah" in the presence of death?

"O Master, let me walk with Thee
In lowly paths of service free;
Tell me Thy secret; help me bear
The strain of toil, the fret of care."

Lincoln the American Ideal

By Brand Whitlock.

On the arch at Washington square, New York City, there is a sentence of Washington's which I like, "Let us here erect a standard to which the wise and honest may repair." It is a standard which to be effective must be erected in the life of each citizen, and no one can erect it there but himself. In no citizen did it ever attain such beautiful and symmetrical proportions as in Lincoln's life.

Once in a foreign city, by some strange chance, I happened to pick up a penny in the street, and it proved to be one of those pennies that bear Lincoln's head. It seemed to me that no more significant medallion could have been made in Lincoln's honor.

I thought that nothing could have been more beautiful and significant than that Lincoln's noble head should have been engraved on our smallest coin, a token of our universal daily need in hands that humbly break the bread their toil has earned.

In him the American ideal was most perfectly exemplified, and it was exemplified in him because after the illusions of life had gone he retained his ideals and his faith in them.

EDITORIAL

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

IT IS a noteworthy fact that whatever be the public mood, which so regularly changes from year to year, the recurring anniversary of Lincoln finds the American people ready to stand with uncovered heads in the presence of this great, patient and suffering leader.

We are all of us close enough to the soil to appreciate the homely simplicity of his life. In it there was almost no opportunity for romance of any sort, and over those phases of his career where in other lives romance is sought, the kindly hand of discretion draws the veil.

Perhaps this fact adds to, rather than detracts from, the mysterious and solemn majesty of the man. No figure could have been less impressive than his as he was viewed by his intimates and contemporaries. Public opinion in his time was fitful and uncertain in its approval of him. The press was full of pleasantries at his expense, and the social leaders of the capital, both men and women, thought him impossible.

And yet history has abundantly proved his greatness. In spite of the limitations of his earlier years, his angular and unpleasing body, and the homely simplicity of his speech, he was a divinely gifted leader, the true embodiment of the great democracy of our land, a man of faith and of the future.

Most of all, he knew his own soul and the needs of the time. Men often disliked him because he was little open to an easy change of view. His was a poised and balanced nature. He reached his convictions slowly, but held them to the end.

What would he have thought if he could have foreseen the present tragedy across the sea, and its strange effects upon American souls? How would he have felt about this sweaty haste to coin the blood of Europe into munition money in American factories? How would he have construed the theme of "preparation," he who believed that the sword is a terrible flash in the dark, but that right is an eternal ray? How would he have had America prepare for the new responsibilities which stricken Europe and wistful Asia are going to lay at our doors tomorrow?

One cannot think of that lonely yet commanding figure without recalling Mr. Lindsay's sympathetic lines in his poem, "Abraham Lincoln Walks at Midnight":

"The sins of all the war lords burn his heart.
He sees the dreadnaughts scouring every main.
He carries on his shawl-wrapped shoulders now
The bitterness, the folly and the pain.

"He cannot rest until the spirit-dawn
Shall come;—the shining hope of Europe free:
The league of sober folk, the Worker's Earth
Bringing long peace to Cornland, Alp and Sea.

"It breaks his heart that kings must murder still,
That all his hours of travail here for men
Seem yet in vain. And who will bring white peace
That he may sleep upon his hill again?"

THE PRESIDENT'S JOURNEY

MR. AND MRS. WILSON have made their promised visit through the central west, and everywhere were received with marked cordiality.

The impression made by Mr. Wilson was in every way satisfactory to the average citizen. It is the feeling of the great majority of those who saw and heard him that he is a gentleman worthy of the high honor that has been bestowed upon him.

His discussion of the question of preparedness was dignified and constructive. It is well understood that his has been a difficult position. A year ago he was not in favor of increasing the armaments of the United States. The tremendous development of the war spirit among our people has apparently forced him to take more radical ground or run the risk of endangering his leadership. We have been sorry to see him yield to the clamor of the militarist groups about him. We believe that there was a fine opportunity for a constructive and statesmanlike policy which places emphasis upon higher forms of preparedness than increase of ships and regiments.

But the President has evidently taken the step that seemed to him most practicable at this time. And we believe that he has spoken everywhere with discretion. The best proof of the comparative wisdom of his course is the criticism which is being heaped upon him by the aggressive militarists. They are raising the cry of timidity and conservatism. This ought to show that the President's course is wise and leaderlike.

His tour was nominally in the interest of a suitable increase of our defensive equipment. With those who believe our present forces are entirely adequate his speeches have had the commendable effect of information and arousal. But so sane and balanced have they been that the total effect will be rather to turn public attention from the hysteria of so-called "preparedness" to the broader elements of national discipline, self-control and international good will.

THE BIBLE AND THE SCHOOLS

THE question as to whether the Bible and religious instruction have a place in the educational system provided by municipal and public funds is an ever-present problem in the minds of men and women who are sensitive to the ethical and religious values of education.

Formerly there was no difficulty. Almost from the beginnings of the national life the Bible was one of the chief text-books in the schools. This was an inheritance from the English custom. The Bible was the least expensive and most valued book in use, and it was easy to employ it for almost all the exercises of literary education, such as reading, spelling, copy for writing, and other disciplines.

With the increasing insistence upon the divorce between religion and the state this practice was gradually abandoned. It was already under ban in theory when Jefferson and his associates prepared the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of Virginia. And although Jefferson himself was a reader of the Bible, he was careful to provide for the total severance of religious authority from all connection with politics and education.

This point of view was recognized as implicit in all educational theory, but was not applied severely until our population, particularly in the cities, became so largely dominated by Roman Catholic, Jewish and secularistic influences. Today in many parts of the republic any use of the Bible in the public schools is expressly prohibited by law. And this is not felt to be inconsistent with the free admission of any other so-called sacred book into class-room or even public school exercises.

Naturally, this condition has led to serious thought on the part of men and women sensitive to moral and religious conditions in the field of public education. The question is freely asked, Is the present condition tolerable? Ought the Bible to be reinstated in the public schools?

It goes with the saying that there is a very considerable sentiment in favor of this step, and in some states laws are being enacted granting permission to school boards and teachers to use the Bible either in public instruction or in introductory devotional exercises.

On the other hand the majority of modern educators believe that this is not the best way to accomplish the purpose. The Roman Catholic, the Jew and the secularist have as much right to their opinions regarding the character of public education as have Protestants. It seems probable that the same results can be accomplished in other and better ways.

One of these methods is the so-called Gary plan, which provides for the religious instruction of children during school hours in the churches to which they and their families belong. This instruction counts as a regular credit part of the school work.

Another and apparently even more practicable plan is the North Dakota method, by which units of religious and biblical instruction given under competent supervision in churches or other suitable places, quite outside the range of public school hours, may count for credit in the school system.

It is a satisfaction to all friends of religious education that under one form or another biblical instruction is making steady progress in public education in various parts of the country. Leaders in public school and state university work are promoting this good cause with discretion and diligence, and it is not too much to hope that in another half-decade we may see notable advances toward the inclusion of scientific Bible study in the educational system of many of the states.

EXPLAINING THE MIRACLES

NOT long since there was in this city a teacher from a neighboring theological school, who delivered a course of lectures on the miracles of the Bible, and especially those of the Old Testament.

He has the reputation of being very conservative and very orthodox. It has frequently been said of him that he insists upon the literal veracity of the biblical records in reference to the wonder-working powers of the prophetic leaders of Israel.

Strange to say, however, this lecturer in his presentation of the subject made it clear that such supposed miracles as the crossing of the sea, the lengthened day in Joshua's campaign, the fall of the walls of Jericho, and other incidents of similar nature, were not to be regarded as actual outputtings of divine power, but as perfectly natural events whose providential timeliness was utilized by the leaders of Israel to accomplish their purposes.

In other words, the "miracle" consisted not in the wonder-working power of prophets and chieftains, but in the coincidence of natural events with Hebrew needs.

In just what manner this view, which appears to be hailed by the defenders of the old supernaturalism as a scientific vindication of their thesis, leaves miracle any actual basis of reality it would be difficult to affirm.

The advocates of the older view were at least consistent in maintaining that the miracles were direct forthputtings of divine power, mediated through the great men of Hebrew history.

This compromise interpretation attempts to avoid the clearly recognized difficulty of the miraculous by practically reducing it to the vanishing point, and yet insisting that thereby it is completely vindicated!

Those who have a sense of humor will hardly fail to find this view of things somewhat diverting.

ANOTHER REASON FOR UNION

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON, speaking not long before his death to the Congregational Home Missionary Association's annual meeting at New Haven, admitted that Congregationalism was not very popular with his race, although much good work is done by its Home Society in the South. He explained the weakness of the denomination among his people thus: "The black man wants to feel that he is really baptized, and he gets that feeling better by immersion than any other way. And not even a baptistry in a church can take the place of the river."

Here, by implication, would seem to be yet one more reason for union of Congregationalists and Disciples!

THE GREAT REFUSAL.

called Christian people whose sluggish indifference to the welfare of the church makes them an actual menace to its success. Men and women who can permit their names to remain on church records year after year with no pretense of Christian work, and with but indifferent attendance upon church services, have no right to recognition in the membership. They are missing the noblest opportunities that life affords. They are constantly summoned by the demands of Sunday-school classes for teachers, of church committees for workers, of opportunities to gain life by using the means provided for Christian living, and yet they are content to remain in the twilight. Of such Virgil would have said, "Let us not speak of them, but pass on."

And what shall one say of church officers who make the great refusal? Such there are who have never given more than a grudging assent to their choice for the important activities of the church. They are the ones who rarely can be depended on. If there is any honor in the office, they do not object to it, and they may even make a struggle to attain it. But no opportunity of service lures them into effort. These are usually the people who present plausible excuses for their lack of interest. Yet ministers and honest church workers know what value to put upon such evasion. People always contrive to do the things they really wish to do, and church attendance and activity are no exceptions to this rule. No man or woman ought ever to accept a church office who can gain his own consent to refuse it. Unless in some true sense it is a holy call, it is not for him.

There are notable examples in Scripture of those who made the Great Refusal,—Esau, the Rich Young Man, the Laodiceans. Also there are noble examples of the Great Acceptance,—Abraham, who traversed half a world to find the city with foundations; Isaiah, who answered the call of God, saying, "Here am I, send me;" Paul, who, humbled and eager, cried, "What wilt Thou have me to do?"; and Jesus, with his solemn self-dedication, "Lo I come to do Thy will, O God."

In which company would one prefer to stand? With those who have made the divine acceptance or those who have made the Great Refusal? H. L. W.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

A Quiet Zone for the Churches.

Many unnecessary noises disturb the hours of worship in the churches. It is to the credit of Angus S. Hibbard, an Episcopalian layman of Chicago, vice-president of the Church Club of Chicago and chairman of the civic co-operation committee of the Industrial Club, that the matter of greater quiet around places of worship has been agitated. Chief of Police Healey has issued an order forbidding unnecessary noises in the vicinity of churches.

Wish More Religious Liberty in Russia.

The Bishop of Cufa in Russia has created some stir by criticising the methods of religious administration in that country. The church in Russia is treated as a department of state. Though there is no pope, there has been an increasing tendency to the centralization of church government. The hope of the future lies in the Duma, the Bishop declared. Though the Duma has ultra-conservatives who are wholly devoted to bolstering up the government, and radicals who make no pretension to religious faith, there is a great body of Christian men in the representative body who might be looked to for the larger liberty of the church.

Negro Episcopalian Priest Dies.

Rev. J. B. Massiah, a well-known Episcopalian clergyman, of Chicago, died recently. He came to this city ten years ago from Detroit to take charge of St. Thomas Episcopal church. A church of a thousand communicants has grown from his work, and Bishop Anderson commended the parish as a model to white congregations for orderliness and system. When he visited England some time ago, he was honored by being asked to preach in St. Paul's Cathedral, telling of his work in America. The cause of his death was pneumonia.

Presbyterians Will Promote Bible Teaching.

It is the hope of the Presbyterians to place a teacher of the Bible in every Presbyterian college in America. This teacher would be expected to make the undergraduates familiar with the English Bible. Though this seems so obvious a feature of a Christian college, only a few of the denominational institutions have yet arranged to give this kind of instruction.

Preachers Balk at Socialist.

The formation of the Clergy Club, of New York, has been noted previously. Recently the Congregationalists engaged Bouck White, the well-known socialist, and pastor of the "Church of the Social Revolution," to speak to them at this club. Members of the club objected strenuously to the presence of the celebrated author of "The Call of the Carpenter." It was finally agreed that Mr. White might deliver his address in another room of the same building where he was originally booked to speak.

The Panama Congress Opens Sessions.

The Panama Congress is scheduled to meet from February 10 to 20 in the city of Panama to consider the religious condition of Latin America. The Congress is separate from the organization of the Edinburgh Conference, but will operate on the same general plan. There are a number of sub-committees which were appointed in advance and which will present printed reports to the five hundred delegates that will be in attendance. These committees are as follows:

1. Survey and Occupation. 2. Message and Method. 3. Education. 4. Literature. 5. Women's Work. 6. The Church in the Field. 7. The Home Base. 8. Co-operation and Union. The committee reports and the resulting discussion will occupy the meetings during the day time and at night there will be inspirational addresses by great church leaders.

Following the Panama Congress.

After the Congress a group of church leaders will proceed down the west coast of South America, putting in to port at the leading cities. At Santiago, they will start inland across the continent to Buenos Aires. After visiting Brazil, the party will return to the United States, arriving here some time in May. In each of the cities visited by the deputation, there will be a congress held on the general plan of the Panama Congress. Thus the conditions of the Congress will be taken immediately to the fields where mission work is being done.

Unitarian Paper Criticises Voluntary Chapel Attendance.

It has been many years since Harvard University ceased to compel chapel attendance. When the change occurred it was strongly at the advice of Phillips Brooks who was preaching in Boston at the time. Recently the Christian Register, a Unitarian journal, noting the great decrease of attendance at prayers in the chapel, suggested that the voluntary system of worship is founded on a wrong assumption. Arguing that the university does compel many important things in the student life, it draws the deduction that chapel attendance should also be compulsory.

Professor Haeckel Thinks War Ends Christianity.

Professor Ernst Haeckel, the veteran biologist and philosopher of Germany, and the leading exponent of materialistic monism, sees in the present war the end of Christianity. He says there will be an end to the "illusions" of the existence of a providential God, predestination and immortality. It did not require the war to produce this change of belief in the professor, and if reports from the field are to be trusted, the war has produced a religious revival rather than otherwise.

GOSPEL AND "STUFF."

HENRY J. ALLEN IN WICHITA BEACON.

An eminent bishop is quoted as having said: "Giving to the poor man a little more 'stuff' is a poor substitute for salvation." He added: "The world will not be saved by ministering to man's "physical needs."

True and not true. More "stuff" is a poor substitute for salvation; but it may be a means to salvation. You can't get many of the graces into or out of a man who hasn't enough to eat.

"Stuff" as "stuff" isn't worth much; but if "more stuff" means opportunity, more of a chance in life, better clothes and less hopeless drudgery for the wife, better schooling for the children, less fear of being pushed over the edge of the abyss, a sense of greater justice, then surely it is to be desired.

If the bishop were deprived of three meals a day and forced to wear rags and sleep in a slum, could he keep up his optimism and remain a light to righteousness?

Possibly; but we notice that he isn't eager to try the experiment.

We don't undertake to say just how the world is to be saved.

We're not sure we know.

But we'd rather take chances on every man getting the full value of his toil and a fair chance to earn it than on a gospel of contentment while the toil of the many serves the greed or lust or vanity of a few.

"Jesus," says James A. McDonald, "set out to establish a brotherhood in which no man should eat his bread by the sweat of another man's brow; where there should be no social parasites, high or low, but one in which a man should be ministered to in proportion to his need and a man should serve in proportion to his possession of power."

You believe that, don't you, Bishop Candler?

Then take our advice and don't hesitate to preach it.

You must love, in order to understand love; one act of charity will teach us more of the love of God than a thousand sermons; one act of unselfishness, of real self-denial, will tell us more of the meaning of the Epiphany than whole volumes of theology.—F. W. Robertson.

THE SPIRIT AND UNITY.

In nothing is there greater need for the realization of the dependence of the church upon the Divine Spirit than in the movement toward Christian unity now in progress. A common experience alone can supply the basis and bond of unity. The essence of Christianity has been made too exclusively either a historical or a philosophical problem. Both of these it is, in fact. But the question, what constitutes the essence of Christianity formally and doctrinally, is subordinate to its essence as spiritual experience. It is only as we grasp that which is common in Christian experience in the first century and in our own, and in all that intervene, that we understand the essence of Christianity, which is a filial communion and co-operation with God so deep and real as to transform life. This spirit came through Jesus. Not that it was absolutely new with him, but it was so intense and fructifying as to exercise an almost creative influence upon those who came to share it with and through him.—From "Mysticism and Modern Life," by John Wright Buckham.

THE SEVEN HELPERS.

Lesson for February 27.

Golden Text: Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. Galatians 6:2.

Lesson Acts 6: verses 1-7 printed.

Memorize verses 2, 3.

(1) Now in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplying, there arose a murmuring of the Grecian Jews against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration. (2) And the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, It is not fit that we should forsake the word of God, and serve tables. (3) Look ye out therefore, brethren, from among you seven men of good report, full of the Spirit and of wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. (4) But we will continue stedfastly in prayer, and in the ministry of the word. (5) And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Spirit, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolaus a proselyte of Antioch; (6) whom they set before the apostles: when they had prayed, they laid their hands upon them.

(7) And the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem exceedingly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. Now. Indicates a contrast with the condition of the church mentioned in the last chapter.—Was multiplying. The disciples continued to preach Jesus Christ, and as a result the company of disciples grew.—There arose a murmuring. Complaining among the people.—Grecian Jews. These were Jews who spoke Greek. Having absorbed some of the Greek culture they were more liberal than the Jews.—The daily ministration. The reference is clearly to the distribution of provision, as verse 2 seems to indicate.

2. The multitude of the disciples. This does not mean that all the disciples came together; but those who responded to the call of a general meeting of the church.—Forsake the word of God and serve tables. They did not neglect their preaching to superintend the distribution of food to the poor. From the word translated "to serve" comes our word deacon.

3. Seven men of good repute. Seven was the sacred number. Men of good repute were men having witness borne them, attested. It may have been by the church.—Full of the Spirit and wisdom. These men needed a spiritual insight and a keen religious sense of values to administer the temporal affairs of the church. They would find cases calling for the exercise of great wisdom in the dispensing of charity.

4. Continue steadfastly in prayer. This was public and private prayer in the process of their work.—The minister of the word. Preaching and teaching the word of God. In this case it was the message of God as it was used by Jesus.

5. Pleased the whole multitude. They agreed with the disciples in their plan of Christian work.

6. Set before the Apostles. This was done at the suggestion of the Apostles and it would be natural for the people to hand the names of the men chosen to them.—They had prayed. Prayer at the very threshold of a great task is valuable.—They laid their hands upon them. As a symbol exhibiting the divine communication of power and grace. This was a common practice among the Jews and has grown into an ecclesiastical rite in all communions.

7. The word of God increased. The Apostles being liberated from all but the task of preaching, their message would have great power.—Disciples multiplied. As a result of the division of labor all would be more effective, and the company would increase.—To the faith. When all the facts are in, the meaning of faith here is "an active faith in Jesus Christ as the ideal of Life."

TEST QUESTIONS.

1. How many disciples were there at this time? Acts 1:15; 2:41, 47; 4:4; 5:14.
2. From what classes did they come?
3. Of what nationality were they?
4. Why were the people murmuring?
5. What was done to quiet them?
6. Ought the church do the same today?
7. Should there be a social center?
8. What qualities had the men chosen?
9. Why just seven helpers?
10. What significance had numbers in the Hebrew mind?
11. What is meant by "multitude" in verses 2 and 5?
12. Who are the leaders in the church at this time?
13. What does the word "priest" mean in verse 7?
14. What is the content of "the faith" in verse 7?
15. What was the condition of the priesthood at this time?

Social Servants

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

These seven men chosen by the primitive church were to be of good report because they were to be public functionaries, whose decisions were to allay commotions and murmurings; and therefore they must be men of weight, in whom the public had confidence. But, further, they must be men "full of the spirit and wisdom." Piety was not the only qualification; they must be wise, prudent, sound of judgment as well. Piety is no substitute for wisdom, neither is wisdom a substitute for true piety; both should be combined in men chosen to give the highest service in administration of church affairs. Even in charitable distributions and financial matters the church should seek men actuated by religious principle, guided by religious truth, swayed by divine love, and possessing common sense of the highest degree. It may be true that God can make the weak things of this world to confound the high and mighty, but it would be presumptuous in us to think that we can do the same. It is our business, therefore, to select instruments best suited in every way to do God's work and accomplish his great purpose.

In this service some of the very best workers are to be found among the young people of our churches. The capacity for spiritual service which our young people possess is not sufficiently recognized by the churches. Our problem, then, is to discover and organize opportunities for service and helpful, expressional activities for the religious life of our young people.

It is a common principle in life that we are interested in the thing in which we put our life, and it is also true in church work. If, therefore, we want to tie our young people to the church we must give them something to do. As the young are united to the church in vital and helpful service, do they have a real and growing interest in it. They grow in grace by doing the things here and now that Jesus did while on earth. He reacted on his environment helpfully and he expects us to react upon our environment helpfully. If we can get our young men and women to look at the church in this way, it will become a real factor in their life.

One of the great lessons Jesus teaches us is the joy of bearing the burdens of the weak. If there is a higher joy than paying our debt to society it is that of helping others to pay theirs, which we do not owe. Of all the great teachers of the world Jesus alone came to add this to the beauty, dignity, and joy of this brief life. In this we may walk in his footsteps.

The streets of our cities are filled with burdened people, wounded people, and sorrowing people; and many times people who are carrying the heaviest load keep at the same time a smiling face. Hence it is not becoming in us to be brusque and thoughtless in our speaking. We need to move with care and sympathy among our fellows.

We can help the man with a temper like a powder magazine into mastery, or we can throw a lighted match into it by the way we conduct ourselves in his presence. It is our duty to spread cooling influences about his life.

Our Lord has taught us that no man liveth to himself. We need one another, and without each other we should be heavily burdened; and to live a selfish, self-centered and exclusive life is to rob humanity of its due, and to dwarf and impoverish one's own life.

"The heart can only live in loving.
And by serving this love will grow."

THE MAN ON THE CROSS.

Whenever there is silence around me, by day or by night, I am startled by the cry that it came down from the cross. The first time I heard it I went out and searched, and found a man in the throes of crucifixion; and I said, "I will take you down."

And I tried to take the nails out of his feet, but he said: "Let them be, for I cannot be taken down until every man, every woman, and every child come together to take me down." And I said, "But I cannot bear your cry; what can I do?" And he said: "Go about the world; tell every one you meet there is a man on the cross."—Elizabeth Gibson Cheyne.

GOD'S PATIENCE.

God has such patience in making us into vessels of honor! in teaching us to be his children. And shall we find the human heart in which the germs of all that is noblest and loveliest and likest to God have begun to grow and manifest themselves uninteresting, because its circumstances have been narrow, bare and poverty-stricken, though neither sordid nor unclean?—George MacDonald.

Disciples Table Talk

Secretary Corey Seriously Ill.

F. M. Rains, reports that Secretary Stephen J. Corey is a very sick man with grippe and inflammatory rheumatism. He has been confined to his bed more than a week. The watchful care of the physician is assuring him the best of attention. All the missionary leaders felt quite concerned about him. Mr. Corey's engagements for February have been cancelled. Thousands will be praying that this great and useful man will be soon restored to perfect health and strength.

Eureka College Promotes Agricultural and Household Science.

Last year Eureka College, in co-operation with the city and surrounding community, conducted a short course in Agriculture and Household Science. The course was such a decided success that there was a unanimous request that a similar course be conducted this year. In accordance with the request it was arranged to put on a short course in Eureka to be held during the present week of February. The University of Illinois, through its Agricultural Extension Department, is furnishing most of the instructors for this work.

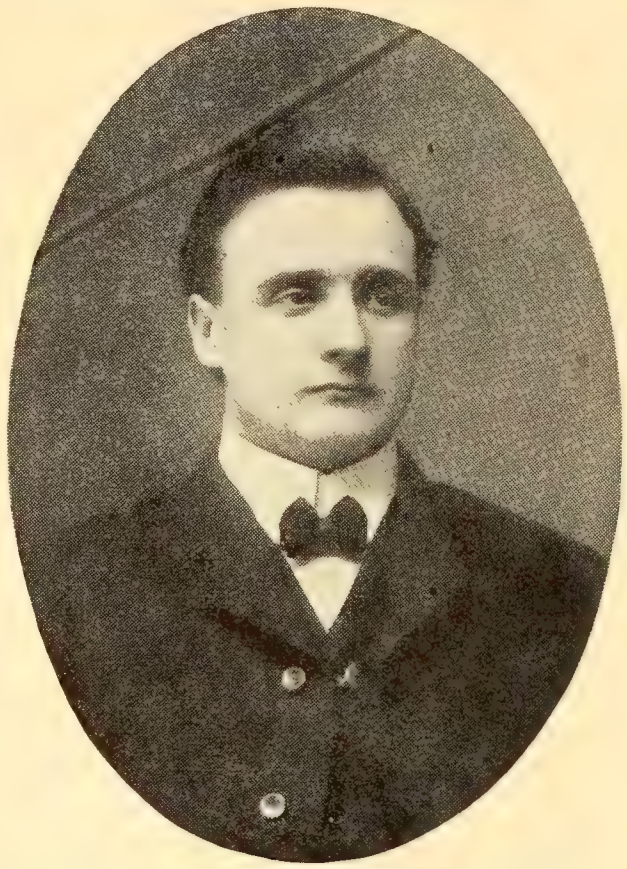
No Pastor Yet Found for Central, Des Moines.

Dr. Herbert Martin, of Drake, is supplying the pulpit of Central church, Des Moines. The church has no one in view to take the pulpit occupied so long and so efficiently by Finis Idleman. However, there are a number of men under consideration. It seems especially urgent to secure a good leader just at this time because of the coming national convention to Des Moines in October. W. A. Shullenberger, of Mexico, Mo., occupied Central pulpit on a recent Sunday.

Lincoln, Neb., Churches Moving Forward.

The cause of the Disciples in Lincoln, Neb., is booming, according to reports. The Joint Board contributed to the vigor and power of the Lincoln and vicinity churches a few years ago when it called upon them for special co-operative work aside from that being done in the regular fields. The churches thought they had all they could do, but they yet listened and did these few things more, and today the new Tabernacle church is a marvel of vital energy in a fine residence section of the city. Each of the three churches, First, East Side, and Bethany, are in new quarters, with the First church out of debt, East Side in a fine basement, and Bethany ready to make the last race for a clear-of-debt goal, while Havelock has had its financial burden largely reduced and the work put in a secure place.

Father and Son Celebration in Cleveland Churches.



"Father" was taken to task for his lack of interest in his son on the evening of Jan. 21, at Cleveland, O., when six thousand fathers and sons banqueted together in fifty churches in celebration of the second anniversary of the founding of the movement to bring father and son into a better understanding of each other. Franklin Circle Christian church carried off second honor for attendance. Robert E. Lewis, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., and founder of the father and sons movement, spoke at the Broadway Christian church. L. N. D. Wells made the address at Franklin Circle.

Charles L. Dean Re-elected to Colorado State Board.

Chas. L. Dean, pastor of First church, Canon City, Colo., was re-elected to the State Board of Managers of the Colorado Christian Missionary Society. Mr. Dean served on this board four or five years during his pastorate at Loveland, prior to going to New Mexico.

Houston, Tex., Church Fights Crime With Clean Entertainment.

The good work of W. S. Lockhart still continues in Houston, Tex., although he is now ministering to the South End church, rather than to Central. Mr. Lockhart's strong point is community work, and at present he is serving as "Superintendent of Municipal Entertainments" in the south part of the city. By the municipal entertainments held for the past four years in Houston, under Mr. Lockhart's supervision,

Rev. W. S. Lockhart, who has become a factor in the improvement of the amusement life of Houston, Tex.

a new day has come for the amusement life of Houston. The police say that through the influence of these uplifting programs 15 per cent of the accustomed crime of the community has been eliminated. Last year's Christmas entertainment was notable for the fact that 4,000 street car tickets were sent out so as to give the poor children an opportunity to come to the celebration. These tickets were distributed through the public schools and thus was reached nearly every deserving poor child in the city. This tree stood for the dissemination of the Christmas spirit throughout the entire city.

F. D. Kershner Declares that "Christianity is On Trial."

F. D. Kershner, editor of the Christian Evangelist, recently visited Canton, O., and in a most timely address made the declaration that Christianity has reached a critical point in its history. "Christianity is on trial in America and in my judgment America's greatest danger is the danger of losing a grip on spiritual things and worshiping mammon," Mr. Kershner said: "We have heard that Christianity is declining in Europe. But Christianity is not dying and men and women are not drifting from the cross. There will be more Christianity in Europe when this war is over than when it began. Here in America, where we boast that we alone have kept the faith we are growing rich at the expense and by the sufferings and woe of our fellow men. We are talking about taking the markets of the world and of the gold that we will gather. I am afraid that we are in danger of losing the cross as we gather the gold."

How a "Gospel Team" Helps.

The gospel team idea is being taken up by many churches, especially in the middle Western states. Carl A. Green, pastor at ready accomplished much in real results. In October, while engaged in revival services, Mr. Green arranged for the gospel teams from several neighboring towns to come to the church on a Sunday afternoon. A mass meeting was held, and a team organized with 34 members—men only, preachers not included. Preachers are welcome to attend the meetings, but are not allowed to become members or monopolize things, says the Albany pastor. Regular meetings are held every Tuesday night; the band now numbers about eighty.

Building a "Workingman's Church" at Des Moines.

Norman Brighton, pastor at Park Ave., church, Des Moines, has closed a three weeks' meeting with 98 confessions and consecrations. Mr. Brighton has been in charge of this work for only two years, during which time seven or eight hundred members have been added, the tabernacle built and foundation laid for a great working people's church. Mr. Brighton is a graduate of Drake university, and is an Englishman. He is reported to be a wonderful leader of men. He served several years in the Salvation Army which fits him in many ways for the work at Park Avenue. He is a man among men—warm-hearted, sympathetic, helpful, everlastingly hopeful, and there seems to be no limit to his industry, writes Charles Blanchard, of the Christian News. The church has just given him an increase of $300 at the beginning of his third year. The motto of the Park Avenue pastor and people is—"Anywhere, Any Time for Jesus," which accounts for much of their success.

Schools of Methods in Texas.

S. W. Hutton, Bible-school superintendent of Texas, reports schools of methods being held during the present month at the following points: Dallas District—Corsicana, Jan. 31-Feb. 4. San Angelo District—Comanche, Feb. 28-March 3. Central West Texas District—Midland. March 13-17. Temple District—Taylor, March 20-24. Panhandle District—Memphis, March 27-31. University District—Fort Worth, April 3-7.

Fresno, Cal., First, Enjoys Annual Banquet.

Late in January the women and ministers of Fresno, Cal., First church, gave their annual banquet to the men members and friends of the church. H. O. Breeden is pastor at First, and Roy O. Youtz is assistant pastor. The toasts given during the evening were as follows: "Automobiles and the Church," "Naming the Babies," "Our Home City, the Best Place to Live In," "Preparedness, a Principle and a Practice." "The Wrecking Crew, (by Dr. E. G. Smith, superintendent of the Fresno Union Rescue Mission"), "Religion, a Man's Job," "My Job as a Christian," "Our Wives and Sweethearts," "Some Things I Like Not Found in Ezekiel," and "Our Home Church, the Best Church to Serve In." The address by George W. Brewster, Jr., new state Bible-school superintendent, was the climax of the occasion. Mr. Breeden is now leading his church in a home force meeting.

Helen Keller at University Place, Des Moines.

Helen Keller, the wonderful woman who learned to talk, notwithstanding she is blind, deaf and was dumb from infancy, appeared at University Place church, Des Moines, on January 28, under the auspices of the Mothers' Clubs of the city. She was at Des Moines two years ago and lectured to a great audience. There is something almost uncanny, reports the Christian News, in hearing her voice, which is not natural, but sounds like the voice of one from another world.

Concerning Cedar Rapids, Ia., Church and its Leaders.

Walter M. White, pastor of First church, Cedar Rapids, is assisting John M. Alexander, of South Bend, Ind., in a three weeks' church. The "Iowa School of Methods" is to be held this year in First church, February 14-18, under the direction of R. M. Hopkins, national Bible-school superintendent, assisted by other of the national workers and by Leon S. Dudley, Iowa Bible-school superintendent, and acting secretary of the Iowa Christian Missionary Society.

A. B. Philputt Conducts Own Revival.

The two weeks' revival services at Central church, Indianapolis, A. B. Philputt, pastor, closed Jan. 23, with audiences that tested the capacity of the church. The Sunday-school attendance was 866. Nineteen persons took membership with the church during the day, making fifty-five during the meetings. The preaching was by the pastor. The annual congregational meeting of Central church was held Thursday evening, February 4.

Keokuk, Ia., Finds New Pastor.

Wallace Bacon has accepted a call to the church at Keokuk, Ia. At the time of his choice for this field, Mr. Bacon was considering calls from Duluth, Minn., Great Falls, Mont., Fargo, N. D., and Keokuk. Mr. Bacon graduated from Drake university a few years ago. For nearly three years he has held the pastorate of a church at Richland Center, Wis. Mrs. Bacon was formerly Miss Bessie Blanchard, daughter of Charles Blanchard, proprietor of the Christian News of Des Moines.

A New Editor for the Christian Courier.

W. M. Williams, pastor First church, Bonham, Tex., has been made managing-editor of the Christian Courier, succeeding A. E. Ewell. Mr. Ewell has resigned the position with the paper and also the pastorate of the Oak Cliff church to accept the pastorate of First church, Palestine. Mr. Williams has been a successful pastor and has been prominently identified with the activities of the Disciples in Texas. He started his career as superintendent of the public schools at Taylor, but later joined the ministry and was pastor of First church, Belton, for a number of years. He was at one time financial secretary of Texas Christian University, resigning to become pastor of the Bonham church.

A. F. Hensey Tells How Africans Like Stereopticons.

The missionary rally at Central church, Anderson, Ind., the last week of Jan., had as one of its features an address by A. F. Hensey, of the Congo region in Africa. Mr. Hensey told of his personal experiences with the stereopticon in the foreign field. He described how the natives fled in terror when they first saw the pictures thrown upon a curtain hung between two trees in the forest, and how they had to be assured that they would not be injured before they returned and gathered around in a semi-circle on the ground to hear the story of Christ told by the missionary and illustrated by the pictures. R. A. Doan had charge of the rally in the absence of the president, A. McLean, who could not arrive in time for the meeting at Central. Other speakers at the rally were W. S. Goode, of Youngstown, O.; Robert Sellers, of Elwood, Ind., and Miss Josepha Franklin, missionary in India for twenty-two years.

"Fathers and Sons" Banquet at First Church, Cedar Rapids.

The annual "Father and Son" banquet, which has been a noteworthy event in the work among boys in Cedar Rapids, Ia., for the last five years, was held this year in First Christian church. February 9 was the date set. Each year it has been customary to obtain a speaker of national note to make the principal address. Last year Governor George W. Clarke made the leading address. For the banquet this year the principal speaker was Rev. John Timothy Stone, pastor of Fourth Presbyterian church, Chicago.

its coming to self-support. The mother congregation, Englewood, Chicago, will share in this jubilee program. Chicago Heights has helped to the support of the work at Harvey to the extent of $300.

The Pathfiinders' Club, Austin, Tex., has selected Dr. J. W. Lowber to deliver their lecture this year on "John Ruskin and His Problems." This lecture will be delivered this month.

ton, Mo., during her lifetime, died at St. Mary's hospital, Quincy, Ill., on Jan. 14. Mrs. Allen was born in Kentucky about 83 years ago. As a mature woman she went to Canton, Mo., where she taught in Christian University for several years. When she grew too old to teach any longer, some five years or so ago, she went to Quincy to spend the rest of her days in St. Mary's hospital. She was a member of the Chris-

J. J. Tisdall on "Story Telling" in Religious Education.

No man among the Disciples has brought the art and science of story-telling so helpfully into the field of religious education as has J. J. Tisdall, pastor at Wilson Ave., Columbus, O. In the Bible School Institute recently held at Marion, O. Mr. Tisdall delighted those present by his address on "The Why and How of Story-Telling." He showed how, through all the ages of humanity, the story had been the chief means of instruction, both intellectually and morally. "The teacher who fails to employ the story method in his teaching, misses one of the simplest and most powerful methods of which we know," said Mr. Tisdall. In a second lecture Mr. Tisdall said, among other things: "Jesus Christ was the greatest story teller of all times and, as his followers, we should employ the story-telling methods to enforce, in a pleasing way, the wonderful truths which we would impart to others, as well as to ourselves. While no story should be 'preachy,' yet every story told, especially to young people, should have a moral lesson. The story that does not make those who hear it better, had better never be told." W. S. Goode, of Youngstown, was also a favorite speaker at the institute.

"Fellowship Study Class," First Church, Springfield, Ill., Awards Prize for Essay.

Frank Waller Allen, pastor at First church, Springfield, is growing a civic consciousness in the capital city of Illinois in many ways. A method that he has chosen especially for the benefit of the young people of the church, is the organization of a "Fellowship Study Class," one feature of which is the preparation of essays on municipal problems. A short time ago, prizes were offered to the five members of the class presenting the best essays on the question, "How to Make Springfield a Better Place in Which to Live?" Twenty persons prepared papers and the contest closed Sunday evening, January 30. The first prize was awarded to Miss Margaret A. Devlin.

Teen Age Club Organized at Topeka.

There is no phase of Bible-school work that has been more sorely neglected in past years than the so-called "Teen Age." And there is no phase happily that is receiving more serious attention today than this critical period of life. The six Christian churches of Topeka, Kan., have recently organized a "Teen Age Club." A two days' meeting was held, closing with a banquet. An address was given, during these meetings, by R. P. McPherson, pastor of Central Park church. Final work of organizing the club was in charge of David H. Owen, state superintendent of the Bible-schools of the Christian churches of Kansas, and Miss Cynthia Pearl Maus, of Cincinnati, Ohio. Superintendent Owen acted as toastmaster at the banquet.

Men's Class Presents Memorial Window to Church.

The Progressive Men's class of the church at West Mansfield, Ohio, has purchased a memorial window in the new church edifice now being constructed in Bellefontaine, O. The Progressive class is taught by J. C. Moore, who has served in that capacity for more than thirty years. The class is the largest in the county outside of Bellefontaine, numbering over 150.

Ohio Governor at Men's Bible Class Banquet.

With Governor Willis and R. W. Archer, state treasurer, as guests the men's Bible-class of Wilson Avenue church, Columbus, O., held their third annual banquet at the church on a recent evening. "If more men belonged to Bible classes and lived up to the teaching of the Golden Rule there would be no demand for a larger army and navy, and no occasion would ever arise for a state executive to call out troops to put down mob violence," Governor Willis told more than 200 men who attended. J. J. Tisdall, pastor, and instructor of the class, presided.

Ohio Bible-schools Lead in Home Mission Offerings.

Recent reports show marked gains in the offerings to American missions from the Bible-schools throughout the nation. Ohio schools have the honor to lead in this gain. Wilford H. McLain, state secretary, may well take pride in this fact. For the first three months of the present fiscal year, Oct. 1, 1915, to Jan. 1, 1916, 154 Ohio schools gave $3,346.81, a gain of $1,290.23 over the same period last year. One encouraging feature is the fact that 52 of these 154 schools are schools which did not give last year at all. Akron, High Street, leads with an offering of $375. Mr. McLain is proud of this record, but urges that schools which have not yet forwarded their offering for American missions should be stirred by this to do so. The Ohio Christian Missionary Society is doing much to lead the schools of the state to greater efficiency. During the months of January a school of methods was conducted and six two-day institutes were held. The state superintendent was assisted in each of the latter by an elementary worker. Thirty schools were reached by these meetings.

Pennsylvania Church Will Hold Annual Memorial Service for Deceased Members.

Central church, Sharon, Pa., R. J. Bennett, pastor has voted to hold an annual memorial service the first Wednesday night of every February in memory of all friends and members of the church who will have passed away during the preceding year. Mr. Bennett also reports the death in his congregation of R. H. McCleery, on Jan. 30. Mr. McCleery was elected as one of the elders of the church in 1889, which office he filled until his death, a period of nearly twenty-seven years. He served the church as Bible-school superintendent for a period of sixteen years. The funeral services were held at the home on Feb. 1. The pastor conducted the service.

Schedule of County Conferences, Eastern Indiana District, Feb. 14-25.

Feb. 14-15, at Franklin, Johnson County. Feb. 15-16, at Flat Rock, Shelby County. Feb. 16-17, at Rushville, Rush County. Feb. 17-18, at Noblesville, Hamilton County. Feb. 21-22, at Summitville, Madison County. Feb. 22-23, at Marion, Grant County. Feb. 23-24, at Fairfield, Howard County. Feb. 24-25, at Kempton, Tipton County. These conferences will be held in the Christian churches of the places named, the conference at Marion being held in the First church. Mrs. O. H. Greist, Garry L. Cook, Carl Vanwinkle, T. J. Legg, and G. I. Hoover, will be the state representatives of the Woman's Missionary work, Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor, Educational and Evangelistic interests in these conferences. It is earnestly desired that every church be represented at its respective county conference by a good delegation.

Carey E. Morgan to Speak Before Kansas Preachers.

Carey E. Morgan, pastor at Nashville, Tenn., will be chief lecturer of the Kansas Ministerial Institute to be held at First church, Topeka, the last week in March. His subjects will be: "The Preacher," "The Church," "The Book," "The Task," "The Plan." Mr. Morgan, on January 23, commenced a meeting with George H. Combs and Independence Boulevard church, Kansas City, Mo. On January 26 he addressed a meeting of the Women's Missionary Council held at the Linwood Boulevard church, Kansas City.

Ft. Worth, First Church, is Proud of its Women.

First church, Ft. Worth, Tex., L. D. Anderson, pastor, may well be proud of its women. The Ladies' Aid Society pledged $1,500 to be paid last year into the building fund. This entire obligation has now been cared for. The women had previously paid a like amount into this fund.

Bellefontaine, O., to Have Splendid New Building.

The costliest church structure in Bellefontaine, O., and one of the handsomest, the new church building is nearing completion and will be dedicated in April. The church will cost $41,000, of which all will be paid by dedication time save $10,000, which will be raised that day, the date being set for April 16, 23 or 30. C. R. Scoville will be present to assist Traverce Harrison, the pastor, in the dedication services. The building stands 100x87 feet, the largest public building in the city save the Court House and the school buildings, and adjoins the largest public park in Bellefontaine. The site is admirable and is the land upon which the former church stood, that building burning on January 30, 1915, and this new structure being commenced on May 5, 1915. The dedication service will be followed by "Fellowship Week."

Healdsburg, Cal., Pastor Recovering from Serious Illness.

C. H. Hilton, the pastor of Healdsburg, Cal., church, has been dangerously ill. He was taken ill in October, and gradually became worse until it became evident that there was something serious. He went on the operating table in San Francisco, January 12, passed through the operation successfully, and is now on the high road to complete recovery.

Kansas Church Becomes Living Link.

The church at Cheney, Kan., is rejoicing in a recent victory. Through the efforts of Secretary Bert Wilson and Missionary Hobgood, this church became a "living link" in the Foreign Society. This congregation has less than 200 resident members, but they cheerfully subscribe to the cause of Foreign Missions, after paying apportionments in both Kansas and American Societies, also Ministerial Relief and benevolence.

El Paso, First, in Campaign for "Bigger, Better Church."

A most important field for religious work is that at El Paso, Tex., especially in consideration of the present situation in Mexico, just across the border. P. J. Rice has toiled in this field for several years, and recently refused an opportunity to take the Rev. Carey E. Morgan, who has been selected as chief lecturer at the Kansas Ministerial Institute to be held at Topeka next month.

work at Central, Denver, because he believed he was needed at El Paso. Mr. Rice is now leading his people in a campaign of betterment, to continue until Easter. "Quiet, dignified, intensive" is the way Mr. Rice describes the proposed campaign. The primary purpose is to increase the number of attendants at all services. He has sent out to a number of members the following request: "In pursuance of our plan for a bigger, better church, I am asking a number of our people to accept definite assignments. I should like you to take a friendly interest in, and seek to influence for Christ and the church people whose names appear on the enclosed list. Note carefully the information conveyed with reference to each one. Call upon them at your earliest convenience. If they are members of our church, talk with them about the church and its plans, and encourage them to take an active part in its work and worship. If they have grievances try to meet them in a friendly spirit. If they are members of the church elsewhere urge them to unite with us at once, with or without church letters. If they are not members of any church seek in such ways as you may to win them for Christ. In no case let it be known that you have been assigned by anybody to do this service. Let it appear to be entirely voluntary on your part. Be wise, tactful, earnest and prayerful. I shall ask for reports from all who have been assigned to this kind of service at frequent intervals. I should like to ask you to make a preliminary report on next Wednesday evening at a conference of personal workers at the close of the mid-week service." This year First church is attempting, more definitely than ever before, to be a real religious center for the neighborhood. It aspires, as a downtown church, to be particularly mindful of the strangers and transients who have no present church affiliation. Its doors are open seven days of the week. Mr. Rice reports that January was a banner month for First church, with the largest attendance in its history.

Oklahoma Church Gives $18 Per Capita During Year.

E. T. Law has ministered to University Place church, Oklahoma City, Okla., for six years. A gain of sixty members during the last year has brought the enrollment up to nearly two hundred. When Mr. Law took the work, there were but thirty members, only four of these being men. There has been raised during 1916, by church and auxiliaries, for missions and benevolences, $225. Congregation contributed $18 per capita during 1915. Many have been added to the church who have removed to seek employment elsewhere. The church property, with organ, is valued at $25,000; there is an $1,800 debt, owing to Board of Church Extension. Every current bill is paid at the end of every year.

Angola, Ind., Has Financial Jubilee.

George L. Snively reports that the Angola, Ind., congregation, led by Paul Preston, pastor, gave and pledged over $22,000 on the church debt of five years ago. At this time the new $58,000 plant was dedicated, but with a large indebtedness. The amount raised by Mr. Snively more than takes care of the entire obligation.

Memorial Meeting at Jacksonville, Ill., Central.

M. L. Pontius is pastor at Central church, Jacksonville, Ill. He reports the 1916 annual memorial service held on January 19. This service is held each year in memory of the members of the congregation who have died during the year. There is no leader. A program, with special music, Scripture and prayers, is prepared and printed, and members ars asked to speak memorial words for each departed one. The printed program is followed without any announcements. Mr. Pontius recommends that such a service be adopted by churches generally.

Pasadena, Cal., Church Sets High Goal for 1916.

Frank G. Tyrrell, the new pastor at Pasadena, Cal., is a born idealist and he reveals his temperament in the "goal" set for the church for the present year. The following are the items: Increase in church membership (net) 300; increase in Bible-school attendance, 200; increase in current expense pledges to 150 per week; pay on building debt $2,000; pay for missions and benevolence, $1,600.

South Bend, Ind., Pastor Scores Local Vice.

Prominent business men's organizations of the city which during the winter have substituted for speeches of men of national note cabaret shows and "dancing women who put their feet where their heads ought to be," were severely scored by John M. Alexander, of First church, South Bend, Ind., a few evenings ago, when he addressed his congregation in place of Walter M. White, the evangelist, now aiding in the revival at First church, but who was ill on this particular evening. Mr. Alexander denounced in no uncertain terms the cabaret show with its "base attractions designed to appeal to the lower passions of men instead of to their minds." He also took occasion to score a business man who "refused to attend the revival meetings because of the business care attendant upon the approach of his big, annual sale."

Missouri Christian College Gets New President.

Roy L. Thorpe, who graduated from Drake two or three years ago, and has since been preaching in Missouri, engaged in religious education work a good part of the time, has been elected as president of Missouri Christian College, Camden Point, Mo., a school for girls. He is a very young man to be called to such a position, but is reported to be by temperament and training well fitted for this task.

Seattle Churches Evangelizing.

A simultaneous evangelistic campaign is being organized by the evangelistic committee of the Ministers' Federation of Seattle. Simultaneous meetings are to be held in every Protestant church during the month preceding Easter.

Disciple Laymen of Southern California in Meeting.

One hundred men representing about one-half of the congregations in Southern California gathered at First church, Los Angeles, on Thursday, January 13 to formulate plans for bringing about the registration of 1,000 men from the churches for the Laymen's Missionary Movement Convention, to be held in Los Angeles, February 27-March 1. Addresses were delivered by Ex.-Lieut. Governor A. J. Wallace, E. Guy Talbott, secretary of the Interdenominational Committee, James A. Francis of the First Baptist church and Charles C. Chapman.

Men and Millions Team in St. Louis.

For the past two weeks the Men and Millions leaders have been working quietly in St. Louis. The high water-mark of the effort so far was at the mass meeting held at Union Avenue church, on Sunday afternoon, January 30. The auditorium was filled with men from the various churches. The speakers were Dr. R. J. Dye, Ernest Gordon, H. P. Shaw, H. J. Derthick, John H. Booth, W. R. Warren, J. H. Mohorter, Mrs. H. S. Latshaw, E. M. Todd, Miner Lee Bates, R. H. Miller and A. E. Cory. The present activities of the leaders of Men and Millions in the cities are in pursuance of the newly formed plan to attack the great city centers at the present high-tide of prosperity which is blessing—or cursing the cities.

Canvass Trebles Benevolence and Missionary Offerings.

Second church, Washington, Pa., T. C. Horn, pastor, recently made an every member canvass for current expenses and missions, and increased the pledges for local work 35 per cent, and those for missions and benevolences 200 per cent. The number of contributors to local work was increased 85 per cent, and those for missions 124 per cent.

At the Indianapolis Ministerial Association.

Walter S. Smith read a paper on "The Incarnation" before the Christian Ministerial Association of Indianapolis, Ind., January 10. C. M. Fillmore read a paper on "The Efficient Church," January 31. On February 14 Dr. Morton C. Pearson will address the association on "The Possibilities of an Organized Brotherhood," and February 21 E. E. Moorman will read a paper on "The Changing Order and the Church."

Los Angeles Pastors Discussing Church Union.

The ministers of the Los Angeles Baptist and Christian churches held a joint meeting in Berean Hall, near the center of that city, on Monday, January 17, at which time Dr. Windbigler, a Baptist minister, of Washington, D. C., delivered an address on the subject of the points that unite and those that divide the above-named churches. He enumerated the points on both sides and said that the points of agreement far outweighed the points of disagreement. Several Disciple preachers made kindly remarks on the subject as did the Baptist ministers, reports S. M. Bernard.

Laymen's Convention in the West.

A Laymen's Convention is being held in Seattle, February 9-13. Much enthusiasm is reported, the Disciple leaders having taken an active part in the preparations. W. E. Morris, an elder of First church, and treasurer of the state board, is the leader among our own men. Tacoma had an enthusiastic get together banquet in preparation for the Laymen's Convention.

W. H. Book Preaches on Visiting Sparrow.

A sparrow that flew into Tabernacle church, at Columbus, Ind., while the pastor, W. H. Book, was preaching, took the attention of the large congregation from the sermon. The pastor saved the situation by leaving his text and preaching a sermon on the sparrow, which his hearers say was better than the preaching he was doing before the sparrow interrupted him.

At Central Church, Rockford, Ill.

W. B. Clemmer and his people, at Rockford, Ill., Central, are making thorough preparations for the dedication of the fine, new building on Feb. 13. John L. Brandt, of St. Louis, and John R. Golden, of Bloomington, will lead in this service. A week's special services are being held prior to the great day, Mr. Golden preaching. A recent Sunday was observed as Men's Rally Day, in honor of the pastor's seventh anniversary of continuous service. The Sunday following was Women's Day.

Passing of Well Known Disciple Veteran.

Word comes of the death of Charles L. Schell, at Walla Walla, Wash., at the age of eighty-four years. Mr. Schell passed away early in January. The deceased had lived at various periods of his life in Somerset, Pa.; Bloomington, Ill.; Eureka, Ill., and Bethany, Neb. Since his wife's death, about two years ago, Mr. Schell has lived with his children: Basil W. Schell, Walla Walla; Mrs. David C. Kratz, Gridley, Cal.; Mrs. Richard W. Grant, Beatrice, Neb.; Mrs. Harvey H. Harmon, Lincoln, Neb.; C. D. Schell, Wellen, Ore.; and Robert A. Schell, pastor of the church at Boulder, Colo. Mr. Schell made the good confession at Somerset, Pa., when about thirteen years of age. From that time, writes J. A. Beattie, of Lincoln, Neb., "he lived not simply a consistent life, but he was in addition to that an earnest, sincere advocate of the life as it is in Christ, the Lord. He was active, capable, and devoted in all the enterprises of the church. He was public-spirited and intelligent on citizen and community welfare. He gave his time, his means, his energy and his prayers to every good work." Funeral services were held in Lincoln, and were in charge of Chancellor W. P. Aylesworth. The interment was at Beatrice, the exercises being conducted by the pastor, C. F. Stevens.

Business Men Boost Oklahoma Disciples' Convention.

Claremore, Okla., is to have the state convention this year, May 8-11. As an evidence of enterprise on the part of Claremore's citizens and of their appreciation of the convention the secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. H. A. Lane, is sending out to all ministers of churches, superintendents of Bible-schools, presidents of Christian Endeavor, presidents of C. W. B. M.'s and many leading laymen asking them not to fail to attend the convention.

El Reno, Okla., Pastor Does Home Mission Work.

Frank H. Lash, pastor at First church, El Reno, Okla., is intensely missionary in temperament. So is his congregation. So Mr. Lash reports that he has recently held a two-weeks' co-operative missionary meeting with the struggling little church at Waurika, Okla. The El Reno church loaned Mr. Lash to the little church there, and two of the consecrated young people, Mr. Ed. H. and Miss Lydia Menger, gave their services without charge as chorister and soloist respectively. Mr. Lash reports that he found the work in very bad shape, but notwithstanding disorganization, bad weather, and an opposition meeting, much good was done. The church was re-organized and an official board of fourteen men constituted. Nine were added to the church, all being adults. Money was raised and materials purchased to overhaul the building, and $600 cash was raised and turned over as payment in full of mortgage long past due to the Board of Church Extension. This meeting was made possible, Mr. Lash writes, through the co-operation of the El Reno church in furnishing the preacher and his assistants, the Waurika church in furnishing the field for work, and the state missionary organization in bringing the two together. An offering was taken for state missions at the close. The present resident membership at El Reno, First church, is 670. Over a hundred members were added during the past year. For all departments there was raised during the year a total of $3,971.83. For the building fund a total of $11,249.19 is reported.

Kansas City Congregation of Young People Thrives.

On January 31, J. B. Hunley completed four years of service with the Ivanhoe Park church, Kansas City, Mo. This is a vigorous young congregation composed largely of young people and located in the new southeast section of the city. The membership is 425, with a Bible-school of 500. There has been a steady, normal growth along all lines. During the past year the Bible-school attendance averaged 345 and the average offering was $13.26. There were 51 additions to the congregation. The church and its organizations gave to missions and benevolences a total of $1,035.28, which was divided proportionately among all the agencies of the brotherhood.

Fowler Orphans' Home Will Raise Poultry.

The Board of Trustees of the Fowler Orphans' Home, Dallas, Tex., has decided to utilize the fifteen acres of land now owned by the Home by converting it into a first-class poultry farm. Arrangements have been made for its efficient management, and even now the farm is a reality. Several churches have already made generous donations of poultry to start the work.

D. E. Olson Doing Epoch-Making Work in Minneapolis.

A work that stands out almost in a class by itself is the work of D. E. Olson and his associates in Minneapolis, Minn. For years Mr. Olson, himself a foreigner, has dreamed of the time when the Disciples of Christ could do something great for the 40,000,000 foreigners in the United States. Mr. Olson has found that the geographical center of this continent is the Twin Cities. Here is also located the university having the largest attendance of foreign students. The State University of Minnesota has an enrolment of 13,252 students at the present time. Within 500 miles of this spot there are living three million Scandinavians, one million Poles, one million Germans and millions of other foreign peoples.

New Evangelist for Dallas, Tex., District.

Tolbert F. Weaver has been engaged as Evangelist for the Dallas, Texas, District. Mr. Weaver was recently married to Miss Elizabeth Cruse, of Woodville, Tex.

D. Y. Donaldson Will Take Emporia, Kansas, Work.

D. Y. Donaldson, recently resigned from South Broadway, Denver, is assisting the Emporia, Kan., church, in the union revival being conducted there by C. R. Scoville and company. The Emporia church has asked Mr. Donaldson to become its pastor, and Mr. Donaldson writes that he will accept the work upon his release at Denver. F. E. Mallory, pastor at East Side, Denver, will succeed Mr. Donaldson as chairman of the State Board of the Colorado Christian Missionary Society. C. H. Morris, the new pastor at Central, becomes a member of the State Board and Executive Committee, succeeding Mr. Donaldson.

Church Reports 118 Added Members at Regular Services.

The following excellent report comes from Jackson Boulevard church, Chicago, Austin Hunter, pastor: Raised for all purposes, $7,640.62. Of this amount $1,452.17 was for missions and benevolences. Average attendance of Chinese Missions, 51. Additions, 118, all at regular services; 66 were received by baptism, 52 by letter and statement, 15 Chinese by baptism. Funerals, 47; weddings, 43.

Buffalo, N. Y., Pastor Preaches "Why?" Sermons.

Total receipts during 1915 at Jefferson St., Buffalo, N. Y., were $7,502.06, of which $4,219.10 was for local expenses. The church gave $1,390.42 for missions and $192.93 for benevolences. The Bible-school raised $1,052 and gave $434 for missions. The C. W. B. M. has 72 members and raised $216.30. The Ladies' League raised $403.62. The Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, Junior, Intermediate and Senior Christian Endeavor Societies are represented in the church. The pastor made 1,675 calls, had 19 weddings and 26 funerals, and received 153 into the church. Losses by death and removal, 26; net gain, 127. The pastor, B. S. Ferrall, is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons on the general theme, "Why?" The following is the list of questions being treated: "Why I entered the ministry?" "Why I do not baptize infants?" "Why my creed is short?" "Why God permits trouble?" "Why I wear the name of Christ?" "Why a copy of the New Testament is presented to each convert?"

Dr. Breeden Discusses Hell.

It was no fire and brimstone place of punishment that H. O. Breeden painted for the congregation at First church, Fresno, Cal., during the revival being held by Mr. Breeden in his own church. The hell he preached was something worse. He outlined in epigramatic expressions the "place of torment," showing the fires of memory burning with fiercer flame than the zealots of early days set forth. A few of Dr. Breeden's most striking statements follow: "The boundary of hell is the sphere of the soul. Sin spells hell. Hell is a state, a condition. Hell is your own soul. Hell is consequence." The evangelist summoned a new aid to fasten the effect of his sermon when he closed with the words of condemnation pronounced by the Master to the unbeliever, repeated them in almost a whisper, and then sent the congregation out into the night without benediction or parting hymn. "Can wickedness exists without wretchedness," the speaker asked. "Or sin without suffering? Can a cause exist without an effect? No! No! Sin spells hell in this world and the next. Hell is the logical sequence of sin. Hell is no nightmare of medieval priests and preachers to terrify disbelievers, nor yet the hallucination of a discordant brain, but an awful reality in the nature of things. Hell is a state, a condition; hell is anywhere sin is, and is as eternal as sin is eternal." Dr. Breeden then took up the parable, and analyzed it, and as he had finished, he observed: "One shudders at the

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, Ph. D.

Vol. I Ready for Mailing at $1.00

A thrilling and luminous interpretation of the Old Testament prophets, setting forth the historical situation within which each prophet lived and toward which his message was directed, and reconstructing for the modern reader the biographical story of each one of the immortal preachers of righteousness in ancient Israel. These two volumes have a tremendous value for the time in which we live—a time of war and fear of war. Dr. Willett makes each prophet live anew. No Bible student can understand the full message of the Bible who does not have a vivid grasp of the messages of Israel's prophets. There is no writer or teacher in America or Europe who has come nearer weaving the messages of these ancient moral leaders into the warp and woof of his own soul than has Professor Willett. His treatment in these two volumes will be not only a standard among scholars but an inspiration to the rank and file of Christian people for years to come.

Laymen's Day at Eaton, O.

January 16 was Laymen's Day at First church, Eaton, O., About twenty laymen had charge and conducted both morning and evening services. The pastor occupied a place in the pew for the day. "Making Good in the Local Church," was the theme for consideration. Special music, quartettes, solos and instrumental, were features.

Le Roy St. John to Leave Spokane Field.

Le Roy St. John, who served with favorable reputation for a number of years as song evangelist and assistant with some of our leading evangelists, has been music director and superintendent of the Bible-school of Central church, Spokane, Wash., for the past year and a half. This work he has resigned and will conclude this month to return to the evangelistic field to assist located ministers or evangelists as a song leader. While laboring with Central church he has also been teaching evangelistic music and hymnology to the students of Spokane University.

Conference on Men's Work in Pennsylvania.

W. J. Clarke, the superintendent of the adult work of the Bible School Department of the American Christian Missionary Society conducted a series of conferences on men's work in the Western District, Pa., during the second and third weeks of January. Conferences were held at East End, Knoxville and Hazelwood, Pittsburgh, Homestead, New Castle, Beaver Falls, Altoona and Johnstown.

What Bloomington, Ill., Needs Most.

The work of R. P. Shepherd at First church, Bloomington, Ill., as instructor in an institute of religious education proved quite popular. It may not be generally known that Mr. Shepherd is now managing director of the Community Efficiency Commission with headquarters in Cleveland. This commission hopes to reach all the north central states with a uniform prothe first in the state, for efficiency in economic, social and religious work. They have adopted a program for from five to ten years' work for the building up and betterment of the community life. Mr. Shepherd said there are a number of men in Bloomington who are real leaders for this community building and that he hoped to be in touch with them personally before leaving the city. He said further that he hoped to return to Bloomington at some future time and outline a definite program for the up-building of the city. Mr. Shepherd says the most important thing needed in the city of Bloomington is one or two municipal directors of physical education. They should be supplied with at least 6 acres of ground to equip and make into playgrounds for children and young people. He says that more mischief is arranged during the play hours than all the rest of the twenty-four, and that they could be used for good if conditions were so arranged that play life might be properly directed.

C. R. Scoville at Emporia, Kan., in Union Meeting.

Fully 5,000 persons heard Charles Reign Scoville, union evangelist at Emporia, Kan., preach his sermon on "booze." The crowds began gathering before 1 o'clock and by 3 o'clock, the hour for starting the service, not a vacant seat was to be found. Nearly 200 persons enlisted with the Emporia churches during the day, making a total of 3,008 in three weeks of invitation. Guy A. Williams writes that First church is very fortunate in having filled its pulpit, left vacant by the resignation of Lee Sorey, before the campaign had gotten into full swing. D. Y. Donaldson, formerly of Denver, arrived several days ago and both he and the large congregation are working enthusiastically for the success of the meeting. Mr. Scoville will open his Keokuk, Iowa, campaign on Feb. 15. A tabernacle which will seat approximately 5,000 persons already is being built in the Iowa city.

A Notable Success

The welcome that has been given by the leaders in the churches and Sunday schools to the little book just issued by the Disciples Publication Society:

"The Training of Church Members"

is evidence that this text has come to meet a very definite need in the churches.

The following are typical letters received from leaders concerning the book:

FROM REV. H. CLAY TRUSTY, Seventh Street Church, Indianapolis: "I have examined thoroughly the manual, "The Training of Church Members," and think it a very fine thing. We need to spend some time with young Christians on the fundamentals of our Christian religion and church life. This affords a splendid guide."

FROM REV. L. C. MOORE, Waterloo, Ia.: "This book is filling a long known need in our mid-week service. I am more than pleased with it. The attendance was doubled in four weeks by the use of the text."

FROM REV. IRVING BROWN, Sac City, Ia.: "I am much impressed with it. Shall introduce it either at the C. E. or mid-week prayer-meetings. We all need the training it supplies."

FROM REV. L. J. MARSHALL, Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo.:

"This is a timely piece of work. Its clear and simple presentations of the lessons to be taught should make it popular among Christian workers."

How You May Use "The Training of Church Members in Your Work

(1) As a book of study in your mid-week or Endeavor prayer-meeting.

(2) As a text-book in your young people's Sunday school classes.

(3) As a text for study in a special "Pastor's class" organized for training of young Christians and meeting either through the week or on Sunday.

(4) As a teacher-training course.

The New Year is at hand. Make it coun or something in genuine, substantialt training in religion.

Would You Advise a Young Man to Enter the Ministry?

This is the question that is to be answered by some of our leading preachers in the Symposium to be featured in an early issue of "The Conquest." Among those submitting answers to this question are the following: Dr. E. L. Powell, Dr. Peter Ainslie, Dr. J. H. Garrison, Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, Rev. John R. Ewers, Rev. Howard T. Cree, Rev. William Dunn Ryan and Rev. E. F. Daugherty.

The replies sent by these men are intensely interesting. One of them says the ministry "is not the noblest calling." Another says it is. One writer declares that, "Taken by and large, the ministry has more mollycoddles, spineless sissies and posing pious martinettes than any other profession"; another one says, "In the councils of politicians, educators and ministers my experience has been that the minister measures up equally to the best."

BUT—All these men agree that there is no calling that is more fruitful and satisfying than the ministry, and all with one accord declare that they most certainly would advise serious and capable young men to enter its ranks.

READ THIS EXCERPT FROM ONE OF THE REPLIES:

"To a young man contemplating the ministry as a career, I'd say, 'Don't!' For the second time I'd say, 'Don't!' For success, on any scale of worldly measurement, is impossible in the ministry. Don't take the ministry unless God and His righteousness are the only things counting in your life philosophy. Don't enter the ministry if you can throttle and deny and push off your life map—its call. But if you can't choke off its call—if you have simply got to preach, why, then, God bless you, go to it, and you'll be happy through all the tides of misery you will be called to wade in carrying the burdens and solving the troubles of others."

Is your Church a part of this hand? Have you as a Minister helped to extend this hand to the needy ones in pagan lands?

The hand is a striking illustration of the all-round service the Foreign Society is rendering to help those to light who now sit in midnight darkness. Where can a Christian man put a dollar that will count for more to bring the gospel and the Kingdom of God to all men, than in the Foreign Society at this time? The work of the Society is a record, and not a prospectus. It has something worthwhile to show for its forty years of toil, for the graves of its missionaries scattered over the world, and for the more than $6,000,000 expended.

Every church and every individual that has put a dollar into this cause, can now rejoice over the great results.

We are only at the beginning of our splendid opportunities. Only a few foundation stones have been placed. Our great task of evangelizing the whole great wide world is yet before us. The superstructure is yet to be completed. We must press this work as never before.

It behooves us to make a substantial advance in these March Offering days. The voice of God is speaking to us in clear, definite tones to move forward!

IMPORTANCE OF THE MARCH OFFERING

It is important to all our work, both at home and abroad. If we fail in March we will go limp and maimed all through the year. A big March Offering insures a successful missionary year. Many churches look forward to this day as the most joyous during the whole year. It should be made a day of the very greatest importance.

BRIGHT OUTLOOK

The outlook for the Offerings is fine. Orders for supplies are pouring in by every mail. New Living-Link churches are being enrolled constantly. The words of encouragement were never more numerous or more emphatic. There seems to be a determination all along the line to do a worthy part. Let there be a united, determined, enthusiastic effort to make this a memorable year.

Prompt action should be the word to send all down the line. Please order March Offering supplies today that they may reach you in good time.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

THE NEXT EIGHT MONTHS

of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Will be the most significant period in the history of the publication. As readers of the "Century" know, Mr. Morrison has been chosen Editorial Representative of the Panama Congress, with the task of interpreting its deliberations to the secular and religious press of North America. Mr. Morrison will also accompany the deputation of sixteen from Panama to the series of Regional Conferences to be held in four capital cities of South America—Lima, Santiago, Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro. He will interpret these conferences also to the press and will compile their deliberations into a volume to constitute Volume Four of the "Proceedings" of the Panama Congress.

Readers of The Christian Century will be pleased to learn that Mr. Morrison has promised to send articles concerning the Congress and Conferences for first publication in the columns of The Christian Century. These will be the first authoritative reports of this great religious council, second in importance only to the Edinburg Conference, held in 1910.

HERE IS A SUGGESTION

You will wish your friends to enjoy these stirring reports of the achievements of these epochal meetings. Here is the way for you to realize this desire: The publishers have arranged to furnish The Christian Century during these eight months at a special rate of 75 cents per subscription. Get your friends themselves to subscribe for the paper at this special rate, or pay for their subscriptions yourself. You can do them no greater favor than to enlist their interest in this great gathering which looks forward to the conquest of South America for Christ!—Office Manager.

WHAT SHOULD A MINISTER DO WHO IS CONSCIOUS THAT HE HOLDS VIEWS IN ADVANCE OF THOSE HELD BY MOST OF HIS PEOPLE, YET LOVES HIS WORK AND HIS CONGREGATION, AND WANTS TO BE OF REAL SERVICE IN THE MINISTRY?

Not a few men have found themselves perplexed by such a situation, and have wondered if candor did not compel them to resign their pulpits.

Others there are who today are facing the same problem, and do not find an easy answer to their questions. They want to be true to themselves and their convictions, and yet they do not want to injure the cause of Christ by unwise boldness.

What should a minister do in such a situation?

Let it be frankly understood at the beginning that no man who is intellectually alive, whose mind has not grown stagnant with inaction, can prevent or wholly close up a certain distance between his own thinking and that of all but the most alert of his people.

In the nature of the case he will read books to which his parishioners do not have access, or in which but few of them would be interested. He must live in part in the world of intellectual experiment and discipline to which few other men are accustomed. He will be but a poor shadow of a minister if he does not pay this price of spiritual leadership.

Let him fully understand that truth is progressive. No man who is using his mind with sensitiveness to his intellectual responsibility to the age in which he lives and the needs of the people to whom he ministers, can ignore this fact.

There will be many themes, educational, political, social, religious, upon which he gains insight and reaches conclusions quite unsuspected by the members of his church, or at least the majority of them.

Some of these opinions may be truisms to some, and highly revolutionary to others. What does the wise minister do? Does he resign his pulpit because he has become convinced that single tax, or free trade, or the propaganda of peace, or sex education in the schools, or the fight for the destruction of the saloon, or the abolition of segregated vice, or the government ownership of public utilities, or the philosophy of pragmatism, or any other of a hundred interests, has become to him a matter of conviction?

He does nothing of the kind. If he is wise, he understands that these are views which are to him of more or less vital importance, but that they have no right so to control his message that it shall be rendered partisan thereby. If they are worth anything to him as convictions, his people will come to know it. But if they are not convinced or interested, or even are hostile, they will recognize the minister's right to do his own thinking and reach his own conclusions. Now suppose he shares with the great body of studious ministers of the present day the conviction that the principle of evolution is the most satisfactory explanation of the divine activity in the material world; or the knowledge that the most valid interpretation of the Bible is that which has been made available by the work of the higher criticism; or the feeling that the new values of religious education are indispensable in his thinking and work, or that the religious character and standing of Christian people who are not of his "faith and order" must be recognized. In most instances he will be confronted by the knowledge that a bald avowal of his view on these themes would trouble the minds of many of his people, who unembarrassed by any knowledge of the facts or loyal to early training, are quite free to yield to the alarm which an unknown or prejudged topic is sure to arouse. The difficulty is the same as in any of the former cases.

The wise minister knows that on many themes he will not be of the same mind with at least some of his members. He would be of little value as teacher and inspirer if he were. But he knows that regarding the essentials of the Christian faith, he and they are of one mind. And if he has been considerate and tactful in his leadership, they have learned to trust him, even when they cannot quite understand.

If he knows himself to be loyal to the deep fundamentals of our holy faith, and if he is convinced that in matters of opinion, like those named, he has the fellowship of men who are to be trusted as leaders in the church universal, he will go forward without wavering.

What would be the effect upon the church if the men who have seen the larger vision of Christian truth had grown discouraged by opposition or misrepresntation, and had withdrawn from its fellowship? That act would have deprived them at once of all power to assist in the realization of better things.

A few of the reformers, when the situation became intolerable, have left their older relationships and started out on new lines of religious leadership, and with success. But the vast number of such spirits have remained in the churches of their nativity, and have helped bring them to higher grounds of vision.

The man who finds himself committed to new ideals of Christian truth, by his study of the Word and the works of God, is in duty bound to remain where he can make his message most effective,—with the people who know and trust him.

But he ought to be very sure that he really has a vital truth, and not mere illusion. He ought to pay the price of discrimination between the transient and the permanent. He ought to be able to draw a clear line between matters of belief and matters of opinion. And in so doing, he will remember that the church has always suffered from the zeal of those who have tried to force the latter items into the former category.

But more than all, he will be sensitive to the fact that no man can lead who strips himself of his following. He must understand that his is a pedagogical task, the duty of interpreting new truth to the unprepared. This always calls for discrimination, tact, large patience, and sincere appreciation.

Friedrich Nietzsche, Philosopher

BY CHARLES H. FORSTER

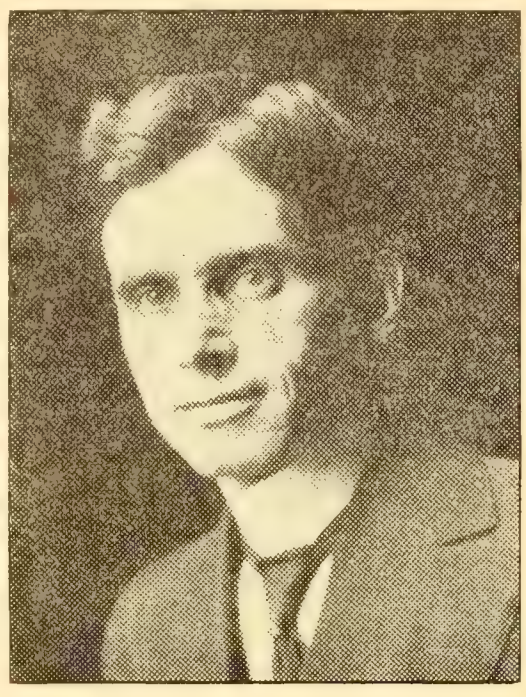
NO ONE can be intelligent concerning the present European situation who has not made it his business to know something about the philosophy of Friedrich Nietzsche, the man who wrote a religion which many militarists have made the rule of their faith and practice.

The average American knows nothing about this remarkable man, yet the extent of his influence upon modern life is tremendous. In a large measure he is responsible for the manner of conducting the present war, and for the conscience which has allowed so many shocking things to happen. His teachings, and the writings of his disciples have become a menace to the future of the human race and the foe of the ideals we hold most dear.

OF TREMENDOUS INFLUENCE.

In Germany his books have gone through forty editions and more. In English we can count at least twenty-eight editions, nineteen in French, seventeen in Spanish, nine in Swedish. Over a thousand articles and reviews dealing with his teachings have appeared, not counting the wide discussion concerning him which has been carried on since the beginning of the war. A number of works of fiction have been written with Nietzsche as the central figure. Much of the finest German poetry has found its theme in his philosophy, and many dramas have been written under the spell of his teaching. Strauss' great symphony, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," had its inspiration in Nietzsche's book of that name. His influence in the United States is subtle, indirect, but tremendous just the same.

We must not be frightened by the fact that Nietzsche was a philosopher. Philosophy is the most interesting stuff when told in the tongue of the average man, and if a certain type of philosophy is held to be responsible for the present situation in Europe, and also a danger to the future, it is the duty of us ordinary folk to know something about it.



In the first place, Nietzsche is the greatest exponent of pure individualism. He expresses supreme contempt for Christians, Socialists, humanitarians, democrats and all after their kind. He is the philosopher of pure aristocracy. He accused the above mentioned types of being unnatural. He reviled them because he considered that they were a menace to the future of the human race. The Christian takes care of the cripple and keeps him alive, when, according to the decree of nature, the cripple should be killed off to make room for a better creature. Who would think of nursing with tender care all the poor, weakly cabbages in the vegetable garden, but in our so-called modern civilization we build statues to the memory of those benevolent statesmen who spend their hours making laws the sole purpose of which is to coddle the runts.

DOCTRINE OF THE SUPERMAN.

This is what Friedrich Nietzsche told Germany, and he did it in the most picturesque style. He attempted to upset all our conventional notions about being religious and good. He would have us believe that the big, bad pagan, with a knotty club, with blood clots on the knots, is just the kind of Superman the world needs in these weakly, effeminate days. All recognize these ideas of Nietzsche as quite familiar, but all do not know they were Nietzsche's. He incidentally told the Prussians that the world needed a Super-nation, and it is too bad that the philosopher is dead, now that his countrymen are trying to fill the bill.

He did not advocate such startling ideas offhand. He was a thorough student of science and history, and it would be hard to beat him as a logician. German scholars are good at that. He never said anything that he couldn't back up.

I will now attempt to give the chief line of argument out of which Nietzsche developed his philosophy. His purpose was to establish a new standard of morals.

We all know something about Darwin and the doctrine of evolution. This doctrine changed our ideas about the place of man in the world and the relationship he holds to the lower forms of animal life. Now, Darwin set down for all time the indisputable fact that the highest ends of nature have been reached by carrying out the law which is now known as "a struggle for existence and the survival of the fittest." He also proved that if anything hinders the carrying out of this law all nature will start on the road to ruin and decay.

"SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST."

Nietzsche took this law and worked it for all it is worth, and it will stand a lot of working. It is a universal law and we cannot escape it in any realm of life. We can discover it at work in history and in modern life. If we pulled it out of our present day world by the roots, we would have a shapeless, meaningless mass, and not the millennium, as some good people would try to make us believe. Taking this law as his premise, Nietzsche reasoned after this fashion: If the highest ends of nature have been and are attained by the survival of the fittest in physical and mental superiority, then it is righteousness to be strong, and sinfulness to be weak, unprepared and unfit. It is also a sin to sympathize with weakness, or to have compassion for the unfit. Such sympathy and compassion are a conspiracy against the true development of the race. Following this line of argument he declared that the only true ethical standard for a mighty race is to consider it a duty to subdue all weaker races in order to leave the world in the control of the strongest, the mightiest and the ablest. This is the kind of stuff German "Kultur" is made of. It all came from Nietzsche, the man whose philosophy prepared Germany for the Great War.

A few paragraphs from the philosopher's writings will fit in right here, and I have chosen some of the choicest, as well as those which will give best a general idea of his teachings. I will attempt to translate Nietzsche's intricate German sentences into the language of the every-day American. In doing so I may call forth the criticism of academic persons, but I shall above all things be accurate in conveying the idea, and that is what we want to know.

CHRISTIANITY DANGEROUS!

"Christianity is a danger to the future," wrote Nietzsche in a paragraph which gives in a condensed form his attitude toward European Christianity. "It was invented by a lot of weak, good-for-nothing Jews because they hated their military masters—the noble and mighty Romans. These Jews labeled the Romans as 'bad' and as 'Barbarians'. But it is very natural that the subdued, resentful, pusillanimous Hebrews would label their conquerors as 'bad'. The Christian religion is just the result of a grudge, on the part of a despised race, toward a mighty Super-race. It was 'bad' to be a Roman and 'good' to be a Jew. The good according to Christianity are the poor, the meek, the to-be-pitied. Of course it is quite natural for a lot of little lambs to bear a grudge against the big birds of prey, but there is no reason in blaming the big birds of prey for carrying off the small lambs and eating them. If the lambs say among themselves: 'These big birds of prey are bad, and he who is as little as possible like a bird of prey, but rather the opposite, like a lamb, is good; we cannot find fault with them for establishing such a standard of morals."

"MIGHT IS RIGHT."

Following this line of reasoning, we can choose a paragraph which explains the German doctrine that might is right. This is the way Nietzsche puts it: "The big bird of prey has a right to display its strength and superiority in the destruction of the lamb and in the use of the lamb's body for food. Pray, why not? It is the right of strength to use its strength. How can anyone reason otherwise? It is the right of strength to search for enemies, for resistance, for triumph! Europe should beware of Christianity. It is absurd for a strong, virile nation like Germany to take for its religion a Christianity that exalts weakness, meekness, sympathy and humility as virtues. The religion of the Germanic heroes and the Scandinavian Vikings is far more virile." Thus Nietzsche puts the theory that might is right upon a philosophical foundation.

A study of this philosophy will lead us to understand how Germany can regard a treaty as a scrap of paper. Nietzscheanism teaches that the State is the maker and the master of conscience. If the existing standard of conscience proves itself to be an injury to the State, it then has a right to make a new conscience better suited to its purposes. This is what Germany has done in the present war.

His explanation regarding the origin of conscience is very interesting. In the beginnings of history all men were roving savages, void of all sense of responsibility to society. After a time they organized themselves into clans. Gradually laws and customs were established, and the once free savage placed himself under obligation to the clan of which he was a member. He ceased to be a law unto himself. Conscience, therefore, had its origin in the demands of the State upon the individual. As the State developed and became more highly organized, making larger and more complex demands upon the individual, so also the idea of conscience became more complex. The State is therefore the originator and the master of conscience. It has a right to cast aside all notions of right and wrong if they do not serve its higher interests. Nietzsche has done a great deal for Germany. He has set her free.

He has molded the "Kultur" of the military caste and through them his philosophy is shaping the destiny of the nation. He has freed German militarism from the trammels of conventional morality!

The Religion of a Modern Man--His God

Synopsis of a recent sermon by Frank Waller Allen.

SCIENCE and the idea of democracy are changing the modern man's conception of God. With his test of fact and service he can no longer think in the terms of the "glory and majesty" of the medieval "King of Heaven and Earth," but must necessarily seek a God who is related to him by loveliness of character.

This removes God from some distant star, bringing him to earth in human and cosmic life. He is the cosmic consciousness. He is in and through the universe, the energy which we call life. He is in the forces which hold the planetary systems in their places, the sap that climbs each returning spring into the greening trees, the yellow crocus that smiles over night on the world. This makes clear the meaning of St. Paul, "God and Father of all, who is over all, and through all, and in all." God is immanent in cosmic as well as human life.

Democracy, with its test of service, has unthroned the Sovereign-God, bringing the worker with the people. Always men have explained the God idea in the terms of government. To the ancient Hebrew he was first a patriarch: an Arabian raised to the nth power. With Saul and David God became a king. The early Latin church interpreted him in the terms of the Roman empire. Today the democratic spirit deplores a God of a privileged class. The modern man resents the implication by the three rulers of Europe that God is uniquely and particularly their king, or kaiser or czar. When the kaiser insists that God is with him, a sort of "heavenly" militarist, we are more likely to remember the reply of Lincoln when, upon being asked whether or not God was on his side in the civil war, he replied, "I do not know, but I hope that we are on God's side." No man save one very humble of spirit and who thought in the terms of human welfare, could have made such a reply under such exacting circumstances. God has become one of the people. "Now," says Gladden, "so far as the relations of God and man are concerned, what has happened to the old theology, what has transformed it into the new theology is simply this, that the ruling conception of God as sovereign, ruler, moral governor, has been exchanged for the ruling conception of God as father."

Jesus explained God in the terms of fatherliness. To the carpenter he was the father of all men, and the source of all life. He did not use the hard and exacting terms of sovereignty. He used the just and gentle expressions of father and children. And when he made God father, all of us children, therefore brethren, he exemplified the democratic spirit.

Between brothers of a common father there can be no fundamental basis of life save that of justice and love. With Jesus fatherhood personified justice and love. Here again is the modern test of fact and service. The modern man no longer talks in the terms of clemency and mercy: he wants justice only, and a chance to love and be loved. To him God is love and justice incarnate in life beautifying the world and creating a brotherly society.

Prayer

By Frank G. Tyrrell.

THERE are burdens that exhaust and struggles that fatigue in domestic experience, in the world of affairs, and in the decrepitude of old age; but sadder than all these is the shipwreck of a soul! The real tragedy of earth is not a disaster like the Titanic, but the dilapidation and demolition of an immortal soul. A friend said the other day: "I do not often speak to man on the subject of personl religion. But some time ago I did, and my friend promised to think about it. Now," he added with a touch of sadness, "the poor fellow is in jail, accused of embezzlement." There went a full rigged ship on the rocks, hammered to pieces by the Euroclydon of covetousness.

Better the grave that wounds the earth and breaks the heart than moral overthrow. But now, when sheeted storms sweep over and smite the earth, when the hurricane like a writhing dragon is in the sky, ready to devour, when Apollyon assaults, where is your refuge? A fair weather religion is no religion at all. A plantation darky, thinly clad, went shivering along the road to a Texas town, feeling the biting fury of a blizzard that escaped from Medicine Hat. Finally, remembering the excessive heat of the summer, he said to the furious blizzard, "Look ahead, honey, wha' was yo' las' August?"

"Men ought always to pray, and not to faint." This is the "Line of Reinforcements"—prayer, earnest, tenacious, persistent, importunate, prevailing prayer. You need not be discouraged and despondent, you need never lose heart, if you will pray. Prayer is as definite, real and actual a force in God Almighty's universe as the law of gravitation, and science can explain one as easily as the other.

There are latent forces in nature which we have not yet learned to harness. As it is, the amount of energy of steam and machinery in the world is estimated to furnish fourteen mechanical slaves to every family of five. But the vast reserves of mental and moral energy infinitely surpass all this. Great reservoirs of power are hid in God. Prayer is the cable that will connect us with and distribute this power.

Would you be always at the top notch of efficiency? Always feel as if you could "run through a troop and leap over a wall?" Would you find every finger and muscle and nerve, every brain cell, every faculty, ready to serve your regnant will in the day's grind? Pray. Pray without ceasing. Pray importunately, and do not despair. Never let the words of prayer petrify on your lips.

When in the house of lords recently, his former colleagues were paying their respects to Lord Roberts, the gallant field marshal, the most significant tribute was uttered in his own words—an extract from a letter to Lord Curzon, in which he stated that in his home they had held family prayers for fifty-five years. If Field Marshal Lord Roberts could find the time for fireside devotions, may it not be that the ordinary man could also?

How Much Owest Thou?

THE path made smooth beneath thy feet,
The way made plain before thy face,
He brings thy soul, with patience sweet,
Into his love's appointed place.
And how much owest thou?
The thing thou could'st not be, He is;
The goal thou could'st not, He has won;
About thee throng his ministries,
Before thee shines the light of home.
And how much owest thou?
Yet thousands wander, far from light;
Poor sheep look up, and are not fed.
His loved ones perish in the night,
Thy brothers faint for lack of bread
Then how much owest thou?

THE DEEPENING OF LIFE

WHILE it is true that the European plunge into the abyss has greatly depressed thoughtful people regarding the efficiency of the Christian religion after two thousand years, yet on the other hand, the experiences of the war have brought to multitudes in the belligerent nations a deeper sense of the value of their Christian faith.

A notable series of letters has been sent from university professors in Germany to friends in America, telling of the religious awakening that has been felt in their land as the result of the sacrifices and sufferings of the war.

France is not usually credited with much religious fervor. In spite of the fact that it has produced some of the greatest saints of the church, and that men of the type of Sabatier and Pastor Wagner are today rendering notable service to religion, we usually think of France, and especially Paris, as light-hearted and non-religious. Yet the past year has brought many recitals of the most fervid faith and the deepest religious consecration, the evident results of the war's hardships.

And in England even more notable, perhaps because more accessible to us, are the instances in which the treasures of faith have been revealed. Many of the most notable English ministers have served as chaplains on the west war front, and all through England and Scotland the struggle to rise to imperial demands in a time of war has enlarged the field of religious experience and deepened the springs of faith.

An exchange quotes from a letter received from a Belgian city, which is somewhat typical of an entire body of such writings now issuing from the heart of suffering Europe. A paragraph is quoted:

"We here in this stricken, impoverished, devastated country have learned one thing, and that is, that there is no safety, no permanency, no refuge, no certain joy, no consolation except in religion. Those who have not Christ here are of all men most miserable, for the world has failed them. Everything human has failed,—armies, treaties, diplomats, governments, Hague courts, money—everything has failed. There is no certainty anywhere. I have lost half my family—all my neighbors have lost some one. We have all lost our homes, although perfectly innocent people, having nothing to do with the war. My salvation has been in Christ. I have to seek security in this world. I have risen unto Him, finding my refuge above the inevitable vicissitudes of life. How rich one is who has Christ Jesus—how utterly helpless, poverty-stricken, those who have only the world."

CHURCH STATISTICS

FOR many years Dr. H. K. Carroll has issued an annual bulletin of church statistics under the direction of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

In the table representing the constituent bodies of the Federal Council, the Disciples occupy fifth place in the number of communicants, with 1,363,163, being exceeded by the Methodist churches north and south, the Baptists and the Presbyterians. In number of churches they occupy sixth place, with 8,494, and in the number of ministers they also hold sixth place with 6,161. In the table which shows the net gains for 1915 the Disciples do not appear, but there is a note to the effect that the returns for the Disciples for 1915 are not yet ready. They are, however, given in the summary for 1915 a total of 1,522,821, whereas in the column for January, 1916, they have only 1,363,163.

It may be however that as the former enumeration includes the two groups of Disciples, the second may have omitted the returns from our non-co-operating churches.

The report of Christian progress in America during the year is on the whole encouraging. The Catholics added 188,000, the Methodists about 144,000, the Baptists nearly 131,000, the Presbyterians about 70,000, and the Episcopal church nearly 26,000.

There has been however a net decrease in the number of churches. The actual loss is about 160 as over against a gain during the previous year of over 1,300.

The grand totals are: of ministers, 180,607, an increase of over 1,700; of churches, 225,334, a decrease of 158; and of communicants 39,380,718, a gain of 653,640.

AN IMPORTANT MEETING

THERE are few public school instructors of the first rank who do not recognize the absolute necessity for some form of ethical and religious instruction in the public schools of the land.

Very timely, therefore, is the announcement that the Religious Education Association is to discuss this theme at its thirteenth annual meeting, to be held in this city February 28 to March 2.

The gathering is not a convention, such as the Association has held at various times in the past. It is to be a special conference arranged by the Council of the Association,—and is devoted to a study of this very important topic. Some of the outstanding figures in the religious and educational world are to be present, and the papers and addresses announced are certain to provoke discussion and to furnish light on this deeply significant problem.

Among the Disciples who are scheduled for addresses are Prof. W. M. Forrest of the University of Virginia; Prof. W. S. Athearn of Drake University; Dr. Robert P. Shepherd of Chicago; Rev. Myron T. Settle of Gary, Ind.; and Mr. Robert E. Hieronymus of Urbana, Ill.

The sessions of the conference are to be held at the Congress Hotel. Programs will be furnished upon application to the General Secretary, Henry F. Cope, 332 Michigan Ave., Chicago.

Almost everyone has some decided opinion regarding the place of religious instruction in public education. Few however have examined all the facts and know the difficulties surrounding the subject. This conference will be an admirable place to learn what steps have been taken and what experiments tried in the effort to solve the problem.

THE DISCIPLES' CONGRESS

WE NOTE the early announcement of the Disciples' Congress which is to be held in Chicago April 25-27. As it has now been two years since our last Congress we may expect a large and interested assembly of the men who are most alive to the vital problems of our religious thought and life. That such are the problems discussed in our Congress would readily appear if one should read over the programs since its inauguration in 1898. Practically no theme of importance has been neglected, and every type of thought has been ably represented. It has been a real Open Forum of ideas.

The program of the present year is in the competent hands of Secretary Lumley and President Goldner. We may expect, therefore, a feast of good things second to none that has been spread in previous meetings. We await with interest the early announcement of the full list of subjects and writers.

We are informed by the local committee that Congress Headquarters will be at the Sherman Hotel. The sessions will be held in the Crystal Room of the hotel and every possible convenience will be enjoyed. This is one of the most complete popular hotels in our city, and innumerable gatherings of such character are held here. Recently the hotel has entertained the Association of American Colleges, and the President's Section of the National Fraternal Congress of America. It was also Headquarters for the great Christian Endeavor Convention. It is believed this will be a thoroughly acceptable arrangement for the sessions of our Congress.

FOR THE MARCH OFFERING

THE neat volume of travel experiences in the far east, prepared by Stephen J. Corey as a journal of the work of the Commission last year, is an admirable campaign document.

The title is "Among Asia's Needy Millions." In paper covers the book costs twenty-five cents, or it can be purchased in cloth for half a dollar. It gives an interesting account of our missionary work in the Philippine Islands, China and Japan.

The story is told in an easy, attractive manner. It does not read like an argument, and yet it has all the force of a constant appeal for missionary awareness and activity.

It would be a capital idea if each of the churches would secure a suitable number of copies and distribute them, either by purchase or gift, as campaign material for the March offering. No one who reads this book will need to be urged to take a part in the annual festival of missions.

NEW THEOLOGICAL BUILDINGS

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week of the donation by an unnamed friend of the sum of two hundred thousand dollars for the construction of a theological building to be the home of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago.

Since the foundation of the University the Divinity School has been without a home of its own. At first it carried on its work on the upper floor of Cobb Hall. When Haskell Oriental Museum was built, the Divinity School was housed there in spite of the fact that the original intention was to confine the building to the uses of the oriental departments. For years the Divinity School has worked under the severe limitations imposed by this crowded condition. The third floor is entirely devoted to library purposes.

The new building will be situated just north of Haskell Museum, and will furnish ample and much needed room for the rapidly growing departments of the Divinity School.

Further relief will be found from the present crowded condition by the occupation of the building recently purchased by the Chicago Theological Seminary at the corner of Fifty-eighth Street and University Avenue. Their work, as well as that of the Disciples Divinity House, has hitherto been carried on in Haskell and adjoining buildings.

The new building promises to add very greatly to the efficiency of the Divinity School, already one of the leading institutions for theological education in the world.

A HOME VISITATION CAMPAIGN

AT VARIOUS times during the past five years the International Sunday-school Association has conducted campaigns of home visitation in various cities, and with remarkable results.

The latest enterprise of this sort was undertaken at Dayton, O., on Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 8, between the hours of 2 and 4. The work was under the direction of Mr. J. Shreve Durham, the General Superintendent of the Home Visitation department.

Leaders in the religious, social, educational, commercial, industrial and civic life of Dayton affirm that the effort was most valuable in its influence upon the city. The public press of Dayton gave strong editorial endorsement to the movement.

About 124,000 people were visited, and more than 57,000 who were not connected with any church expressed their religious preferences and were placed in connection with the church and Sunday-school of their choice.

Of course such a movement as this is only valuable as it is followed up by the churches. But it would seem to have the greatest possibilities for good if so utilized.

It is a significant spectacle to see Protestants, Roman Catholics and Jews co-operating heartily, as they have done in each one of these home visitation campaigns. It is the promise of a closer unity of interest among religious forces in the future.

A WOMEN'S JUBILEE

THE fiftieth anniversary of the Young Women's Christian Association of the United States is to be observed this month.

Fifty years ago the ladies of Boston formed a society in behalf of self-supporting girls who came to the city to seek employment.

Today there are nearly a thousand Associations, city, county and student, with an enrollment of 343,000 members.

The Young Women's Christian Association is performing in a quiet and yet efficient manner a most notable work. It deserves the heartiest good will and support of Christian people.

PROVIDING FOR AGED PREACHERS

A NOTEWORTHY example of denominational arousal to a great obligation is exhibited by the Methodist Episcopal Church, which has gone far already with its campaign to create an endowment fund of fifteen million dollars for the care of aged ministers, and the widows and orphans of ministerial families.

Already nearly six million dollars has been raised for this purpose, and during the past year one million eight hundred thousand dollars has been distributed among two thousand seven hundred and twelve veterans, three thousand ministers' wives, and about five hundred orphans of deceased preachers. It is believed that by the end of the current year the fund will reach eight million dollars.

This is a splendid example of efficiency in a most needed cause.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Religious Education Association Will Meet.

The thirteenth annual meeting of the Religious Education Association will be held at the Congress Hotel, in Chicago, Feb. 28 to March 1. This will be a specializing conference on "The Relation of Instruction in Religion to Public Education." A number of special investigations have been carried on this year which will be reported through pamphlets. Besides these, there will be a series of strong addresses by those who have given the subject under consideration special study.

Presbyterians Care for Aged Ministers.

The movement for the care of aged ministers is now nation-wide and has affected nearly every denomination. The Presbyterians have asked for a ten million dollar endowment fund and it has been recently reported that four million had been raised already for this purpose.

The Oldest City Missionary Society.

Does any one know an older city missionary society than the one supported by the Congregationalists in Boston? It recently celebrated one hundred years of history. This society is not bowed down with the weight of years as is shown by the reports. Twenty-five missionaries have been in the field each serving for the full year during 1915. Rev. D. W. Waldron is the executive and his term of service extends over nearly forty years.

Honor Washington Gladden.

Rev. Washington Gladden of Columbus, O., celebrated his eightieth birthday on Feb. 11 and the Congregationalist got out a special edition of this paper in his honor. Well known men of the nation print congratulatory paragraphs. He was pastor for thirty-three years in Columbus and for seven years served in Springfield, Mass. He has been a pioneer among those making the results of social investigation known to the church. His activities in getting better labor legislation are noteworthy. He has been a theological writer of some ability and his poem, "O Master, let me walk with thee," is sung over the Christian world. He is still very active in teaching in his church, and in writing, though he no longer preaches regularly.

Wife of Bishop Hartzell Dies.

Mrs. Jennie Culver Hartzell, who has shared the labors of the veteran Methodist bishop of Africa passed out of this life on January 27, at Oklahoma City. Mrs. Hartzell was one of the first honorary vice presidents of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church and it was largely due to her initiative that the society was organized. She was married in 1869 and her early married life was spent in New Orleans. In this city in 1877 she started a mission school for colored women in which they were taught to read and given the beginnings of industrial training. She made many journeys to Africa with her husband. The funeral was held in Chicago and the services were participated in by Bishop McDowell, President Charles M. Stuart of Garrett Biblical Institute and Dr. Charles Bayard Mitchell of St. James Methodist Episcopal church.

Newspapers Report Sermons.

Newspapers evidently do not regard all sermons as "dry." The Brooklyn Eagle for a number of years has had a page devoted to the sermons of New York divines. The Chicago American now has a preacher, Rev. W. H. Carwardine, who gathers sermons from the city pulpits, and writes an interpretative word about them each Monday.

Dan Crawford Writes Home.

Dan Crawford, the well-known African missionary and writer, writes that the European war is stirring the heart of Africa. The Arabs have espoused the German cause, and since Mr. Crawford has had occasion to oppose the Arab slave dealers, he finds the conditions surrounding his work very much disturbed.

Dishonor the Name of Quaker.

To what length liquor dealers will go is illustrated by the fact that there is an "Old Quaker Pure Rye Whiskey" and more lately a "Quaker Beer." The Friends have caused to be introduced in Congress a bill prohibiting the commercial use of their name. It is complimentary to the Quakers that commercial firms find their name one possessing favor with the people but surely every right-minded Christian will join in their protest against this latest outrage against them.

Honors Come to George Adam Smith.

Word has recently been received that the king has knighted George Adam Smith, the well known Old Testament scholar of Scotland. He has also been unanimously chosen as the moderator of the United Free General Assembly to be held in Edinburgh this coming May.

The Sunday School Grows.

The Sunday-school Council of the Evangelical Denominations met in Richmond recently and reported that the past year the evangelical schools had gained in enrolment nearly a million. This is an age of prosperity for the Sunday-school.

Club Brings Good Speakers to Town.

The Chicago Sunday Evening Club, meeting in Orchestra Hall is not a church but an organization to provide preaching for the transients of the city and it has several years of successful operation. Good speakers are secured from all over the nation. The addresses this year have been made by the following men: Hon. Louis F. Post, Prof. F. G. Peabody, Bishop W. F. McDowell, Sec. A. J. McKelway, Mary Antin, Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, Professor Steiner, Dean Brown, Bishop C. D. Williams, John R. Mott, Henry J. Allen, President Vincent, Bishop Anderson, Dr. J. A. MacDonald, Bishop F. J. McConnell, Charles Stelzle, Rev. James E. Freeman and Pres. W. H. P. Faunce.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, Ph. D.

Vol. I Ready for Mailing at $1.00

A thrilling and luminous interpretation of the Old Testament prophets, setting forth the historical situation within which each prophet lived and toward which his message was directed, and reconstructing for the modern reader the biographical story of each one of the immortal preachers of righteousness in ancient Israel. These two volumes have a tremendous value for the time in which we live—a time of war and fear of war. Dr. Willett makes each prophet live anew. No Bible student can understand the full message of the Bible who does not have a vivid grasp of the messages of Israel's prophets. There is no writer or teacher in America or Europe who has come nearer weaving the messages of these ancient moral leaders into the warp and woof of his own soul than has Professor Willett. His treatment in these two volumes will be not only a standard among scholars but an inspiration to the rank and file of Christian people for years to come.

THE DEATH OF STEPHEN.

Lesson for March 5.

Golden Text: Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life. Revelation 2:10.

Lesson Acts 7:1-8:3; verses 7:54-8:3 printed. Memorize 7:59, 60.

7 ((54) Now when they heard these things, they were cut to the heart, and they gnashed on him with their teeth. (55) But he, being full of the Holy Spirit, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, (56) and said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God. (57) But they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and rushed upon him with one accord; (58) and they cast him out of the city, and stoned him: and the witnesses laid down their garments at the feet of a young man named Saul. (59) And they stoned Stephen, calling upon the Lord, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. (60) And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep. 8 (1) And Saul was consenting unto his death.

And there arose on that day a great persecution against the church which was in Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judæa and Samaria, except the apostles. (2) And devout men buried Stephen, and made great lamentation over him. (3) But Saul laid waste the church, entering into every house, and dragging men and women committed them to prison.

VERSE BY VERSE.

7:54. Now when they heard these things. The speech of Stephen recorded in the first part of the chapter and part of the sixth. Read it! They were cut to the heart. The Greek means "sawn asunder." Their hearts were torn with rage. They were angry with Stephen.—They gnashed on them with their teeth. This is a very common expression for extreme anger—the brute-like grinding of the teeth.

7:55. He. Stephen.—Being full of the Holy Spirit. Stephen was saturated with the life and teaching of Jesus as a sponge might be saturated with water.—The glory of God. The brightness in which God appears.—Jesus standing. Some one has said, to welcome the first martyr to heaven.—Right hand of God. A position denoting a place of authority.

56. I see the heavens opened. This expression denotes insight into divine things.—The Son of man standing on the right hand of God. Words expressing the exaltation of Jesus. See Matt. 26:64.

57. They cried out with a loud voice. To drown his words for themselves and others, and to excite some to violent action.—And stopped their ears. Thus indicating that the words of Stephen were "blasphemous."

58. They cast him out of the city, and stoned him. See Lev. 24:14-16. They treated him as a blasphemer.—The witnesses. The false witnesses; see Acts 6:13. These witnesses, according to the law in Deut. 17:7, were the leaders in the stoning.—Laid down their garments at the feet of a young man named Saul. These were their outer garments. They were in the way. This is the first mention of Saul, who afterwards becomes Paul.

59. The Lord. Jesus. Not found in the Greek.—Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. On the cross Jesus commended his spirit to his father, and now his faithful follower commends his spirit to him.

60. Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. Fix not this sin upon them, would be the literal rendering of the text. Jesus on the cross expressed the same thought in different words. To have this spirit of forgiveness is better than to have protection.—He fell asleep. Indicating his calm and peaceful death. It is a beautiful expression for death. Our word "cemetery" comes from a Greek word which means a "sleeping place."

8:1. Saul was consenting unto his death. He was not throwing the stones, but he was glad to see it being done by others. The Greek word indicates that he was consenting with pleasure. See Paul's words in Acts 22:20.—There arose on that day a great persecution against the church. The death of Stephen stimulated them to greater persecution. Because of this the church began a new era in its history. God's law is moving on, for men and churches.—Judea. As the word is used here it probably indicates Galilee and Perea.—Except the apostles. Their attitude toward the temple may have sheltered them.

2. Devout. A cautious, careful observance of the divine law. The term would include both Christians and pious Jews, and both may have been coworkers at the funeral.

3. Saul laid waste the church. Saul in his own words (Acts 26:9-11) was a bitter persecutor of the church. He did not do things in a half-hearted way. While we deplore the deed we admire the zeal and courage of the man.

The Martyr Spirit

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

Horace Mann said it is more difficult, and calls for higher energies of soul, to live a martyr than to die one. Some one has said that the way of the world is to praise dead saints and persecute living ones. It is the cause and not merely the death that makes the martyr. To die for the truth is not to die merely for one's faith, or one's country, it is to die for the world.

In this we find the true martyr spirit. We do not want men to die but live for the cause. The man who lives in his every day tasks the martyr spirit will be of the greatest value to his day and generation. The world is coming to see that we do not so much need men for large places as men to enlarge small places.

Stephen was chosen a deacon, for the purpose of "serving tables." He dignified the service by a noble life. He was habitually a man of spiritual power. This power was recognized as a valuable qualification, and hence his name has remained a source of inspiration centuries after his life went out. He was a "son of thunder" and at the same time a "son of consolation." A rare combination of power and grace. He was the first Christian martyr and his spirit passed to multitudes of men later in the history of the early church. In fact the early Christians under the Roman persecution endured the most dreadful tortures gladly, counting it joy to suffer because their Lord had suffered. They had not the slightest fear of death, but coveted the martyr's crown.

The Roman rulers, Trojan and Marcus Aurelius, who had sought to put an end to Christianity by putting its promoters to death found that it only made others the more willing to live and die for the church. Tertullian observed that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church."

The danger with individuals as well as with the church is that they make Christianity too easy. "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life," is the voice of success in every field of human endeavor.

Let him who feels that the spirit of the martyr is passing take his place in the ranks of those on the firing line and observe their devotion to the cause they love.

The eleventh chapter of Hebrews might be written every year from the heroes on the mission fields.

From the many, one incident will serve to illustrate all. Some ten years ago many missionaries were murdered in China; among those who lost their lives were two young missionaries who had arrived just the day before. Their companion at home, who was to have gone to that field but decided to study one year longer, upon hearing the sad news of his martyred friends, said: "I cannot help thinking that had I been more faithful, it would have been I that had gained a martyr's crown, and a better than I spared for the work. Now I earnestly seek the privilege of taking the place of the martyred heroes, and if in your judgment this sad event and the increased need justify my leaving my studies and proceeding at once to China, I am ready to sail."

While you read, your thought is bowing in reverence at the graves of other heroes who have given their lives as a willing sacrifice for those they love in every field of human experience. No! the martyr spirit still lives!

Some on has said, that

"Beautiful thoughts make a beautiful soul,
And a beautiful soul makes a beautiful face."

The soul that really lives, ascends frequently, and runs familiarly through the streets of the "Holy City," visiting the patriarchs and prophets, saluting the Apostles and admiring the martyrs, until it stands in the place of the great King. After a visit of this sort the face will shine like "the face of an angel," and the world will feel the power of such a life.

The Visitor

Enroute to Panama

ANOTHER missionary conference! Who that attended the great gathering in Edinburgh in 1910 can hear the announcement of any kind of missionary conference without a desire to go? And when such a conference is inspired by the same men who invested the Edinburgh meeting with epoch-making significance, its pull upon one's impulses is irresistible. The Congress on Christian Work in Latin America —that is the official title of this new conference, and the magic names of Mott and Speer and many others made world-famous at Edinburgh head the list of those responsible for its program and purposes. Panama was planned for at Edinburgh. A group of missionaries from Latin America in attendance upon the Edinburgh Conference met together several times to discuss the possibility of a similar conference being held especially for the needy fields of the Western Hemisphere, which had been excluded from the purview of the great gathering then in session. In accepting the chairmanship of the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Conference, Dr. John R. Mott candidly announced that he did so with the express understanding that his relationship to the committee must not be construed as inhibiting in any degree his active service on behalf of a future conference to deal with the missionary problems of Latin America. This it has now been proved was a wise precaution. Had there been no such understanding it is not unlikely that strong pressure would have been brought to bear upon Dr. Mott by the particular Episcopalian influences responsible for the exclusion of Latin America from the consideration of the Edinburgh Conference, and persuading him against lending his name and service to the great movement now about to come to its consummation at Panama. But fortunately for the cause of Christian progress, this leader of missionary strategy kept his hands from being tied with any such possible obligations, and as a result the Panama Congress, projected on the same plane as the Edinburgh Conference and with the same inspiring leaders is about to convene.

It is not my purpose to discuss the Congress in this letter. There will be enough time for that after the gathering has been held, and the readers of The Christian Century may be assured that I shall keep them informed of the discussions and findings at Panama. I have allowed myself to be loaded up with a considerable burden of work in interpreting the Congress for other journals and magazines as well as in preparing a volume telling the story of the Regional Conferences to be held in South American cities after the gathering on the Isthmus has adjourned. But The Christian Century will be first in my thought all the time, and I will find a very particular pleasure in taking a rather familiar and personal point of view for this correspondence. When one is a long way from home it is something of a relief to one's homesickness to write down one's experiences for the eyes of one's friends. An editor gets to think of his readers as making up a sort of family. This is especially true, I think, of "Century" readers, and I intend to allow considerable freedom to my pencil in recording experiences and observations which have interest to me personally, whether or not they might be considered to have significance to the general reader upon whose sympathetic feeling of membership in our "family" I would have no right to presume.

I spoke of homesickness. But in spite of the two thousand miles that at this writing stretch between myself and my home, and in spite of the wistful and yearning tenderness with which any traveler bound for the farther side of this round earth turns his thoughts toward the dear ones left behind, it can hardly be said that I have experienced as yet any mood answering to the description of homesickness. The fellowship of the boat has been delightful and inspiring, while the weather has so far been as if made to our order. This blessing of good weather is reckoned as a sort of special providence by those among us who, like myself, are poor sailors.

To begin with, we were given a gracious bon voyage by Dr. and Mrs. Finis Idleman and a group of their Central church members who came down to the New York dock at noon Wednesday, Jan. 26, to see us off on the good ship Almirante. While the boat delayed more than an hour to start I had a good visit with Dr. Idleman. He had been three Sundays in his new pulpit, and spoke hopefully of the situation as he finds it. It is very different from old Central in Des Moines, he confessed, and if one looks merely at the outward and visible one could easily make disheartening contrasts. But Dr. Idleman feels that there are certain services a minister can render the Disciples of Christ in New York City which will not appear in the statistical reports of his church, but which all discerning men may see and estimate at their true worth. With this conception I heartily agree, and I also agree with the wise men of Central church who sought out Dr. Idleman and called him to their pulpit, for I believe he is singularly well qualified for the great responsibility he has undertaken.

Yet from what I have said it must not be inferred that Dr. Idleman is content to accept the church as it is and allow it merely to mark time. On the contrary, he has begun his metropolitan ministry with an aggressiveness and courage which has already set a new mark for attendance and interest in the church services. A Sunday evening service has been re-established, the mid-week service organized with practical and attractive features, and the Sunday-school's work augmented. Somehow, I cannot help feeling that a new era is being begun in this the oldest congregation of our Disciples' fellowship.

When I say that Dr. Idleman and his companions came down to see us off I do not mean to use the pronoun "us" in any editorial sense, but literally, for there were several Disciples in whose departure these New York friends had very personal interest. First and chiefly there were Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Inman, members of Central church, in whose honor the congregation had a few days before given a reception, presenting them at the time with a valuable token of the affection in which they are held. Mr. Inman, as Secretary of the Panama Congress, has made a large place for himself in the confidence and program of missionary leaders in America. I feel certain that the scope and thoroughness of his work as it will be revealed at the Congress will surprise and impress all the delegates. Then there were President and Mrs. Charles T. Paul, of the College of Missions, that unique institution at Indianapolis, which is coming more and more into favor among not Disciples alone, but the missionary authorities of all the churches. Dr. Paul's grasp of the principles of missionary progress has brought him into a place of interdenominational leadership which reflects credit and satisfaction upon all his fellow Disciples, and upon the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in particular, for having the statesmanship to found the College of Missions and to put him at its head.

The fellowship of these friends and fellow-workers would be inspiring and delightful enough for the eight day voyage to Panama, but besides them there are Dr. and Mrs. John R. Mott; Dr. William Adams Brown, of Union Theological Seminary, and Mrs. Brown; Bishop William Cabell Brown, of the Episcopal Church of Virginia; Mr. Fennell P. Turner, Secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement of North America, and Mrs. Turner; Miss Ruth Rouse, of London, European Secretary of the World's Student Christian Federation; Miss Clarissa H. Spencer, of the Young Women's Christian Association in North America, Mr. E. E. Olcott, President of the Hudson River Day Line, a prominent New York layman of the Reformed Church, his wife and daughter, and others of well known names, twenty-four in all, all bound for Panama.

What talks we have together! Morning, afternoon and evening we sit on deck and talk little else than the big, deep things of the Kingdom of God. Putting all the books of the Panama contingent together we have a rich library on Latin America, and everybody is reading widely on the subjects which will engage us for the ten days of our conference on the Isthmus. Besides our library we have on board the proof sheets of the reports of the eight Commissions which are to form the basis of the discussions at Panama. Any morning at eleven o'clock you may find a group of nine of us surrounding Dr. Mott and Mr. Inman in a quiet corner of the smoking room—a room which on this trip is hardly used at all for the purpose for which it is named—going over these reports one at a time and formulating provisionally the questions which will appear on each day's agenda for discussion at the Congress. This morning, Monday, January 31, we went through the report of Commission VIII, which deals with the subject of Co-operation and Unity on the Latin American mission field. We Disciples of the little group—President Paul, Mr. Inman and myself—inwardly thank God a score of times for the evidences of a determined purpose on the part of these missionary leaders not only to turn the sharp edges of denominationalism in the co-operation of all religious bodies, but to bring about the good day when there will be one united evangelical Church of Christ in all mission lands.

I cannot trust myself to go further into the inspiring and revealing things that have come to me in these intimate personal councils, lest I be tempted too far afield for the limits of a single letter. It must suffice to say that the passion for the unity of God's people which I share with all Disciples of Christ is confirmed and mightily reinforced by the things I am hearing from others' lips.

Beside me at the table three times a day sits the Rt. Rev. Wm. C. Brown, Bishop of Virginia. I have found him a delightful companion. He spent twenty years in Brazil as a missionary, consummating his work there with a revised translation of the Bible into Portuguese. doing for that language what the American Standard version has done so admirably for us. The bishop talks very freely about the high and low church tension which is now endangering the unity of the Episcopal communion. He deeply deplores the introduction of what he calls the high church innovation, declaring that Episcopal history and ideals are being misrepresented to the Christian world by the claims of the high churchmen. He is thoroughly democratic, evangelical, and friendly; he and I have come to agree that if the problems were left to us to solve we would be able to achieve Christian unity before we leave this boat!

I must draw in the lines of my thought now as we are standing at anchor just outside the harbor of Kingston, Jamaica, whose beautiful port we are soon to enter. I think we are to spend several hours here, the only stop on our voyage. A wireless from our Disciples' missionary, Rev. J. E. Randall, says plans for our entertainment have been made, and a message from the Archbishop of the West Indies, who resides here, invites us to send representatives to pay him a visit. It all sounds to me as if something is likely to happen during the next few hours to justify a promise that my next chapter will be devoted to the story of our call at Kingston.

Disciples Table Talk

"Men and Millions" Moving Toward Iowa.

The Des Moines' session of the national missionary campaign will be held in University Place church, February 20-23. The "Men and Millions Team" will be in Des Moines about the first of March to begin the Iowa campaign. They have been in Missouri for the past five or six months and will probably spend at least three months in Iowa.

Boy Scouts in Central Church, New York.

Troop 89, of the Manhattan Division of the Boy Scouts of America, has just been organized at Central church, New York, under the leadership of a local committee consisting of P. F. Jerome, A. R. Porterfield and F. H. Smith. The troop is composed of twenty boys of the church and neighborhood and is in charge of Scout Master Henry Fritz, and his assistant, Wm. G. Rapp. Finis Idleman, the pastor of this church, arranged for a special flag raising, on Sunday morning, February 13, at the church, to be participated in by the Scouts. A special song was sung in memory of Lincoln and Washington.

W. A. Shullenberger May Go to Central, Des Moines.

Central church, Des Moines, Ia., has extended an official call to W. A. Shullenberger, of Mexico, Mo., to become the pastor of the church and it is the hope of Central church leaders that his coming will prove a happy solution of the perplexing problem of securing a successor to Mr. Idleman. Mr. Shullenberger made a very favorable impression on the occasion of his recent visit and the record of his ministry at Mexico, Mo., is taken as an indication of what he may be able to do in the Des Moines church.

Lexington, Mo., Church is Making Records.

Richard W. Wallace, pastor at Lexington, Mo., has several forward steps in the work there to report. One is that the pastor now has his study downtown in a local bank building. Another is that the every member canvass has recently been made with success. Then a "Brotherhood Bible Class" has been organized. A revival meeting is being planned for this year under the leadership of W. N. Briney, of Louisville. Mr. Briney is a warm friend of the pastor, having at various times held nine meetings for him. A young men's club is a fine feature in the Lexington church, also a Ladies' Guild. At a recent Sunday evening service Mr. Wallace preached on "The Impulsive Scribe, or Spiritual Preparedness."

Special Sermons on Famous Paintings.

Lin D. Cartright, pastor at Ft. Collins, Colo., preached a series of Sunday evening sermons on "Messages from Famous Paintings." Each of the sermons was illustrated by a large print of the painting exhibited from the platform. Paintings and sermons for the various evenings were: Hoffman's "Christ and the Rich Youth:" Sermon subject, "Christ's Challenge to the Spirit of Youth." Millet's "Angelus": Sermon subject, "Work and Worship." Holman Hunt's "Light of the World": Sermon subject, "Heaven's Overtures to the Cabined Soul." Watt's "Hope": Sermon subject, "Hope's Music in the Hour of Despair." Hoffman's "Christ in Gethsemane": Sermon subject, "Gethsemane, the Battleground of the Soul."

Eureka College Opens New Gymnasium With Feature Events.

The grand opening of the new Eureka College gymnasium took place the first week of February, and was attended by an entire week of special events, ending Friday night with three basket ball games. The gymnasium was finished the latter part of December, and makes an attractive addition to the college campus. The basketball floor proper is the largest in the conference. The building has all the improvements of a modern "gym," with a running track, swimming-pool, and a large stage off one side of the main floor for plays and concerts. President H. O. Pritchard, the Men and Millions Team, and the students and business men of Eureka are responsible for this large and practicable building. The opening was attended by great interest on the part of both students and the citizens of Eureka, large crowds filling the gymnasium every evening. The week of activities was opened Monday night with a drama, "The Young Mrs. Winthrop," presented by the "Constellation," the College Dramatic Club. The cast was well selected and did well, deserving high commendation. Tuesday night the Eureka College Band of twenty-one pieces, under the direction of H. O. Merry, made its first appearance this year. This is one of the most flourishing and representative organizations of the school. The concert was a success in every respect. Wednesday night was "all college night." The keynote address was made by President Pritchard. Thursday night a contest between the Periclesian, Athenian and Burke Literary Societies was held, the latter winning first prize. J. Wallace Bradley, of the college, kindly sends the report of this significant event in Eureka's history.

Paris, Ill., First, Banquets Two Hundred Men.

The men of First church, Paris, Ill., recently gave a banquet at which two hundred persons were seated. J. Boyd Jones, of Central church, Terre Haute, Ind., delivered the address. It was an unusually strong appeal, writes H. H. Peters, pastor, and was appreciated by the men of the church. Mr. Jones is making himself felt in the affairs of Terre Haute, and Paris people are glad to give such neighbors encouragement, writes Mr. Peters. The men's banquet of the Paris church will in all probability be one of the annual features. One was given by the men about three years ago with the opening of the ministry of the present pastor.

Broadway Church, Lexington, Gives Nearly $5,000 for Missions, Benevolence and Education.

Mark Collis has ministered to Broadway church, Lexington, Ky., for nearly a quarter-century, but the work there is still on the up grade. Last year $4,484.15 was raised in all departments for missions, benevolence and education; for expenses, payment on debt and interest, $13,537.50. The church starts off with a good surplus in its treasury for 1916. There were 72 additions during the year by letter, by confession and baptism, 56; otherwise, 5. A net gain of forty brought the present enrollment up to 1,378.

C. M. Smail Delivers Address Before Beaver Falls, Pa., Graduates.

A record audience of young people heard C. M. Smail, pastor at Beaver Falls, Pa., in his address before the mid-winter graduating class of the local high school. The topic treated was "The Signs of the Adamant Life." Mr. Smail's address was printed in full in the Beaver Falls' dailies. The following is a "sample" of the excellent advice given to the high school young people: "Your education should give you a view in six directions. Like a cube, life should have as many faces. The body, the machine with which we work should be well trained and cared for. The scientific desire should be cultivated in order to know the powers of the universe to be used. The study of history and sociology acquaints us with the development and organization of human society. Then by the artistic sense we dream dreams that come true chiseled on stone and painted on canvas. The lore of world literature brings to us the wisest thoughts of those who have poured out their lives as an oblation over the mysteries of life. Lastly and more important than the other five outlooks, is religion that looks to the heights whence cometh help, with eyes fixed on a star that draws us to the skies —light and power from above. We are to look up to God and out to our fellowmen. The same hands that adore the Father above are to lift the Brother below."

Brotherhood Organized at Monmouth, Ill.

A brotherhood has recently been organized in the church at Monmouth, Ill., starting off with a "pep meeting" late in January. Officers were elected and committees appointed. The organization will meet the first and third Thursday night of each month at the church. It is the intention of the organization to fit up one of the rooms in the basement of the church for a library and reading room to be kept open for the public and to which every man in Monmouth will be invited to visit and spend his evenings.

Ministerial Relief Reports Gains.

The Board of Ministerial Relief, Indianapolis, reports the addition of four names to its Pension Roll, making the number 135, of whom seventy-six are ministers, 50 widows and 9 missionaries. The January receipts amounted to $4,982.04, a gain of $1,757.27 over last January. Of this increase $748.82 came from the churches and $537.23 from the Bible-schools. The total receipts for the four months to February 1 are $11,204.06, a gain of $2,547.89 over the same period last year.

"Japanese Billy Sunday" Speaks in Christian Church of Japan.

W. D. Cunningham, of Yotsuya Mission, Japan, is authority for the report that Mr. Seimatsu Kimura, who was featured in a recent issue of the "Literary Digest" as "the Japanese Billy Sunday," spoke at the Second Church of Christ, in Yotsuya, recently. Mr. Cunningham pronounces the Japanese evangelist thoroughly in earnest. Mr. Kimura is a Congregationalist, and was baptized by R. A. Torrey, of Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, several years ago.

Frankfort, Ky., Pastor Has New Assistant.

The growth of Frankfort, Ky., church is indicated by the fact that it has been found necessary to give R. T. Nooe, the pastor, an assistant, who happens to be Mr. J. L. Alderson. The new worker spent two years in Johnson Bible College and two years in Hiram, having studied also at Canton, O. Mr. Nooe says of his new aid: "The work of Mr. Alderson is beginning very auspiciously. He has charge of our mission Bible-school, and preaches following the school every Sunday afternoon. He conducts a prayer-meeting in the community of the school and has organized a teacher training class. In our own congregation he makes pastoral calls, assists in the singing—he is a good leader and soloist—and is helping to build up the young men's class; he also conducts the "Missionary Journeys" in the Bible-school.

E. M. Waits Visits Chicago.

The Christian Century enjoyed a visit last week from E. M. Waits, pastor at Magnolia Avenue, Ft. Worth, Texas. Mr. Waits was in Chicago representing the Ft. Worth Medical College before the American Medical Association, which met in Chicago, February 7. Mr. Waits was also asked to represent the brotherhood on the program of the Laymen's Missionary Movement at the Memphis, Little Rock and Oklahoma City Conventions. The Ft. Worth pastor has become known throughout his state and in other states as a past master in the science of religious education.

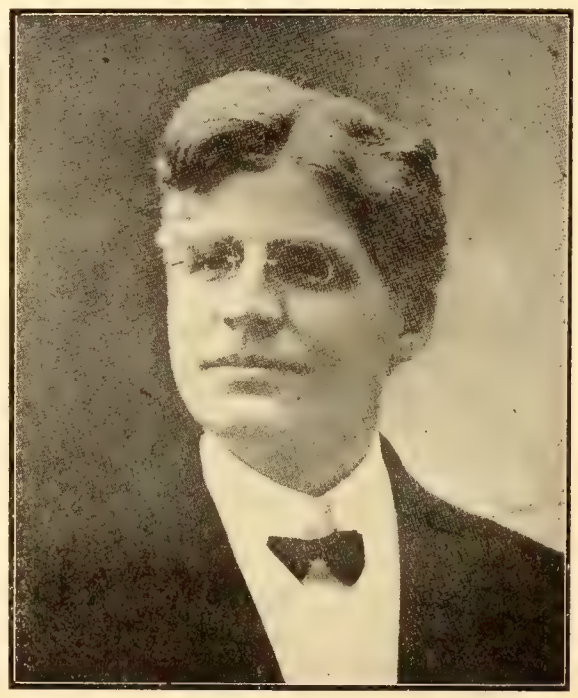
Methods Institute at Hastings, Neb.

Clarence E. Lemmon, pastor at Hastings, Neb., sends forth this word of announcement to Nebraska Disciples: "The School of Methods for Nebraska Bible-schools will be held at Hastings this year. The Hastings church will entertain as many delegates as possible on the Harvard plan, i.e. bed and breakfast free. It is probable that we will be able to entertain all delegates who come, but if not, entertainment will be provided at the lowest cost for those whom we will be unable to entertain. If you want to make sure of entertainment send in the registration fee of $1.00 in advance to the Secretary and reservation will be made for you. We hope to greet you and your delegates and will assure you of a cordial welcome at Hastings."

Pawnee City, Neb., Church Reaps Union Harvest.

The Christian church of Pawnee City, Neb., has been in a union meeting with the Henry and Van Camp evangelistic company. Gilbert W. Campbell, the Disciples' pastor, reports that, of the five churches his congregation will probably receive the largest number of accessions in proportion to membership. The Disciples received forty of the 212 cards signed and of these persons twenty-eight have already been baptized. The almost universal expression is that in every way this campaign during the month of January was the greatest in the history of southeastern Nebraska. Zero weather, bad roads and grippe were necessary to make the attendance fit the size of the tabernacle, writes Mr. Campbell. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry is said to be one of the most effective evangelists of today, while Jesse Van Camp is praised for superior ability in solo and chorus work. Without a single conversion the Pawnee City pastor believes this campaign would have been fully justified by its far-reaching results.

Bloomington, Ill., First Church, Cultivating the Community's Young People.



Edgar D. Jones, pastor at First church, Bloomington, Ill., is preaching this month, on Sunday evenings, a series of "Straightforward Sermons" to Bloomington young people. The following are the topics being treated in this attractive series: "Youth's Castles in Spain," a defense of dreamers. "Self-Reverence, Self-Knowledge, Self-Control," a charge to those who would overcome the world. "When Knighthood Was in Flower,' an appeal to chivalry in young men. "To Have and to Hold," in behalf of the sanctity of the marriage vow.

Missionary Rallies in Texas.

The following is the schedule of dates for the missionary rallies in Texas: Texarkana, Thursday, Feb. 17. Longview, Friday, Feb. 18. Temple, Tuesday, Feb. 22. Brownwood Wednesday, Feb. 23. Waco, Thursday, Feb. 24. Dallas, Monday, Feb. 28. Waxahachie, Tuesday, Feb. 29. Fort Worth, Wednesday, March 1. McKinney, Thursday, March 2. Wichita Falls, Monday, March 6. W. N. Briney, Louisville Pastor Conducts Interesting Questionnaire

W. N. Briney, pastor at Broadway church, Louisville, recently preached a sermon that inspired a half-column editorial in the Louisville Herald, and elicited the interest of the entire city, especially of Louisville's business men. Mr. Briney's topic was "Is Deception in Business Necessary?" Mr. Briney sent out a questionnaire to the city's men of business and reported as a part of the sermon his findings from the answers sent in. Mr. Briney said:

Rev. W. N. Briney.

"I recently requested some of the active business men of Louisville to answer the question, 'Is there any feeling on the part of business men generally that under present conditions it is necessary to practice deception in any degree in order to succeed in business?' These are some of the answers: 'There probably will always be a percentage of men in business who are badly equipped, and who think they can supplement their efficiency by deception.' 'I believe that nearly everybody practices to some extent certain kinds of deception. I believe this includes business men, professional men and preachers.' 'There are still a good many business men who practice deception through lack of frankness and by concealment of facts. Few good business men misrepresent facts.' 'I believe that there is a feeling that is comparatively general on the part of business men that some deception in the conduct of their business should be allowable, and is permissible.' 'There is much deception that is obnoxious or sinful. But to tell the whole truth at all times, on all occasions, would break up any congregation, disrupt any society, and bankrupt any business.'

"I received seventy-two answers to this question. Thirty-one of the writers answered 'No,' eight of these emphatically; thirty-seven answered 'No,' with certain modifications, and four answered 'Yes.' The most of the answers predict the speedy coming of the day when all misrepresentations and concealments will be eliminated altogether from the world of commerce; and the great majority of them declare that this condition already exists among the highest class of business men.

"To my question, 'Do you note any disposition on the part of business men to refrain from all unfair and deceptive practices in order to secure trade?' fifty-two answered squarely in the affirmative, and twenty gave a modified affirmative.

"Seventy representative business men of this city, in answer to another question, declare it to be their strong conviction that the policy of being truthful and fair in all business transactions will lead to greater and more permanent success than to depart in any degree from such a standard. Many of them use the words 'undoubtedly,' 'by all means,' 'absolutely,' 'emphatically,' 'unhesitatingly.' With but two exceptions the men to whom I wrote declare that the standards of business have been greatly raised within the last fifteen or twenty years."

Mr. Briney concluded his sermon with these strong words: "If the young business man would succeed, let him stand erect, and follow after the high ideal set before him in the life and character of the Man of Nazareth—the elements so mixed in him that a nature might stand up and say to all the world, 'This was a man.' It was he who gave the world the best business maxim of all the ages, 'Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even also unto them'."

Modesto, Cal., Pastor Preaches Special Series of Sermons.

J. H. McCartney, pastor at Modesto, Cal., is conducting his own evangelistic meetings, and is giving his people what he terms "A Modern Presentation of the Christian Religion" The sermon topics for last week were: "The Christian Conception of God." "Jesus in a Modern World." "The Holy Spirit in the Present Age." "Man's Place in the World Today." "A Modern Man's Use of the Bible." "The Place of the Church in the World." "Relation of Religion and Government." (The Best Method of Preparedness: or The Man Behind the Gun.)

Elkhart, Indiana, Church in Forward Moves.

On February 6, C. W. Cauble, State Secretary for Indiana, led the Elkhart, Ind., church in a money-raising effort to provide for a building fund indebtedness. Mr. Cauble, who is a master hand at this work, easily secured more than the needed amount in short term pledges. Since F. C. Lake assumed the pastorate of this church eighteen months ago about ninety have been added to the membership, and all at the regular services. John M. Alexander, of South Bend, Ind., will assist this church in a series of meetings commencing February 27.

Ravenna, O., Church is Praised by Local Newspaper.

The Ravenna, O., church, to which L. F. Drash ministers, has officially determined to proceed with the building of a new house of worship. At the close of the Sunday morning service, two weeks ago, the total of pledges and cash on hand aggregated $28,400, and it was decided to begin the work of removing the present structure. A local paper says of this project: "This means that before the close of the year this flourishing church will be housed in a new structure that will not only afford better accommodations for its large and growing membership, but will be a decided architectural improvement to structural Ravenna and will help remove the criticism made of the town because of its lack of modern church edifices. The committees have done swift and successful work and the people have responded no less quickly and willingly, showing a spirit of Christian unity and genuine enthusiasm that removes all suggestions of doubt or extreme difficulty attending the project. The prosperity of this church body has been little short of remarkable, and its latest enterprise gives gratifying assurance of continued expansion." The present building will be used for church purposes until the completion and dedication of the new one." Mr. Drash later reports that the work of removing the old building has already begun, and states also that the cost of the building, including complete equipment, will be about $43,000. The plant will be an up-to-date building, containing ample provision for a large and growing church and Bible-school.

Licking County, Ohio, Disciples "Get Together."

The Licking County, (Ohio), Union, which is the county organization of the churches of Christ in Licking County, held a quarterly meeting in Central church, Newark, Jan. 29. Eleven of the thirteen churches of the county were represented. The reports showed that 131 have been added to the churches of the county in the past four months. This meeting was held in connection with a Bible-school Institute conducted in Central church by State Superintendent Wilford H. McLain, assisted by Mrs. John S. Asbury of the Kentucky Bible School Association. A committee was appointed by the union to arrange for a series of Bible-school Institutes to reach all the churches of the county, to be held during the coming summer. W. D. Ward, pastor of Central church, Newark, is largely responsible for the aggressive work of the County Union, writes Secretary McLain.

Ft. Smith Church Divides City Into Districts.

J. D. Arnold's services at Ft. Smith, Ark., are duly appreciated by the congregation there. His salary has recently been increased $200.

There is a Real Difference

Cream of tartar, derived from grapes, is used in Royal Baking Powder because it is the best and most healthful ingredient known for the purpose.

Phosphate and alum, which are derived from mineral sources, are used in some baking powders, instead of cream of tartar, because they are cheaper.

If you have been induced to use baking powders made from alum or phosphate, use Royal Baking Powder instead. You will be pleased with the results and the difference in the quality of the food.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO.
New York

During the past year 148 persons were added to the membership. There are now 515 resident members. A total of $900 was given to missions and benevolence. The Bible-school attendance showed an increase of 23 per cent over the previous year. The Endeavor Society gave $75 for the missions, the Ladies' Aid Society $21. The latter organization also contributed $149.30 for current expenses. This society has been merged into the Women's Union. The city has been divided into four districts, and a division of the women's organization looks after each district. An every member canvass was recently carried through by twenty teams of men and an increase of 25 per cent in current expense pledges and over 250 per cent in mission pledges is reported. An evangelistic campaign has been inaugurated which is to culminate with Decision day at Easter time.

Kansas City Bible-school Exceeds Church Membership in Enrollment.

Ivanhoe Park church, Kansas City, Mo., has a membership made up for the most part of young people. One result of this fact is that the Bible-school is very strong; the enrollment is 500, although the church has a membership of only a little over 400. During the past year the attendance at Bible-school averaged 345 with an average offering of $13.26. There were 51 additions to the congregation. The church and its organizations gave to missions and benevolences the sum of $1,035.28, which was divided proportionately among all the agencies of the brotherhood. J. B. Hunley has served this church as pastor for four years.

News Notes From Central Church, New York.

Finis Idleman of Central Church, New York City, has had a new electric sign 5 ft. by 7 ft. in size placed in front of his church, calling attention to the services. It is visible from Central Park to Riverside Drive. High power nitrogen lamps have replaced the tungsten lamps in the Auditorium. Dr. Idleman believes in making use of modern inventions in his church work. The adult Bible-class taught by Dr. Idleman on Sunday mornings at 10 o'clock has an average attendance of forty. The Century Class, meeting on Tuesday evenings, at the West Side Y. M. C. A., is also taught by Dr. Idleman. The class is following the lessons: "Modern Messages from Ancient Teachers." Eighty-five men attended the first session and adopted the slogan, "100 men at every session." P. F. Jerome is Chairman of the class. A series of twelve Sunday evening evangelistic sermons entitled "The Way of Jesus" are being given by Dr. Idleman. The church is aiming to secure one hundred new members by Easter Sunday. An aggressive campaign is being promoted to enlist as members Disciples who have moved to New York from the West and South. It is estimated that there are nearly one thousand unattached Disciples living in New York City who have not transferred their church membership to a New York church. On a recent Sunday afternoon, at Central church, six adult Russians were baptized by John Johnson, pastor of the Russian Christian Congregation. The ancient mode of immersion is always used and this was followed by a celebration of the Lord's Supper.

Bible Schools Gain in Gifts to Home Missions.

The statement of receipts from the Bible-schools to the American Christian Missionary Society up to February 1 has just been issued. This statement covers the offerings for the first four months of this missionary year and makes most interesting reading. It shows a total of $28,852,81, a gain of $6,255.40 over the same period of last year. It should be remembered that last year's offerings were very much below par, writes Secretary Hopkins. When the report is compared with that of two years ago it shows a gain of but $44.08. The schools are just about equaling the progress of 1913-1914 when the total receipts were $39,035.37. Ohio, Kentucky, Missouri, Kansas, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Texas and Iowa report good gains. Colorado, Illinois, Arizona and Vermont report the most serious losses. Mr. Hopkins adds to his report the following appeal: "The American Society needs $50,000 from the Bible-schools this year to care for the work already in hand and provide for last year's deficit. A dollar less means retreat to the forces. Hundreds of schools have overlooked this offering in the rush of duties. Many have the offerings in whole or in part in their treasury. Your co-operation in securing all these offerings will be greatly appreciated. The victory may depend on you."

Preparing for the Des Moines Convention.

A general meeting of the members of all the committees to prepare for the national convention, to be held in Des Moines, in October, was held at the Capitol Hill church, February 11. National President W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City and Graham Frank, corresponding secretary of Liberty, Mo., were present and gave addresses. The ladies of the Capitol Hill church served dinner. President Hill M. Bell is chairman of the Des Moines executive committee.

Big Union Meeting in Des Moines Closes.

The Minges Union Tabernacle meeting at Highland Park church, Des Moines, closed with 350 persons won for Christ, one-half of whom come to the Disciples. Thirteen thousand dollars was raised for the new church, which will be erected on the lot where the tabernacle stands, just adjoining the present building, a part of which will be used.

Lexington, Mo., School Institutes Changes in Program.

R. W. Wallace, pastor at Lexington, Mo., reports that, beginning January 23, the program of the Sunday morning services at Lexington was rearranged. Under the present schedule the Bible-school begins promptly at 10 a. m. The school as a whole assembles only for the opening service. At this service the report of the secretary is read for the preceding Sunday. By 10:20 the classes go in order to their places, and the study period continues until a few minutes before eleven o'clock, when the second bell rings, which will be the signal for the classes to dismiss, and those who remain for the morning church service go immediately to their places in the auditorium of the church. It is hoped that this arrangement may result in an increased attendance at both the Bible-school and church services.

Church Increases Membership One Hundred Per Cent.

Warwood, W. Va., is a small town, and has no regular pastor, being ministered to by A. P. Finley, a student in Bethany College. But during the past year the membership of the congregation has increased 100 per cent; the Bible-school has gone one better, with a 101 per cent increase. That the Warwood people have twentieth century vision is indicated by the fact that ample provision has been made for the Bible-school, the basement of the church building having been thoroughly equipped for this work. It is the plan of the leaders to have their own pastor by June of this year.

Hannibal's "Champion" Bible-school Attendant.

Hannibal Mo., First church school is still proud of having in its ranks a man who has perhaps the best record for Bible-school attendance in the entire Bible-school world. This man is J. W. Mounce, 79 years of age, who has attended Bible-school for the past 63 years, only missing 19 Sundays during that time, 16 of which he attended school in other places and the other 3 of which he was unavoidably absent because of the illness of himself or family.

Indiana Village Church Asks Financial Aid.

The church at Hobart, Ind., of which W. A. Howard is the minister, is making an effort to build a church. The congregation is two years old. It has been holding services in an old church building which has now proved inadequate. There were forty-three members at the organization. Now there are 160. Hobart is a town of 3,500, with only one other English-speaking church. It is thirty-five miles from Chicago in the Gary rigion. The church is willing to do all and more than it is able. Help is needed from outside. Offerings may be sent to O. Amlong, treasurer.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—It was stated in a recent issue of this paper that Traverce Harrison had received a call to a Detroit church. This statement was in error.

L. J. Marshall, of Wabash Avenue, Kansas City, Mo., occupied the pulpit at Liberty, Mo., on February 13. The morning sermon was the annual C. W. B. M. sermon.

—One of the best rural churches in Boone County, Ind., is that of the Christian congregation at Thorntown, which is nearing completion. The church will cost about $25,000.

—Mark Wayne Williams, pastor at St. James St., Boston, is preaching a series of Sunday morning sermons on the following topics; "Books of the Bible," "Beginnings," "Outgoers." Recent evening sermons were on "Christian Union," "Sin of Sectarianism," "Roman Catholicism."

—The East Lynn church, Anderson, Ind., with a congregation of 300 members, has lifted an indebtedness on its building. During two years a total of $9,000 has been raised for this purpose. Harper McCune is the 24 year old pastor at East Lynn.

—W. E. M. Hackleman read a paper recently before the Ministerial Association of South Bend, Indiana, on "The Universal Hymnody of the Church," which was well received. A large number of evangelists and singers, besides the local ministers, were present. The city-wide evangelistic campaign in which about thirty churches participated resulted in great good. Union meetings were held each Lord's Day afternoon. Fred B. Smith and A. J. ("Dad") Elliott were the speakers, while Fred. Butler and Mr. Hackleman conducted the music.

—The sermons of Frank Waller Allen on "The Religion of a Modern Man," are to be published in book form. An introduction will be written by Vachel Lindsey.

—Burris A. Jenkins, of Linwood Boulevard, Kansas City, Mo., recently debated with a Congregational pastor of the city on the subject of "Preparedness." The debate was held at a luncheon given by the Co-operative Club, at the Hotel Biltmore.

—Central church, Peoria, Ill., H. E. Sala, pastor, is aranging for a hundred day campaign for the dedication of the new church, which will be completed about June 1.

—The installation of Joseph A. Serena as President of William Woods College, will occur at Fulton, Mo., Thursday, February 24. Many prominent educators have signified their intention of attending. The new gymnasium and natatorium will be formally opened that day.

—Clarence L. Depew has closed his work as superintendent of Bible-school work for the Illinois Christian Missionary Society. Mr. Depew began his work for the Illinois society in 1907, having distinguished himself by work as superintendent of the great school at Jacksonville, his home city.

—W. R. Houghton, pastor of the What Cheer, Ia., church, has resigned that work and after May 1 will return to Indiana to do literary work. Prof. Houghton is the author of several books, among these being the following: "A Conspectus of the History of the Political Parties in the United States," "A History of American Politics by Congresses," "History of the Parliament of Religions," "Life of Blaine," "Life of Logan," and "The History of the Republican Party."

—The school at Memphis, Tex., is laying the ground work for a Bible-school campaign with the "Every-One-Win-One" idea as a basis. It is hoped to bring about a revival with the effort necessary to conduct this campaign. Samuel H. Austin is the pastor.

—The Men's Bible-class of the Moline, Ill., Bible-school, has inaugurated Monday night prayer-meetings in the homes of the members. A splendid interest has been shown and fine fellowship, resulting in a wider acquaintance and better class spirit.

—The Cedar Rapids, Ia., public schools are to give credit for Bible study done by the pupils in First Christian church school.

—Omaha, Neb., Bible-school is mothering a number of smaller schools, the latest of which is at Waterloo, organized the early part of January.

—A fine men's Bible-class of over a hundred members has been organized in the Norwood, O., school, over which C. R. Stauffer presides.

—First church, Fresno, Cal., where H. O. Breeden ministers, is happy in the success attending the trial of the "unified service," as advocated by the School of Methods' team. This plan has increased the regular morning audience 25 per cent.

—J. G. Slayter, of the East Dallas, Tex., church, has the largest school in Texas, averaging over 600 last year.

—The work at Broadway church, Pueblo, Colo., has been halted by the recent burning of the building. There was almost a total loss, but little insurance being carried. Most of the members are laboring men. W. M. Lennox ministers to this church.

—R. A. Long was recently given a full page write-up in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Mrs. Long has donated a $3,000 pipe organ to the Columbus, Kan., church. Mr. Long gave more than $6,000 toward the construction of the Columbus church building.

—H. L. Willett has a series of studies running through the Biblical World, of Chicago, on "The Religion and Social Ideals of Israel.' Study Five appeared in the February issue.

—George L. Snively, dedicator of churches, has helped congregations over the country to raise $350,000 at dedications and other occasions.

—The January issue of the Christian Union Quarterly contained articles by C. C. Morrison on "Thomas Campbell, Pioneer of Christian Unity," and by T. W. Grafton on "Alexander Campbell and Christian Union."

—Shenandoah, Ia., church, W. S. Lowe, pastor, has reduced its indebtedness from several thousand dollars to $1,500.

—C. C. Cline, pioneer preacher and song writer, has been in charge of the Pine Bluff, Ark., church, for nearly twelve years.

—The church building at North Platte, Neb., was recently destroyed by fire. Loss, $4,500.

—An open forum has been inaugurated at First church, Louisville. At each Sunday night service the pastor, E. L. Powell, will answer questions asked from the floor or submitted in writing.

—First church, St. Joseph, Mo., of which C. M. Chilton is pastor, is planning to begin work on its new building this summer. It will cost between $80,000 to $100,000. This will not include the Bible-school annex which will be erected later. The auditorium of the new church will seat from 1,000 to 1,200 people.

—The "One-Win-One" plan of the Omaha, Neb., Ministerial Union to win 3,000 new members for the Omaha churches by Easter, was presented to the Omaha Church Federation at a banquet at First Christian church, February 14.

—J. H. Garrison has been appointed to represent the Disciples of Christ in the Laymen's Missionary Convention on the Pacific Coast.

—The most successful dedication, from the financial standpoint, ever held among North Carolina Disciples was at Kinston, when $36,500 was pledged to liquidate the debt on the new $50,000 building. Bernard P. Smith in a pastorate of over five years has led this church to victory.

—J. H. Goldner, pastor at Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, O., has been presented with an automobile by his congregation.

One of the men's classes of the church at Nickerson, Kan., has opened a down town reading room there for the benefit of people who need some place to go for rest and study.

—The Endeavor Society at Broadway church, Cleveland, the youngest society in South District, Cleveland, is challenging the other societies, having won the banner for the largest number present at four consecutive meetings, and still holding it.

—George L. Snively dedicated a new and modern church building at Ripley, Ind., recently, and raised more than four-fifths the cost of the building. Pastor C. C. Crawford, of Winamac, in this county, is largely responsible for this good move. He hopes to be able to establish a new church in the county each year.

—First church, Paducah, Ky., is planning to enlarge its building, also to purchase a new organ, and to repaint and redecorate. A rapidly growing Bible-school calls for more room.

—J. H. O. Smith has been holding a series of evangelistic meetings at Texas Christian University with splendid results.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES FROM EUREKA.

Dr. Royal J. Dye, who has been with the Men and Millions Team during their canvass in Missouri, visited his Alma Mater during the recent gymnasium opening week,, and attended the basket ball game.

The second semester of school opened with an increased enrollment.

W. H. Ford, who gave Lida's Wood, the Girls' Dormitory, to Eureka College, died recently.

Several of the alumni visited Eureka during "gym" opening week.

A short course in Agriculture and Household Science, under the direction of the University of Illinois, was held here during the week of February 7-11 inclusive.

The Eureka College Glee Club, under the direction of Professor Bredin, will make its annual trip during the week of February 21-26. The Girls' Glee Club will make a week's trip later in the spring.

The local Christian church conducted a successful Every Member Canvass on a recent Sunday afternoon, despite the fact that it rained all day and was very disagreeable. This was in their favor, though, as they found most everyone at home. This church has adopted the United Budget plan, and expect to try it out this year. The fiscal year ended with funds on hand.

REASONS FOR SUPPORTING OUR FOREIGN WORK JUST NOW

1. THE PIONEER SPIRIT.

We need the pioneer spirit to give strength and character, and save us from effeminacy and hopeless weakness. If we lose the daring pioneer spirit of Paul, of Luther, and of the Campbells, and of the Rogers, and of the Johnsons, and of scores of others of the fathers, our power in the churches will largely pass away.

2. GREAT TASK.

This is a big task. Men are looking for jobs worthy of their intellect and their ambitions. One measure of a man or an institution is the size of the work accomplished. I saw a man in a factory who stood in one place to label bottles all day. This was his task year in and year out. Such a job did not enlarge either his mental or moral worth. A man came to Cincinnati who had at one time held an important position in a worthy business in another city. He sold papers on the street corners. He seemed to grow smaller in mind and body. A man must have a big work if he would become a big man. A church cannot become a world power doing an insignificant task. It must do more than paint the house of worship, or put down a carpet, or buy coal, or pay the janitor, or pay off a church debt, if it would be really great and useful. The smallest church may throw itself into the program of God for the redemption of the world. A worthy program helps to make a strong church. A little job makes a little church; a big job makes a big church.

3. UNPARALLELED PROSPERITY.

Our country is wondrously prosperous. Our crops and farm products for the past year were the greatest in our history. The testimony of bankers is that never before was money so plentiful as now. Financial institutions cannot loan their surplus. All lines of trade are in a most prosperous condition. Our country now is the money center of the whole world. All the balance sheets of trade give the United States the first place. We are not only the youngest nation in the world, but the richest as well. Our manufacturing industries have passed the wildest dreams of the most optimistic. They are all working overtime. Nobody is idle that is able to work and wants to work. Prosperity is written in large letters all over the trade and commerce and industrial enterprise of whatever kind in our whole land. The gold of the world is flowing in a broad, deep, yellow stream into our coffers from every part of the globe. Gold bars are piled up in our vaults " cord-wood. For the first time the American dollar is the leading coin of the world. It dominates all others. It is king. When it speaks its voice is heard and respected around the world. We cannot plead poverty as a people. We cannot refuse to give and be guiltless.

4. THE AWFUL WAR.

These are solemn days. In concentration of national strain, in world-wide human suffering, in appalling demolition and utter destruction these days were never before paralleled. It is said that already thirty millions of men have been called to their colors in different nations. About eight million men have ether been killed or are now in hospitals. Cambridge and Oxford have sent five-sixths of their men to the front. In the German trenches are to be found forty-three thousand German students, and every student in Hungary is said to be under arms. Shall we not do our part in these awful solemn days for those at the front of the battle for Jesus Christ? The missionaries will be hopelessly discouraged during these months of death and carnage if we allow them to want for anything. The non-Christian world must hear some voice above the clatter of musketry and the roar of cannon, to convince it that Christianity has not entirely passed away from the face of the earth. The least we can do is to give our money.

5. CONSERVING WORK DONE.

Our people have expended through the Foreign Society more than six millions of dollars on the heathen fields in the past thirty-seven years, when we opened our first station at Harda, India. We have now more than a half million dollars invested in lands and buildings and equipment. Our missionaries have given years to acquiring the language of strange peoples; to the study of foreign literature, and to acquainting themselves with the non-Christian faiths of the world. Our location on the mission fields is the best. We possess a body of information of the fields that is of untold value. This information has cost years of patient toil, and many severe and exhausting trials. We can hardly estimate the difference in our responsibility and relation to the heathen world compared with thirty years ago. We have given too much of life and health for us to be indifferent or careless. The graves on the field and the plighted faith of the loyal workers mean too much in tender appeal for us to run up the white flag or turn our backs to the task. We must make the wisest and very best use of all our chapels and churches and schools and colleges and hospitals and orphanages and printing presses and mission homes. Our obligations were never so heavy before.

6. OUR PLEA.

How can we consistently make a plea for a New Testament church and be indifferent to missions? Can we be a Bible people and overlook or neglect the subject about which that Book speaks most clearly and definitely? Missions is the emphatic theme that threads the whole Old Testament and New Testament teaching. God's eternal purpose is therein revealed. The church which is not a missionary church is not a New Testament church. "Where the Book speaks, we speak," has been our special slogan for more than a century. Shall we not practice what we preach? Our voice calling the world to Christian union and to correctness on baptism, will prove very feeble and ineffective if it is not clear and strong in urging the evangelization of the world. Our earnestness and consistency will be questioned on the one if we ignore or neglect the other.

Now is the time to strike. Please swing your church into line. Order March Offering supplies today.

A Notable Success

The welcome that has been given by the leaders in the churches and Sunday schools to the little book just issued by the Disciples Publication Society:

"The Training of Church Members"

is evidence that this text has come to meet a very definite need in the churches.

The following are typical letters received from leaders concerning the book:

FROM REV. H. CLAY TRUSTY, Seventh Street Church, Indianapolis: "I have examined thoroughly the manual, "The Training of Church Members," and think it a very fine thing. We need to spend some time with young Christians on the fundamentals of our Christian religion and church life. This affords a splendid guide."

FROM REV. L. C. MOORE, Waterloo, Ia.: "This book is filling a long known need in our mid-week service. I am more than pleased with it. The attendance was doubled in four weeks by the use of the text."

FROM REV. IRVING BROWN, Sac City, Ia.: "I am much impressed with it. Shall introduce it either at the C. E. or mid-week prayer-meetings. We all need the training it supplies."

FROM REV. L. J. MARSHALL, Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo.:

"This is a timely piece of work. Its clear and simple presentations of the lessons to be taught should make it popular among Christian workers."

How You May Use "The Training of Church Members in Your Work

(1) As a book of study in your mid-week or Endeavor prayer-meeting.

(2) As a text-book in your young people's Sunday school classes.

(3) As a text for study in a special "Pastor's class" organized for training of young Christians and meeting either through the week or on Sunday.

(4) As a teacher-training course.

The New Year is at hand. Make it coun or something in genuine, substantialt training in religion.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Volume XXXIII FEBRUARY 24, 1916 Number 8

Conviction

IT IS NOT DIFFICULT TO BE EITHER PREJUDICED OR COMPLAISANT, BUT TO HAVE CONVICTION IS NOT SO EASY.

Most men have certain partisanships. Perhaps it is a certain predisposition to Republicanism. To such a man anything that savors of the Democracy is essentially wrong. To fling gibes at the hated party is a delightful and patriotic diversion.

Or it may be an antipathy to the Roman Catholic Church. This is a favorite form of emotional activity with many Protestants today. It is quite harmless, except that it is likely, by its excesses, to react in favor of the object of its vituperation, and rob itself of power to perceive the deeper dangers of that sectarianism of which Romanism is only one example.

There is also the prejudice of race, expressing itself in contempt toward the negro, or suspicion of the Japanese. Such aversions are usually bred of ignorance. The southern people, who have had most to do with the negro, have also been the most sympathetic, and active in efforts for his uplift. And the people who have known the Japanese at nearest range have most regard for them.

And the same is true of labor unions, business combinations, religious organizations and social groups. Against that of which little is known it is easy to cherish antipathy.

But if intolerance is an easily acquired emotion, still less does indifference demand effort. Prejudice founds itself only on a basis of something like character, even if it be narrow and perverted. But indifference may be the product of any poorest soil.

The prophets of Israel inveighed against the prejudices and intolerances of their time. But they only despised the men who were so characterless as to have no convictions of any sort.

The seers of Ahab's court were willing to predict any royal success so their patron was pleased. The prophets of Jehoiakim's day preached only the smooth and easy things which an indolent generation desired.

Elijah at Carmel upbraided the nation for its vacillating, wavering disposition. "Why," said he, "do you limp from one opinion to another, like the lame? If you wish Baal for a god, then follow him; but if Jehovah, then follow him."

The writer of the Apocalypse records the scathing and contemptuous characterization of the Laodiceans, that they were neither cold nor hot, but only lukewarm, and, therefore, worthless; and the picture of Pilate which the centuries will keep is of that helpless, futile act of washing his hands.

The inefficient through the centuries have been those who could not make up their minds. In the days of slavery they could not decide, and so missed alike the glory of a hopeless defense and the heroism of an inevitable victory.

In the struggle against the saloon they are mildly convinced of its evil effects, but are fired with no passion to assist in its overthrow. The social evil is doubtless a great public menace, but it has been here a long time, and it will be as well to take plenty of time, and to let some one else do the work!

And now in these days, when many voices are crying out for preparedness, it is probably best to give a mild and colorless approval to a movement that seems so popular, though one will regret to pay the additional taxes which will be needed!

And so without an honest conviction of any sort, such invertebrate followers of popular tendencies yield themselves to the current.

Of a different order are the men and women of conviction. They are not prejudiced, though usually those who have only prejudices pride themselves on their convictions. The line between the two can be drawn only by the aware.

For the basis of all true conviction is intelligence. One must pay the price of knowledge before he can claim to be convinced. Paul's confidence, which gave him steadfastness in the pursuit of his vast ambitions for the cause he loved, was the result of his intellectual persuasion of the truth of the Gospel.

The man of conviction is tolerant. With good temper he holds to his course, undiverted by opposition and undisturbed by maligning. One who is convinced does not lose his temper. It is only the person who is not quite sure of his ground who loses self-control, and reaches for intemperate words. Controversy, particularly religious controversy, is a great revealer of insecure foundations.

The man of conviction is persistent, fearless, confident. His capital is invested in an assured enterprise; he has no occasion for apprehension, save that he may not perform his full share of the needed work; he is poised and calm, knowing in what and whom he has trusted.

Ours is an age which needs a renewal of conviction. Men and women have many ideas and emotions, but few convictions. In the face of popular custom it is easy to surrender inherited and hitherto cherished sentiments.

Drink is slowly yielding to temperance sentiment throughout the republic. But drinking is a habit that finds social recognition in circles where once it was unthought of. What is to save the young man or woman from the danger which has never been overstated by any eloquence of Gough or Beecher? Only conviction can do it.

Purity of heart, reverence for womanhood, sympathy with suffering, kindness and courtesy, are not matters of superficial training, to be displayed in season and forgotten in emergencies, but are the flowers of conviction, whose planting is the work of gracious hands and whose ripening is the blessing of the spirit of God.

In morals and in religion alike noble lives are the result of firm conviction. There is no alchemy that can transmute leaden motives into golden conduct. Only the men and women of conviction are to be trusted with the education of children, the shaping of public policies, the direction of pastimes, the creation of standards of conduct and the leadership of religious movements. For only such are free from the prejudice that fears the light and the inertia that fears effort. They alone with freedom, loyalty and persistence, can see the direction in which God is moving, and can lead in the effort to get things out of his way.

Church Publicity

BY BYRON HESTER

TODAY is the day of the newspaper. The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table at last is silent, and now eagerly scans with whetted appetite the double barreled headlines of the morning's paper; for the American people, like Luke's Athenians of old, spend a large portion of their time "hearing and telling some new thing." At one time the Jews asked of the words that fell from the lips of Jesus, "What is this? a NEW teaching?" And there they struck the keynote: for that is what it was, a NEW teaching. The word "gospel" itself means the "good NEWS."

Though it is true that Jesus did not use a drop of printer's ink, it is likewise true that printer's ink has done a great service toward spreading the gospel. Though the Great Teacher left behind no written line—though while in the flesh he commanded of no man to pen a single word—yet he commissioned them, his followers, to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; and he endowed them with a power from on high which was to guide and direct them. And it was while under the guidance and direction of this Holy Spirit that, in order to preach the gospel to every creature, they saw fit to set it down in black and white. And that leads me to ask the reason why, and to attempt the answer.

"IN BLACK AND WHITE."

They set it down in black and white, in a sense, for the same reason that the printer sets up his type in the composing stick. They set it down in black and white, first, because in this way they could touch more lives. More people could read in the remote distances than could stand within the sound of the preacher's voice and hear. Let me illustrate this point:

On a certain day there are present to hear the inaugural address of the President of our great nation of people, relatively, but a few privileged persons; but the next morning the whole world reads it at the breakfast table and is blessed. Again, on Sunday morning Dr. Hillis of Brooklyn stands in his pulpit and makes his great confession. Monday morning it is the absorbing theme of discussion in the ministerial alliances throughout this broad land. All because of the newspaper.

The apostles set it down in black and white, also, because in this stereotyped form it is most lasting. Though Paul speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not his amanuenses, Luke and Tertius, with their quills and parchments, he is become next to nothing. That is, largely so. As far as those out of earshot are concerned. His tongue mingles with the dust of Rome but his writing remains forever, and is read far beyond the Spain of his hope. And for him there is—plus ultra!

"THE EYE GATE."

Then the apostles set it down in black and white because in this way it becomes more effective. That is, as far as instruction is concerned. Psychologists and authorities on pedagogy have assured us that near seventy-five per cent of our information reaches us through the retina of the eye. Those having ears are more deaf than those having eyes are blind. Our ears lag behind. Our eyes look ahead. Let this supposed conjugal dialog illustrate my point:

"John, how was the sermon this morning?"

"Fine! Fine!"

"What was it about?"

"Why, I don't know; but it was really inspiring. Something or other about Life, I think. I don't remember just what he said, but the effect was very impressive."

Compare with the following:

"John, did you read that sermon in the paper this morning by Pastor Russell?"

Rev. Byron Hester, of Pryor, Okla.

"Yes, I read it twice."

"What was it about?"

"The Second Chance. I'll get the paper and read it to you. And if you can't catch the drift of it in the first reading, I'll read it until we know it thoroughly. Where is that paper anyway?"

Even a Sunday's paper may have its redeeming features!

THE CHURCH PAPER.

Those who are regular subscribers for our church papers, in which they may read, re-read, and have ample time to ponder and ruminate over masterly sermons and editorials are admittedly our most earnest and consecrated churchgoers also.

However, the point that I have in mind does not have sole reference to church papers, but to the fact that a printed sermon has its great advantages. In truth, I have especial reference to the newspaper, because it has the largest patronage and constituency. Besides, the fact that a man is a subscriber for a church paper is per se evidence that his interest in the religious phase of life has already been captured. Whereas, many and diverse are the motives actuating the subscriber for the daily or the weekly newspaper. One man subscribes in order to keep posted on base ball news; another, in order to keep his hand on the pulse of the financial and commercial world; another, in order to keep track of the bargain counter; another, in order to keep up with the smart set; but most of us subscribe in order to keep up—to now!

Large salaries are paid men who merely write business "ads" for our daily papers. Not only is this an age of the newspaper, but it is also the age of advertising. The matter resolves itself into the question of the survival of the fittest, or of competition. Can we who are about our "Father's business," in the administration of his affairs, afford to advertise or not? That is the question. Will it pay? Is it true that the pen of organized Christianity is no match for the pen of organized business? Can we compete with the things of this world, and catch the casual eye of the worldling, to make it shine first with interest, next with longing? Is it possible for us to make what moth cannot corrupt more desirable than worldly goods? Are we fearful of crossing the Sword of the Spirit with the sword of materialism? Are we afraid to enter the arena of the newspaper columns where we must needs combat for our existence with antagonistic forces?

SHALL THE CHURCH ADVERTISE.

Does Coca-Cola surpass the Water of Life for refreshment? Of course I speak figuratively, but why not under the caption "Help Wanted," the Master's "The harvest is plenteous but the laborers are few" or "I am among you as one that serveth?" Why not in the "Lost" column the Savior's "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it," or Paul's "I count all things but loss for Christ?" Or in the "Real Estate" column why not a mention of that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, or Jesus' "I go to prepare a place for you. In my Father's house are many mansions!" Yes, why not place next that clothing "ad" a cut of the robe of righteousness? Why not set up in the galley with the millinery "ad" one that speaks for the crown of blessing? Why not place on the imposing stone opposite the jeweler's "ad" one that has to do with the pearl of great price or the ring of son-ship? In other words, why not advertise!

Because it is sensational, some one objects. When Jesus came to Jerusalem on a colt, and with all that following, doubtless some called him a sensationalist. And if not then, surely when he drove the money changers from the temple.

JOHN THE BAPTIST AN ADVERTISER?

Then, there was John the Baptist! I wonder if John's many peculiarities and his refusal to disclose his identity, when he called himself but a crying voice, didn't have something to do with the fact that all Jerusalem and Judea went out to hear him? Yes, for the sake of argument, grant it: even the element of curiosity might have entered in. Oh, but many are the men who before have come to scoff but remained to pray! I believe that it was Paul who had something to say about the "foolishness of preaching" which God had chosen in order to set at naught the world's wisdom. Would God choose the "foolishness" of publicity or of advertising today? Ah, my friends, is there any stone that he would have us leave unturned in order to save one soul!

I recently read that the first newspaper advertisement and the ancestor of the thousands of advertisements now daily appearing was that of a religious book, "The Divine Right of Church Government." The essential of both advertising and religion is faith; and the object of both is to create in hearts and minds a desire for what we do not possess.

A POINTER FROM CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

I was informed by reading an editorial in one of our leading church papers* that Christian Science manifests admirable shrewdness in guarding and practically shaping its reputation; that in a vantage city of each state of our nation it locates a press bureau with an official representative whose business it is to keep in touch with the various newspapers of the state, and correct any unintentional misstatements and reply to any misrepresenting aspersions which might tend to reflect upon the doctrine and practices of Christian Science. Clipping bureaus keep this man in touch with the situation. If his reply is not published, the editor is kindly notified and asked to correct his error. If his request is ignored the editor receives a courteous but insistent call. "The effect has been to cultivate an editorial considerateness toward Christian Science which is not manifested in the same degree toward any other religious body."

It was pointed out in this editorial that the possibilities of this system are interesting. Suppose the Disciples had showed such sagacity in the earlier days. Suppose that when the word "Campbellite" had slipped from the editor's pen he had received a courteous but insistent call! But the larger possibility of this system is this: that it is not only a means for replying to misrepresentations but it may be a means for constructive propaganda of our principle of Christian unity. The world would have understood us better had we utilized it before. Russellism is gaining its thousands of adherents through the newspaper columns which usually appear on the so-called "patent insides," the space paid for and the investment yielding large returns.

*The Christian Century.

POSSIBILITIES OF THE NEWSPAPER.

The world is ready for our plea of unity; but the world will not get it through reading the Christian Century, the Christian Evangelist, the Christian Standard, or even the Oklahoma Christian Voice; for the world does not subscribe for these papers. Practically all the subscribers for these church papers are church people, who have already manifested their interest in the plea for unity by subscribing for them. Members of other denominations have papers of their own which they must read. They haven't time to attend a Disciple church to hear "our plea." Much less, have they time, money, and inclination to subscribe for one of our papers in order to read "our plea." The battle must be fought out in the columns of the newspapers. The newspaper is the foreign field of the larger possibilities. The home field has already been worked. Let us move out and possess the land!

I know that we can't get all our sermons in the papers. But we should see to it that there is a publicity committee on each church board. A fund should be set aside for the purpose of church advertising. We should make friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness in order that we may receive them into the eternal tabernacles.

An outline of a sermon published, or a paragraph is often very telling.

"WAITING" AND ADVERTISING.

Proper advertising is not confined to announcements of church services alone. Sometimes a general standing invitation to come to the feast will not do; and we must go out into the highways and byways and bring them in by other means. It may be true that everything comes to him who waits; that is, provided he waits long enough. However, he might die a-waiting before it comes. When the invited guests didn't come to the waiting host, he sent after them. Friends, we must go after them! The day of the Mouse Trap poem is past. Yesterday it was true that,

"If a man can preach a better sermon,
Write a better book,
Or make a better mousetrap than his neighbor,
Though he build his home in the woods,
The world will make a beaten track to his door."

But today, unless he advertise—I repeat it: unless he advertise—if he build his house in the woods, even if he does preach a better sermon than his neighbor, the world may make a beaten track to his door ultimately, but it will arrive only in time to see his casket before the parlor window, and to present its floral wreath of victory to his descendants!

The Character of God

BY PERRY J. RICE

WHAT sort of a character has God? We are not now concerned with his attributes, such as are usually described by the words "omnipotent" and "omniscient," but with his moral character. Reverently let us ask the question, "Is God just, is he righteous, merciful, loving?" The question is a momentous one, for it involves, not alone the character of the divine, but the nature of our faith, and our own morals. One's conception of the character of God conditions his whole life. It is apparent to every one who thinks that the world has had many and varied conceptions of God. In a general way they may be classified as the pagan, the ancient Hebrew and the Christian. The pagan conception of Deity comprehends many gods, each concerned with the phenomena and processes of nature. For the most part they were wrathful, vindictive, revengeful and cruel, employing all the mighty forces of the universe to compel men into abject submission and surveillance. They visited with famine, pestilence and war all who did not yield quick and absolute obedience. Remembering this one cannot but have sympathy with Epicurus, who said: "There is no profanity in refusing to believe in the gods of the people, the profanity is in believing of the gods what the people believe of them."

THE HEBREW'S GOD.

The ancient Hebrew conception of God was better than the pagan. They conceived of God, not as many but as one, and this is the distinct contribution of the early prophets to religious thinking. But to them he was only a tribal God and other tribes and peoples had their gods as well. Moreover, he was distinctly a war God. Jehovah of Hosts was his name, and as such he seemed to them to have many of the qualities of the pagan gods. Their conception of him changed with the passing generations and centuries, ever reaching toward higher standards. Abraham was convinced that God did not care for human sacrifices. Later prophets understood that he desired obedience more than the fat of rams. And still later they preached the truth that he desired justice and mercy above all things. It is a long way from the conception of God disclosed in the books of Joshua and Judges to that disclosed in the books of Hosea and Isaiah.

AS TO THE OLD TESTAMENT.

This evident truth does not in any way disparage the worth of the Old Testament. It has always been our conviction that the Old Testament belonged to the star-lit age, and that its revelation was partial and incomplete. It is the record of a nation's unfolding vision and knowledge of God. There is nothing more destructive of the very purposes of the Scriptures than the method of placing every part on an exact level of revealing value with every other part. There is ample textual evidence that may be gathered out of the New Testament to support this contention. It is surprising, even disheartening, to find so many Christian people, followers of Christ, taking their conception of the character of God from pagan philosophers, Hebrew warriors and sages, and apocalyptic visions rather than from Christ whom they profess to reverence as God himself.

The Christian conception of God is drawn from Christ. John wrote: "No man hath seen God at any time. The only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." Christ therefore is the revealer of God. He declared: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." It follows, therefore, that only those who have seen Christ, only those who have really discerned his character can claim to know the character of God. It is not easy to comprehend Christ in the full orbed beauty of his life and yet how wondrously simple is the revelation he has given us of the Father. As we look upon this marvelous life-picture of the Divine may we note some of its outstanding features. The God that Christ revealed is a God of power.

"He moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps on the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

The mighty works of Christ are reflections of the Divine mastery of the forces of the universe.

NOT A GOD OF CAPRICE.

But the God of Christ is also a God of law and order. He fashioned the laws of the universe and brought order

FANATICISM AND FOLLY

THERE are moments when one gets a peep into the morbid minds where the sinister powers of hate and ignorance hold sway.

A week ago a deliberate effort was made in this city to poison a company of more than a hundred distinguished men, ministers and laymen, who were gathered at a banquet at the University Club, to do honor to the newly-chosen archbishop of Chicago.

Most of these men were Roman Catholics, and it is supposed that the act was that of a fanatic obsessed with a rancorous hatred of religion in any form, and attempting at one blow to strike down a group which might be supposed to represent the most outstanding of religious institutions.

It reflects credit upon public opinion that thus far no one has even suggested that any Protestant, as such, was involved in the outrage. Not the most confirmed and incorrigible reader of the "Menace" could quite stoop to that infamy.

But there are forms of anarchy which can breed just such unsocial and criminal acts. Against them even education seems powerless. For it is evident that the skill of the chemist combined with the atavism of the degenerate in the devising of this crime.

The one bright spot on this field of depravity is the fact that not one of the intended victims suffered more than temporary indisposition. A tragedy of unthinkable character was averted by the narrowest margin of chance—or as one would prefer to say, by Providence.

PANAMA REPORTS

THOSE who have watched the public press for reports of the Panama Conference have found satisfaction in the regularity and frequency of these accounts, and the admirable manner in which they have conveyed the facts of that great meeting.

To those of us who know that Mr. Morrison is in full charge of that service, and that he made careful arrangements with the Associated Press before his departure, the adequacy of the work is no surprise, but not less a source of much satisfaction.

And now that his articles have begun to reach us through the pages of The Christian Century, we have a double means of insight into the important undertaking with which just now he is connected.

THE LUSITANIA EPISODE

IT SEEMS at last, after the long give and take of diplomatic exchange between our government and Germany, that the matter is left much as it was at the first.

The President demanded of the Kaiser's court the official repudiation of the atrocity, an apology, and full reparation. The latter has been promised, but the former has been reduced to the vanishing point in the correspondence.

Much indignation has been expressed on this side of the ocean over the dilatory and correspondence-school method of securing redress from Germany. And much humor has been launched at the note-writing procedure of the Washington government.

But it must be remembered that Mr. Wilson's position has been very difficult. He has full authority from the nation to uphold our dignity, but he has no mandate to proceed to extremes. More than this, the sober second voice of the country is all for the maintenance of friendly relations with Germany.

Nor is the asserted weakness of our military preparation the secret of this attitude. That is a very slight factor in either the governmental or the popular wish to keep out of that sort of trouble. In fact, the President's chief strength with the great mass of the American people is that he has thus far kept us out of war, either with Mexico or Europe. And he knows this, in spite of vehement affirmation to the contrary from press and platform.

Therefore, the inconclusive character of our diplomatic exchange with Germany over the Lusitania affair. We have made good our protest, even if we have not brought the Kaiser to the confessional. And Germany has "saved her face," even if she has been compelled to pay the immediate price.

But the long, costly price she has yet to pay in that court of final record, the judgment of mankind.

A DAY OF PRAYER

THERE is no country in the world where the student population is as large a proportion of the entire community as in America.

From almost every family in the land young people go to high-school, college or university.

The moral and religious welfare of this army of young people is a matter of urgent concern to the republic.

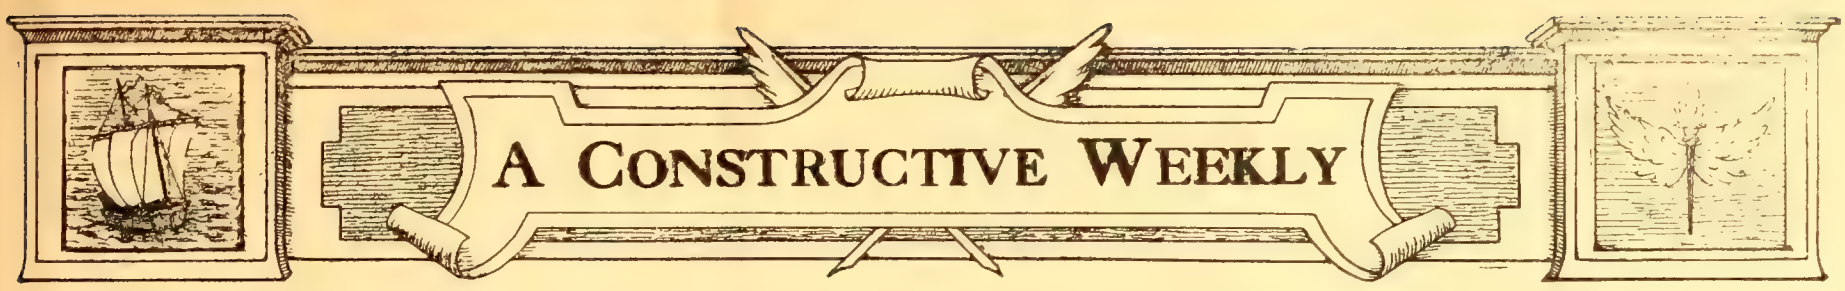
For this reason we are accustomed to observe some time at this season of the year a Sunday as a Day of Prayer for students.

February 27th is an appropriate day for this purpose, and is to be observed widely.

It would be well for all the churches to feature this interest in some manner. Reference can at least be made to so important a cause.

These young people will soon be the leaders in church, business, politics and social activity. A great body of interest, prayerful and solicitous in their behalf, would prove a mighty force in creating the proper atmosphere in which to work out their educational experience.

DANIEL COME TO JUDGMENT



IT happened in the office of a hotel in northern Wisconsin. The listener walked in and found a group of eight or ten men, sitting about in the attitude of profound attention while one of their number was reading the Bible aloud.

The singular character of this demonstration of interest in the Scriptures struck the listener at once. He could not remember having observed in many years a like company absorbed in such a subject in a public place like a hotel office.

A few moments of attention however made the situation clear. The reader, a traveling man, was apparently trying to convince his auditors that the leading events of the present European war are subjects of prophetic forecast.

The reading was from those later chapters of the Book of Daniel in which the wars between Syria and Egypt are described with such minute accuracy. The campaigns of "the king of the north" against "the king of the south" were read with explicit emphasis upon any phrases that seemed to have the slightest bearing upon current events.

From time to time the reader would pause and remark, "You see, that's the Kaiser," or, "That refers to England." It was evident that the auditors were impressed.

Those sections of the record which were incapable of being tortured into any modern values were passed over in silence. Apparently neither the reader nor his hearers noticed the frequent statements which were utterly and absurdly incapable of yielding to his theory. With calm and confident insistence he went straight through to the end of the chapter.

The listener could not help regretting that the time of that group of men, so strangely and appropriately gathered for purposes of Bible reading, could not have been spent upon some portion of the Scriptures which would have yielded real value for Christian faith.

If, for example, they could have spent that wasted hour, consumed as it was in the attempt to employ a childish and impossible view of Scripture, in the reading of the Sermon on the Mount, or the searching messages of Isaiah or Micah on the social sins of their age and every age, there would have been a permanent value in the exercise.

And why would not such a reading be as truly interesting to a group of traveling salesmen as those chapters of apocalypse with their crude and fanciful interpretation?

Truly it was a case of "Daniel come to judgment!"

THE PASTOR'S CLASS

WITHOUT any deliberate purpose to feature the Easter season as the particular time when it is appropriate to enter Christian service, it is becoming increasingly the practice of the churches to expect and prepare for Christian obedience at that time.

Even those churches that let it be understood that every Sunday is a time for invitation and baptism recognize the value of permitting the children who so desire to make Easter Sunday the time of their entrance into church relationship.

But in most churches it is recognized that the young people who take this step ought to be instructed in the duties and privileges of the Christian life. This instruction cannot very well be given in sufficiently personal manner in the regular services of the church, nor are Sunday-school teachers always prepared to give such instruction.

For this reason in an increasing number of churches the pastor conducts a class during the week preceding Easter. This class is composed of the children and young people who have recently come into the church, or are preparing to take this step.

The class may be conducted at the option of the minister or the group who make up its membership; but experience has shown that the best time for its meeting is during the regular hour of the Sunday-school.

The themes to be considered by such a class will naturally suggest themselves to any alert minister. A brief outline is prepared by the International Sunday School Association, and can be secured upon application. It has its values and its limitations. It is sufficient to say that among the themes that will demand successive treatment in the class are the Divine Father, Friendship with Jesus, Faith, Repentance, Confession, Baptism, The Meaning of Church Membership, the Lord's Supper, The Bible and Daily Life, The Practice of Prayer, The Value of Friendship in Enlisting Others, and the Christian Program of World Conversion.

Other themes will naturally occur to the leader. It need not be stated that there are abundant Scripture references and illustrations for each one of these topics.

We do not doubt that any minister who makes the experiment of conducting a class of this character will make it a part of his regular annual program thereafter.

FEDERAL CENSORSHIP

THE moving picture is an established feature of the present era. Its uses are manifold and its attraction almost universal.

At the same time its dangers are quite obvious. Nothing less than constant vigilance can preserve the public from the exploitation of vicious, brutal and obscene films. The opportunity to capitalize the morbid taste for the sensational is a constant incitement to producers of the questionable.

Admirable service is rendered by volunteer censor committees. And some effort has been made to standardize the work of censorship in a number of states.

It is obvious, however, that nothing less than federal control of moving picture films can accomplish the purpose. The same oversight which the government exercises in the case of printed material and mail matter is needed, and even more urgently needed in film-land.

No time should be lost in enacting national legislation covering this business.

ARMENIAN AND SYRIAN RELIEF

THE war in Europe with its ramifications through the Turkish empire has brought terrible suffering to great communities of Armenians and Syrians.

These are Christian communities. The Armenians are among the oldest of the oriental Christian bodies. The Syrians are also Christians of a slightly different type.

The atrocities of Turkish misrule have always been hard to bear. Now that war has released the most vicious elements of Turkish and Kurdish cruelty, no limit is set to the violence done. Whole communities of these unhappy people have been wiped out. So far as the Armenians are concerned, it seems to be part of the deliberate policy of the Turks to exterminate them.

The sufferings of these unhappy people are indescribable. The only assistance America can render just at present is that of generous contributions to relieve the worst of these sufferings.

The various relief committees formed for this purpose are entirely trustworthy. The one in Chicago has for its chairman Mr. Rufus C. Dawes, Harris Trust Building, and for its treasurer Mr. Harry A. Wheeler, Union Trust Co. These gentlemen are so widely known as to be a guarantee of the wise expenditure of every dollar received.

This is the moment of opportunity for human sympathy for these persecuted oriental Christians.

QUAKERS IN THE WAR

MEMBERS of the Society of Friends have invariably maintained the attitude of protest against war, and of non-participation in all war-like activities.

In the present struggle in Europe, which has involved England in a life and death conflict, the Friends have been placed in the difficult situation either of maintaining their religious convictions at the expense of their patriotism, or of abandoning their historic attitude.

They have cut the Gordian knot by promoting as far as possible the splendid work of the Red Cross organization. Large numbers of them are in the field in hospital and ambulance service, and those at home have generously contributed to all relief work.

The Visitor

Our Call at Kingston

I THOUGHT when we went ashore at Kingston, the capital of Jamaica, that something interesting to Christian Century readers would surely be awaiting us. It proved to be even more interesting than I had fancied. We landed at a little before four in the afternoon and were met by a group of missionaries, including Rev. G. D. Purdy and Rev. J. E. Randall, of the Disciples' mission, and a young mulatto, the secretary of the Anglican Archbishop of the West Indies, who had come to convey the greetings of His Grace to the contingent of missionaries on our boat. It had been arranged that a group of seven of us should accept the archbishop's invitation to pay a visit to his residence. We were conveyed through the main streets of this city of 60,000 people, past shops and markets and government buildings, out into the residence section where in a sequestered and sheltered house named "The Lodge," the archbishop lives. Jamaican houses open out on two and three and often four sides, with doors twice the width of our doors. These doors were standing wide open, as the day time custom is in this continuous summer climate, and gave the impression that the line of distinction between outdoors and indoors was quite lost. On the plain, wide veranda were gathered a large company of clergymen representing not the Church of England alone, but the Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Baptist and other evangelical communions of the city.

We were met with quiet, almost solemn dignity by this company of conventionally dressed ministers who stood in line to receive us. A young clergyman who we after learned was the Bishop Coadjutor, started us down the line of waiting hands, and when the introductions were completed we were invited to enter a large plain room which had been provided with perhaps two score chairs in expectation of our coming. Just before we seated ourselves the archbishop himself appeared at the end of the room and we were one by one presented to him. He is a very elderly man, and it had been explained to us by his secretary that he had been in ill health for the past year, a condition which is the occasion of much solicitude by his people. He greeted us with a friendly word, and without taking time for ceremony announced that we would do well to get at once to the little program it had been deemed advisable to carry out. Whereupon he asked a Wesleyan clergyman to read a scripture lesson and his coadjutor to offer prayer.

This done, the archbishop delivered, without rising from his chair, an address of welcome and greeting which made a deep impression upon us all. He had followed the preparations for the Congress at Panama, he said, with the deepest interest. For many years it had been his weekly and often his daily prayer that some adequate effort might be put forth by the evangelical Christian Church for the evangelization of Latin America. He looked upon this forthcoming Congress at Panama as an answer to these prayers, an answer that has come not one day too soon. Upon the agitation which the Congress has caused in his own communion in America His Grace commented with much feeling. He was not able to understand how his fellow churchmen of the States could find it in their hearts to oppose a movement so manifestly guided by the Spirit of God. Surely, he said, those men have not taken the trouble to read the official statements of the purposes of the gathering or they would be constrained to bid it Godspeed, for he could not doubt that their hearts were in the right place. He could talk at great length upon this aspect of the situation, he continued, in tones of especial candor, but he would probably do more harm than good by so doing. He wished only to give expression to the sincere hope that the Roman church in Latin America would itself feel the stimulating effect of the evangelical advance in missionary activity and purify itself and greatly quicken its own activity. He could hope that one result of the Panama Congress might be that the Roman church in Latin America would take on a character at least as admirable as it manifests in Jamaica.

Dr. Mott responded for the visitors. He reviewed the circumstances attending the origin of the Congress, recalled the reasons why Latin America was omitted from the purview of the Edinburgh conference, but showed that even at that time plans were conceived for the holding of the present Congress. He spoke with feeling of the attitude expressed by the archbishop's words whose significance he said was reinforced by the great respect in which His Grace was regarded by the Christian forces not only of the West Indies, but in America and England as well. What results, Dr. Mott inquired, might reasonably be expected to follow the gathering at Panama? To this question he spoke with that analytic and far-sighted vision characteristic of everything he says. He mentioned among the probable results the development of adequate plans for covering the whole field of missionary opportunity, the discovery of a really scientific method, the formulation of a truer strategy, the awakening of a deeper sense of unity among the evangelical churches,—the kind of unity which the Bishop of Oxford characterized as "an atmosphere in which men come to loathe to differ and determine to understand,"—and from such a gathering at such a time as this when the warring nations are dealing so intensely with reality there should be brought home to the Christian consciousness a far more profound sense of reality in the things of the Kingdom of God than we have ever known.

A benediction was pronounced by the archbishop, and we stood around visiting with one another with teacups in our hands until Mr. Randall subtracted the Disciple members from the company to be whirled away in an automobile to the shaded lawn of the Duke Street Church of the Disciples, where a company of our own ecclesiastical kith and kin were waiting to receive us. I was not prepared to find so well appointed and adequate a mission station as that which met our eyes. The building is a memorial to Mrs. Helen E. Moses, late president of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. It is a very satisfactory building and located in the downtown district where it can command the attention of the city. Mr. Randall told me that he preaches to something like three hundred people every Sunday night. The morning congregation is not quite so large, but is substantial and growing. A Sunday-school of one hundred and fifty in attendance receives instructions according to the best methods of religious education which Mr. Randall has diligently mastered. I stood in his pulpit and asked him how his congregation divided itself proportionally as between colored and whites. "Why," he said, "they are all colored except a handful that occupies this amen corner here." In a population of over 800,000 in the entire island there are only about 15,000 white people. Probably the colored man in Jamaica is farther advanced in civilization than in any other portion of the world. But even so the moral needs of the people are very great. Mr. and Mrs. Purdy took us in their automobile to visit the King's Gate church, a second mission of ours, lying just outside the city limits and practically across the street from the residence of the governor of the island. The building again was a surprise in the fullness of its appointments as well as in size. At this mission the attendance runs often as high as 250 people. The members come from a distance of a mile and a half and farther. They do not come in automobiles either, nor carriages, but walk all the way. This is not considered an uncomfortably long distance to walk to church.

Work was begun by Disciples in Jamaica over forty years ago. The first missionary sent by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions after its organization in 1874, was Mr. W. L. Williams, who was appointed to Kingston. There are now twenty-five mission stations in the island. manned by three or four missionaries from the United States and a corps of eight native trained ministers. The Disciples count about four thousand members. Our relation to the religious problem of Jamaica may be inferred from the relative standing of other religious bodies. The Church of England membership is about 200,000. Baptists come next with nearly 100,000 members. Then follow Wesleyan and Presbyterian with something over 20,000 each. The Roman Catholics in the island are an inconsiderable quantity taken in comparison to their strength in other portions of these tropical countries. They number about 21,000. It will be seen from these figures that religiously Jamaica does not belong to the Latin American classification. And as a matter of fact the traces of early Spanish influences have long since been obliterated in the social life of the people. English is the only language spoken on the island —such English as it is.

I am impressed with the possibility of this beautiful island for a social illustration of the Christian gospel. I very seriously doubt that merely conducting churches on the conventional lines is making any such headway in building a civilization as our Master has a right to expect his militant church to make. We have been talking of it on the boat since leaving Kingston and I think we are all agreed that one of the greatest things the C. W. B. M. could do in all the range and sweep of its world-wide work would be to establish in Jamaica on a generous foundation, a school somewhat after the fashion of Tuskegee or Hampton Institute. There is no such school on the island. Indeed, there is no educational institution at all of college rank on the island. The older individualistic and formal methods of presenting the Christian gospel are not, it seems plain to me, adequate for a society like this. The problem is social. The people are the product of mixed bloods. The social institutions lack stability and idealism. The great need of Jamaica is that there shall be formed for her those Christian institutions through which the higher life of the soul may be cultivated. I believe mission work in such a field as this would make ten times the gain, for the Kingdom of God, if it were projected on levels of social illustration, inspiration and education.

This opinion of mine does not reflect, however, upon the quality and dignity of the work being done by our missionaries and their co-workers. I consider this work of an unusually high grade and promising more abundant increase in the future than the past has shown. The fellowship of Mr. and Mrs. Randall and Mr. and Mrs. Purdy and a fine company of the members of the Duke Street congregation was very delightful. We returned to our boat at eight o'clock that evening to continue our voyage toward the Isthmus of Panama, expecting to land at Colon at the mouth of the Canal on Wednesday afternoon.

THE CITY OF GOD.

Thou art where'er the proud
  In humbleness melt down,
Where self itself yields up,
  Where martyrs win their crown,
Where faithful souls possess
  Themselves in perfect peace.
Where in life's common ways
  With cheerful feet we go,
Where in his steps we tread,
  Who trod the way of woe.
Where he is in the heart,
City of God, thou art.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance BY ORVIS F. JORDAN

METHODISTS SEEK UNITY.

"The conditions of salvation are the same in the north as in the south," declared Bishop Cranston recently in a Methodist meeting where the reunion of Methodism was discussed. The John Lindgren Foundation for Peace brought to Evanston, Ill., (the Mecca of Methodism in the middle west) on February 15 to 17 the most prominent white and negro leaders of the north and the south.

The "problems" considered in the conference were Property Holdings, Sectional Characteristics, Church Polity, Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Doctrine and Ritual, Church Discipline, and the Negro. The relative values of federation and union were discussed. Eloquent addresses were delivered on "The Dynamic of a United Methodism."

The men who came were not acting officially and they were the more free on that account.

President Harris, of Northwestern University, urged union for the effect it would have in allaying the evils of socialism in politics. He regarded the reduction of denominationalism as having an important bearing on the peace of the world.

Dr. Thomas Nicholson, Secretary of the Board of Education for the northern church, said that if union was not effected in three or four years, we might have to wait fifty years for it.

Mr. Hanford Crawford, a prominent layman of the northern church, St. Louis, insisted that the two sections differed in their characteristics, but he urged that unity did not mean that these characteristics would have to be changed. He regarded the negro question as the most difficult one to solve. The northern church has 352,000 colored members and are not willing to exclude these in order to accomplish union.

Bishop Cranston, of Washington, told of the failure of the federation board, of which he has been a member. The disputes on jurisdiction between north and south had become so numerous and so complicated that literally a thousand untouched cases were now on hand, and there was neither time nor money to go into them. Only union would solve these problems.

The conference talked to a definite proposal for union that had been prepared by a joint commission of the north and the south This plan provides that the negroes shall be unified in a separate denomination having only fraternal relations with the whites. The white church would be divided into four sectional conferences, north, south, east and west. These four general conferences would be welded into unity by another conference that would be the supreme power of Methodism. This plan is being attacked in important particulars and no speaker at the conference defended it as it now stands.

The southern church has no probation system, no specific rules on amusements, no rule against preachers using tobacco; it gives the bishop more power, holds to a time limit of four years for ministers and in other ways differs from the northern denomination. It does not allow women to be members of conferences as the northern church does.

The Rev. Charles M. Stuart, president of the Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, protested against the formation of a statement of common belief of the churches, on the ground that a statement accepted today by all present might not be acceptable one year hence.

In the closing address Bishop W. F. McDowell warned the members that while all was harmony among those present at the conference, the same harmony did not exist throughout the church, and a vigorous effort would have to be made to bring the churches together.

Resolutions calling for prayer by all Methodists throughout the world, and signed by the representatives of seven branches of the church, were unanimously adopted.

Among the great southern leaders in the conference were Bishop E. R. Hendrix, Kansas City; Bishop Collins Denny, Nashville; Rev. Asbury Christian, Richmond, and Rev. James W. Lee, St. Louis. The southern speakers were even more hearty and outspoken for union than the northerners.

Will Relieve Armenia.

The National Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief is making good headway with its work in relieving the suffering occasioned by Turkish outrages following the declaration of war. There are distributing organizations in Tiflis, Russia; in Tabriz, Persia; and in Port Said, Egypt. The missionaries in the various countries are largely used as distributors of the gifts of the American people.

Foreign Missions Make Gains.

There has been much improvement in the methods of gathering missionary statistics, and we are now in possession of very reliable figures relative to the work of the mission boards of North America the past year. These boards are 192 in number and together they had an income of almost nineteen millions of dollars. There are 10,497 missionaries and fifty-thousand native workers. These organizations have members in foreign lands totaling 1,175,000. There were added to the foreign churches last year about 120,000 converts. The gain of income over the previous year is ten per cent and the gain in ten years has been 87 per cent. This indicates how virile the American church is to support a work of such magnitude.

Union Project Fails.

Following the Billy Sunday meetings at Syracuse, N. Y., the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian churches in the village of Camillus, N. Y., became interested in the subject of union. It seemed for a time that such a union would be consummated, but ecclesiastical authorities gave the Methodist pastor, Rev. L. J. Barnard, his choice between dropping the project or being removed. He chose the latter alternative and the local church people became discouraged with attempting union in the face of outside opposition.

The Book World

A Department of Reviews and Literary Notes By HERBERT L. WILLETT

HELD TO ANSWER. By Peter Clark Macfarlane. When a few years since the Secretary of the Men's Brotherhood of the Disciples of Christ resigned his assured position and salary to devote himself to literary work it seemed an adventurous act. But he knew his powers better than some of his friends. He plunged at once into journalistic work, and began a series of reportorial contributions to some of the leading journals and magazines. Somewhat more than a year ago eight or ten of these human documents were published under the title, "Those Who Have Come Back." Now Mr. Macfarlane has formally entered the world of the novel with his story, "Held to Answer."

Those who know something of the author's varied experiences follow the earlier chapters of this book with pleased interest, finding themselves on the trail of the autobiographer. Nothing but the daily contact with the business of railroad rate-making and freight shipments could inform those chapters in which John Hampstead works up to the top in the railroad business. Then comes the section dealing with the actor period of his life, and the reader learns a great deal about the inner activities of a stock theater company. The work of the book agent also has a place in the life of the hero. But the real interest of the story gathers around the little church across the bay from San Francisco. And in all of these details Mr. Macfarlane's friends recognized the vivid description of the chief actor. And yet the book is in no sense an autobiography, for it is a story of moving heart interest, and its hero is a thoroughly human and wholly admirable man, a minister who holds to his convictions of duty through very stressful days. The minister's romance, the scheming of the beautiful and infatuated actress, the weakness and treachery of the young bank clerk, the hard dogmatism of the ruling elder, and the sweet sincerity of "the angel of the chair" are drawn with fidelity and convincing power. This book will greatly widen Mr. Macfarlane's circle of readers and friends. It will bring satisfaction to the Disciples, who like to see one of their own number winning his way in literature. We are glad to understand that Mr. Macfarlane is already at work on another volume. (Little, Brown & Co., New York. $1.35 net.)

ESSAYS, POLITICAL AND HISTORICAL. By Charlemagne Tower, LL.D. The author of this work has occupied positions of distinction in the diplomatic service of the United States. He has been Minister to Austria-Hungary, and Ambassador to Russia and to Germany. Such experiences give the most ample opportunities for the study of diplomatic problems. Yet it is rarely the case that men so placed have disclosed to the public very much of their knowledge regarding that fascinating and mysterious world in which they have lived. For this reason the present volume is exceptionally interesting, and one of its seven chapters, "Diplomacy as a Profession," tells exactly those things which the average citizen would like to know regarding the life of an ambassador at a foreign court, his daily duties, and the characteristics of the people whom he meets in his official capacity. Other interesting chapters deal with modern developments of international law, the European attitude toward the Monroe doctrine, arbitration, the Panama Canal, and two very informing biographical chapters on Lord Cornwallis in America and General Howe's campaigns in the revolution. THE MODERN STUDY OF LITERATURE. By Richard Green Moulton. Few men of our generation have done as much to make literature of all sorts a common possession as has Prof. Moulton. Perhaps he is best known to the average intelligent reader as the author of "The Literary Study of the Bible," and the editor of "The Modern Reader's Bible," that fascinating set of small volumes in which the different books of the Bible are printed in intelligible and convenient form. Yet Prof. Moulton's literary interest has been far wider than biblical literature. In fact, nothing less than universal literature has satisfied him. By this he has not meant the knowledge of all human writings, but such an interest in the masterpieces of all the writing nations as furnish a just appreciation of world literature. With this in view he began many years ago with two works on Shakespeare. Later he dealt with 'The Ancient Classical Drama.'' Then followed the period devoted to a literary interpretation of the Bible; and still later a work on "World Literature," as seen in perspective from the English point of view. The present volume of 500 pages presents, on the basis of all this previous work, a modern method for the study of literature. It is Prof. Moulton's central thesis that the study of literature labors under the handicap of departmental differentiation. It is largely bound up with the study of languages, and therefore is likely to be confined in such sections as Oriental, Greek, Latin, Romance, etc. But only as the student rises from these hampered and limited sections of literature to the higher unity of world writings has he a just appreciation of the greatness of the field or the majesty of its products. With fascinating references to illustrations from the masterpieces of many lands, Prof. Moulton discusses such themes as varieties of literature, the field and scope of literary study, literary evolution, literary criticism, literature as a mode of philosophy and as a mode of art, and the comparison of the traditional and the modern study of literature. (The University of Chicago Press. $2.50 net.)

CHRISTIAN SERVICE AND THE MODERN WORLD. By Charles S. Macfarland. The author is general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of America. The volume contains six addresses delivered before the theological students of Southwestern University, Georgetown, Texas, the Biblical Institute of Vanderbilt University, and the School of Theology at Fayette, Mo. The themes considered are, "The Great Physician and His Healing Ministry," "The Church and Modern Industry," "The Consolidation of Conscience," "The Federal Unity of the Churches a Social Obligation" and "The New Internationalism a Fundamental in Religious Education." The titles suggest the broad sweep of the volume. It is a timely utterance on absorbing questions of the hour. (Revell. 75 cents net.)

SAFEGUARDS FOR CITY YOUTH AT WORK AND AT PLAY. By Louise DeKoven Bowen. There are gathered in this volume eight intensely interesting studies of the conditions under which childhood is passed in the industrial regions of a great city. The book is an interesting example of the sort of concern felt by some women of culture and leisure who choose to give themselves with unreserved enthusiasm to the unrewarded but immensely important task of social redemption. The author has been closely connected with the work of the Juvenile Protective Association of this city, and has gathered into 250 pages an immense amount of informing material regarding civic protection in recreation, the legal protection offered to industrial classes of children, to delinquents and dependents, and the need of further protection. Here is a world of interest in the half submerged and struggling life of Chicago, illuminated by vivid sketches of actual experiences. There is a preface by Jane Addams (Macmillan. $1.50 net.)

"Held to Answer"

By Peter Clark Macfarlane.

This striking novel by Mr. Macfarlane has created a larger advance interest than any other novel ever put out by the publishers; and they have had to their credit some of the "best sellers" of the last few years. A slogan of "100,000 by Christmas" has been set as the selling slogan on this book for this year. The price of the book is $1.35, postpaid. Send your order in today and it will be filled at once. Lesson for March 12.

HEROES AND MARTYRS OF FAITH.

Golden Text: Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith. Hebrews 12:1, 2.

Lesson Hebrews 11:1-12:2.
Verses 11:1, 32-12:2 printed.
Memorize verses 12:1, 2.

11 (1) Now faith is assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen.

(32) And what shall I more say? for the time will fail me if I tell of Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephthah; of David and Samuel and the prophets: (33) who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, (34) quenched the power of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, from weakness were made strong, waxed mighty in war, turned to flight armies of aliens. (35) Women received their dead by a resurrection: and others were tortured, not accepting their deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection: (36) and others had trial of mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment: (37) they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, they were tempted, they were slain with the sword: they went about in sheep-skins, in goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, ill-treated (38) (of whom the world was not worthy), wandering in deserts and mountains and caves, and the holes of the earth. (39) And these all, having had witness borne to them through their faith, received not the promise, (40) God having provided some better thing concerning us, that apart from us they should not be made perfect.

12 (1) Therefore let us also, seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, (2) looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith, who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising shame, and hath sat down at the right hand of the throne of God.

FAITH AND LIFE.

By Asa McDaniel.

IN THE actual experiences of life every great enterprise begins with and takes its first step in faith. In a scientific age we are prone to give science the right of way and put faith in the background. At such a time it is reassuring to hear such a ripe scholar as Edwards say that, "all science rests on a basis of faith, for it assumes the permanence and uniformity of natural laws—a thing which can never be demonstrated."

Turgot once said: "What I admire in Columbus is not his having discovered a world, but his having gone to search for it on the faith of an opinion."

Faith marches at the head of the army of progress. It is found beside the most refined life, the freest government, the profoundest philosophy, the keenest science, the noblest poetry, the finest art, and the purest life.

FAITH NOT THOUGHT, BUT ACTION.

Faith is an action. It is never merely a thought, never merely a contemplation. It is not a look at the goal, it is a running to attain it, a striving for it.

People who have in mind some delightful thoughts about Jesus, do not necessarily have faith in him.

Unless the thought results in conforming our wills to his and shaping our conduct in real fashion after his we have not the Christian faith in our lives. We are recruiting that army of so-called Christian people whose stupid indifference to the welfare of the church makes them a positive hindrance to its progress in saving men.

This is not the kind of faith we read of in the lesson or that makes heroes in our modern life.

DAILY WALKING BY FAITH.

"We walk by faith and not by sight" is true in every field of human endeavor. When we lie down to sleep we close our eyes in faith that we shall open them again with the light of the new day.

If we have a faith like our Master, our life will be hopeful and expectant. It will have a growing spiritual emancipation. Our perception of God will be as clear and familiar as that of a friend. Our social affinities will be rare, acute, and fine. Our life will be as pure and wholesome as a fountain spring. It is not what men have done with the sword that counts in the true values of life, but what they have been able to do through faith.

We have divorced faith from the common experiences of life and in just so far we have taken the interest and significance out of it for our scientific age.

MODERN HEROES OF FAITH.

It would be a fine adventure for some gifted pen to write the names of modern heroes of faith in every field of life. It would, perhaps, take generations, and possibly centuries to clothe them with the sacred robes of the past or place the halo on their brow; but they would be none the less real benefactors of the race and hence modern heroes of faith.

A gleam of this light comes from the Youth's Companion when its scribe says:

"By faith Columbus, when he was called to God to discover a new world, went out, not knowing whither he went. By faith he sailed strange waters, with Cabot, Magellan, Vaspucius and Balboa, the heirs with him of the same promise. By faith Copernicus lifted the earth from its solid base and set it to moving in rhythmic order round the sun."

To these might be added multitudes of others who are just as worthy to be called children of faith.

The Character of God

By P. J. Rice.

out of chaos. He is not bound by law in the sense that he cannot but obey, but he does not trample them under his feet. He is not a God of caprice. Moreover he is a God of righteousness and justice. But his righteousness expresses itself in his long-suffering, patience and forbearance, rather than in cataclysmic vindictiveness. God does not send wars, famines and pestilences. We, by our ignorance, our selfishness and our stupidity bring them upon ourselves. Let us not impeach the character of God to save ourselves from blame.

The God of Christ is a loving God, not arbitrarily working upon us as inanimate things, but gently, though mightily, wooing us to himself, to a recognition of his benign purposes and laws of conduct until at last we shall come to live together in fraternity, in joyous fellowship and in peace. Oh, happy coming time when we shall behold God as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our Father, as one just and righteous, who expresses these great qualities by the gentleness of his majestic tread, and by the patience of his love.

This discussion is of practical value because our conception of the character of God conditions our lives. It conditions our worship and our praying. Those who have the pagan conception of God will worship him as pagans worshiped their gods, in fear and with offerings to appease their wrath. Those who have the Christian conception will come boldly to the throne of grace to find help in every time of need. Two examples of prayer, one drawn from the Old Testament and the other from the New will illustrate the difference between the prayers of those who think of God in the terms of the ancient Hebrews and those who think of him in the terms of Christ's revelation. One is the prayer of Samson who, feeling the weight of his woes, cried out: "O Lord, Jehovah, remember me I pray Thee, and strengthen me I pray Thee only this once, O God, that I may be at once avenged of the Philistines for my two eyes." That was the prayer of one who had never seen Christ and did not know the God whom he revealed. The other is the prayer of Stephen as he knelt in the presence of the frenzied mob gathered to beat out his life with stones, "And he cried with a loud voice: Lord lay not this sin to their charge."

Then too our conception of God conditions our thinking. Those who have the pagan conception will think of earthquakes, storms, floods, epidemics and wars as visitations of the divine wrath upon us. Those who have the Christian conception think of these phenomena of nature as uncontrolled forces, and remembering how many of these forces man has been able to control and harness as his servants we take courage and continue our efforts to subdue and utilize the forces that have destroyed us. The Christian thinks of war as an expression of undisciplined human nature and believes that when we come to understand better than we now do the will of God regarding human relations war will forever cease.

Our conception of God conditions our activities. Those who think of God in terms of the ancient Pagan philosophies, or of the ancient Hebrew sages and warriors will continue to engage in selfish pursuits, in brutal warfare to gain real or imaginary rights and will justify their course by an appeal to the idealism of the ancients. Those who have the Christian conception of God will give themselves to self-sacrificing service for the needy of all the earth. They will not supinely surrender, nor be indifferent when the strong oppress the weak, but with clear visions of duty will take mighty plunges into redeeming, uplifting enterprises. The Christian's God calls upon us not to kill and destroy but to love and serve.

Disciples Table Talk

Would Make Burris A. Jenkins Mayor of Kansas City.

Burris A. Jenkins, of Linwood Blvd. church, Kansas City, Mo., is being mentioned for mayor of his city. The following letter was sent by "A Citizen" to the Kansas City Star for publication: "To The Star: Whenever I go about town I hear men—Democrats, Republicans and nonpartisans—express the desire for a new deal in our city government. Particularly do they hope and pray that some candidate may be brought forward by some party or movement who can command the united support of all who are disheartened or disgusted by the kind of government we have been having. I heard Dr. Burris A. Jenkins in the wonderfully interesting debate with Dr. Frank G. Smith on preparedness before the Co-operative Club the other day, and again and again the thought came to me that he was exactly the man Kansas City should have for mayor. The church could spare him to advantage to both itself and the city for two years for such service as he could render. Things have gone so far that he is just the type of man to set them right. He ought to be drafted, and if drafted, I believe would not refuse to serve."

Death of Dr. James Butchart at Nankin, China.

Word has just been received at the office of the Foreign Society of the death of Dr. James Butchart, a missionary of the Foreign Society, at Nanking, China, probably February 15. F. M. Rains writes of this sad event: "This is a sad message indeed! He has served long and well. He was appointed June 21, 1890, and reached China in 1891. He served China for a quarter of a century, in a period of wonderful events. Dr. Butchart's chief work has been done at Luchowfu, where he built up a great hospital. The splendid plant will stand as an enduring monument to his enterprise and industry and wisdom. A good man has gone. Just a few months ago the sad news of the departure of F. E. Meigs reached us. Dr. Butchart made a profound impression upon China. His life work will endure. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his death. He had been sick for some time. We were led to believe that he was better, and the news of his death is all the more shocking. It is difficult to interpret this providence but we have the faith in God that he had in going to China. It is a time for reflection and serious meditation. The friends will remember Mrs. Butchart and the little ones when they pray."

C. R. Scoville Closes Great Union Meetings at Emporia, Kan.

Guy S. Williams, of Emporia, Kan., reports that Charles Reign Scoville ended his six weeks' Emporia campaign on February 13, preaching his sermon on "The Second Coming of Christ," to more than 5,000 persons and winning 105 of them for Christ in the invitation service. A total of 177 persons went forward on the closing day, making a grand total of approximately 4,100 who enlisted in the churches during the campaign. William Allen White, nationally famous writer and politician, was an earnest supporter of Mr. Scoville's efforts. The Scoville company began a campaign at Keokuk, Ia., Feb. 20. Thomas Penn Ullom spent several days in the Iowa city looking after preparatory work. The crowd on the closing evening at Emporia was the largest of the campaign. Men lined the walls on all sides, in some places three deep. Others sat on the steps of the platform at the evangelist's feet. Scores of country folk brought their lunches and ate in the tabernacle in order to secure front seats. Thirteen churches participated in the series of meetings. They were: the First Methodist, Grace Methodist, First United Presbyterian, First Presbyterian, Second Presbyterian, Arundle Avenue Presbyterian, First Congregational, Second Congregational, Friends, Christian, Evangelical, Baptist and Reformed.

Yeuell and Yearsley at Wellsville, N. Y.

"The most intelligent preaching the church has ever had," is the way William A. Young, pastor at Wellsvlle, N. Y., describes the work of Herbert Yeuell in the evangelistic campaign recently closed at the Wellsville church.

Evangelist Herbert Yeuell, who has just closed an unusual series of meetings in Wellsville, N. Y.

Although, within the last three years the Minges company swept the town, and in spite of the fact that evangelism is quite unpopular in this conservative city, eighty-one persons came forward when the invitation was extended. These are adults for the most part. Among them was a Methodist minister Roman Catholics were also represented. Mr. Yeuell was ably assisted in these meetings by Earl Yearsley, soloist and leader. The illustrated lecture on "Ben Hur" made a deep impression upon the Wellsville public. The local papers gave most favorable reports of the meetings. The evangelists are now in a campaign at Lynn, Ind.

Central Church, Indianapolis, May Have New Building.

A. B. Philputt, pastor, and Philip Harvey, Bible-school superintendent at Central church, Indianapolis, in a recent congregational meeting made some statements that may develop a movement for a new church home. The sentiments expressed by these men found an echo in the expressions of many other leading members. All held that there is need of a plant adequate to the growing needs of the church. The Bible-school is already cramped for room and a gymnasium is greatly needed for the young men. The pastor said the field was practically limitless and he believed a Bible-school of 2,000 was not beyond their reach if they had the building. Reports for the years 1915 showed that 152 members had been received into the fellowship of the church last year. The average attendance for the Bible-school during the year was 702, being a gain of 180 a Sunday over the average of the preceding year. The income of the church from all sources during the year was $15,548.82, of which $3,842.49 was for missions and benevolence, including a special gift to the board of ministerial relief of $1,000. The sum of $2,500 was applied on the church debt which is now reduced to about $3,500.

First Church, Bloomington, Ill., Ministers to Young People.

More than fifty new names have been added to the Christian Endeavor Society roll of First Church, Bloomington, Ill., during the past month and 150 were present at a reception given recently for young people in the church parlors. The series of sermons to young people of the community by the pastor, Edgar DeWitt Jones, are proving remarkably successful.

F. F. Walters a Popular Man in Texas.

During recent weeks F. F. Walters, pastor at Wichita Falls, Tex., had several calls to special service. On the second Sunday of the year the local Rotary Club of one hundred men, with their wives, attended service at the Christian church to hear Mr. Walters speak on "Elements of Success." Later in the month he gave one of the speeches at the annual banquet of the Commercial Club, with 300 persons present. On a recent Sunday Temple Israel adjourned, the members of the Jewish congregation attending Mr. Walters' church. He talked on "The Mission of the Hebrew People." The Wichita Falls pastor was recently called to Denton, Tex., to assist in planning a new addition proposed for the church building. T. H. Mathieson, pastor here has an unusual opportunity for influence as there are 2,000 students in the university located there.

Canton, O., Pastor Makes Notable Record.

P. H. Welshimer began his fifteenth year with First church, Canton, O., January 1. Last year, 470 people were added to the church. Loss by death, letters and those dropped from the roll, 199. Net gain, 271. Resident membership, 3,376; non-resident, 621. The minister conducted ninety-three funerals and 113 weddings. In his absence, five funerals and ten weddings were cared for by members of the Phillips Bible Institute faculty. The church and its auxiliaries raised for all purposes in 1915, $22,751.03; for missions and benevolence, $3,224.33. A mission for the foreigners is maintained in the city; also, a mission in North Industry, four miles south of the city. Two Bible-schools are maintained by students of the institute in the country near Canton.

I. J. Cahill Lectures in Canton, O.

I. J. Cahill, of Cleveland, gave a series of four lectures to the students of Phillips Bible Institute, Canton, Ohio, February 2 and 3. His subjects were "Four Tests of a Ministry," "Some Unconsidered Phases of Christian Union," "Elements of a Successful Ministry," "The Contribution of the Disciples to the Life and Thought of Our Time." W. H. Book, of Columbus, Ind., will deliver the next series of lectures, in April.

Lincoln, Neb., First Church Has New Prayer Meeting Plan.

The prayer meeting committee of Lincoln, Neb., First church, held a conference recently and it was unanimously agreed that the Wednesday evening meeting should partake of the nature of a conference and social as well as prayer and praise meeting. The plan will be that the prayer and praise meeting will occupy about forty-five minutes of the opening, followed by a conference on matters relative to the activities of the church; the closing period will be given over to social interchange and light refreshments. H. H. Harmon is pastor at First church.

A Genuine Twentieth Century Church at Norfolk, Va.

Charles M. Watson, pastor at First church, Norfolk, Va., sees visions, and so do his people. But more—they make these visions come true. The Norfolk church is known as "The Friendly Church." It is enrolled in all the missionary endeavors of the brotherhood. An annuity fund of $20,000 has been created during the year, by means of which the Foreign Missionary Society and the Virginia Christian College are beneficiaries. The budget system is used by this church to take care of its financial business. The Bible-school, of which Mr. J. G. Holladay is superintendent, has a total enrollment of 551, and the aim for the school for this year is an attendance of 500 on its second anniversary, October, 1916. One of the results of the "Mothers' Club" has been to bring about better co-operation between the home and Bible-school, and a decrease in tardiness. This congregation regards the missionary activities of the past year as red letter items in their history. The crowning result of the year was an announcement that one of its young men, Mr. J. B. Earnest, Jr., had volunteered for service in the foreign field. The church is a living link of Virginia missions, American Home mssions, and Foreign missions, contributing $300, $300 and $600 respectively to these causes. The disbursements for local expenses last year amounted to $5,485.37. The amount given for missions and benevolences was $2,595. During the year $10,133.46 was collected on the building indebtedness. The choir on Christmas eve formed a Christmas Carol Club and visited the Ballentyne Home, and the Protestant and St. Vincent's Hospitals with songs and flowers. The Woman's Missionary Society reported total collections of $80.22. Number of members enrolled, 63, a gain of 11 over last year. The Christian Endeavor Society reported 15 Active and 20 Associate members. During the past year $25 was contributed toward the support of an orphan boy in Damoh, India, $6 towards building a chapel in China, with a balance in the treasury of $6.54. The Woman's Circle reported receipts from all sources, $175.02. They have a balance in the treasury of $64.97. A giving Christmas was held by the Bible-school. There were 91 additions to the church during the year. The present membership numbers 436. "Virginia's Biggest International Training School for Bible-school Workers" is conducted at First church, Norfolk, and Mr. Watson directs this school. A write-up of the school appeared in a recent issue of The Executive.

side Chicago," is John R. Golden's estimate of the new church home dedicated on Feb. 13 by Central church, Rockford, Ill. W. B. Clemmer, the pastor, is supremely happy in the successful issue of his strenuous efforts of several years. John L. Brandt, of St. Louis, led in the dedication and raised $11,570. 60 in cash and pledges at all services. A portion of this amount is already cared for by a loan from the Church Extension Board. Mr. Clemmer reports "the cleanest list of pledges" he has ever seen in the Rockford church. John R. Golden, state secretary, spent several days preaching at Rockford, in preparation for the event of the 13th. His work is highly praised by the pastor. A pleasant feature of dedication day was the coming forward of twenty young people at the morning service to dedicate their lives to Christ. One entire class of boys was among the number. A chorus of twenty-five voices led by Miss Pauline Clemmer made the services very attractive. Dr. Brandt remained for several days following the dedication, preaching each evening.

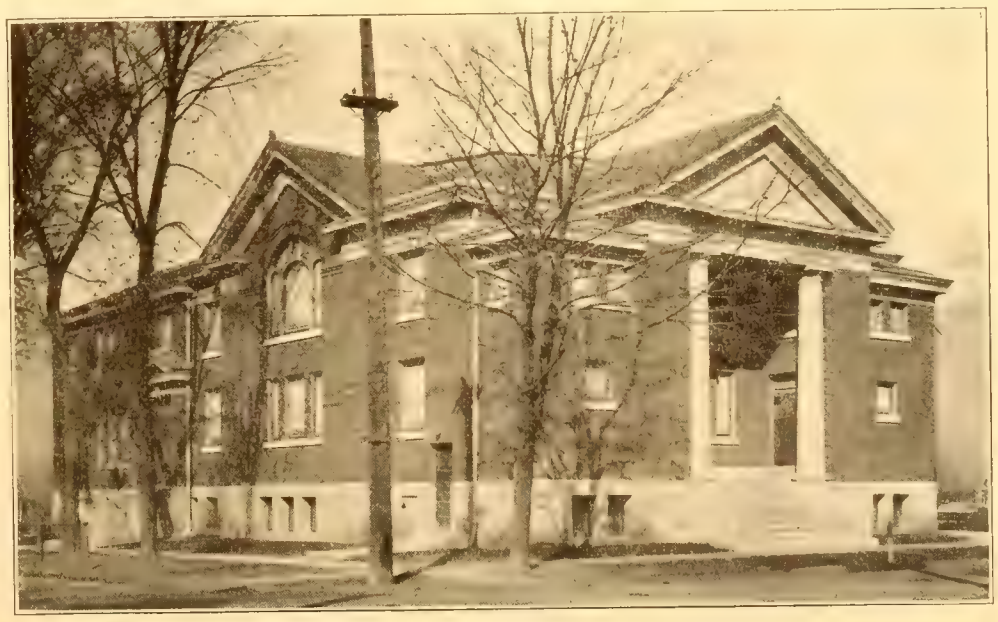
Another Living Link Church in Ohio.

C. M. Burkhart, pastor at Springfield, O., reports that the church there will raise $600 this year, as a living link. A fine meeting, conducted by the pastor, assisted by Miss Katherine Netz in the singing, closed recently, with forty-six persons added to the membership. This makes an increase of 70 since Mr. Burkhart came to Springfield, last May. The Junior Chorus and a male Glee Club, under Miss Netz' splendid direction made the series of meetings notable. Springfield church has a Bible-school of over 300. The C. W. B. M. has 100 members, having more than doubled in the last six months. A recent Every-member Canvass has increased the weekly receipts to about $70 per week.

Fathers' and Sons' Day at Wellington, Kan.

February 13 was observed as Fathers' and Sons' day at Wellington, Kans., where H. W. Hunter ministers. Every father was asked to bring his son, every son his father. "Borrow, if you have to." Boys and men had the program all the way through, choir and all. Mr. Hunter read the answers to two questions that were asked of the boys of the church previous to the meeting: 1. "What one thing do you like best about your father?" Forty-five per cent referred to their father's goodness. Others said: "Reads Bible to us boys," "is good to my mother," "joined church," "keeps us company." 2. "What one thing would you like to have your father do that he does not do?" Fifty per cent wanted him to join the church. Others said: "Stay at home nights," "quit chewing tobacco," "quit swearing," "go to Bible-school." The meeting was such a success that it has been decided to hold a "Mothers' and Daughters' Service" in March.

Ft. Wayne, Ind., Church, Records its Best Year.



The Ft. Wayne, Ind., E. Creighton Ave. church, E. H. Clifford, minister, has just closed one of the best years in its history. There was raised for missions, $101; for local purposes, $1,743; the C. W. B. M. almost doubled its apportionment for the present year. A net gain of fifty has been made to the membership. Owing to an increased attendance, the Men's Bible-class built a tabernacle for its own meetings. There has been an increase in all departments. The Christian Endeavor Society celebrated Christian Endeavor Week, beginning on February 6, with a special address by the pastor. A banquet was given on the following Tuesday evening for both present and prospective members. One of the best attended prayer-meetings of the year was held on Wednesday, which was Church Loyalty day. A public entertainment was given by the Endeavorers on Thursday night. The closing meeting of the week was addressed by Miss Bertha Harding, of Logansport, State Quiet Hour Superintendent.

A Persistent Revival at Paulding, O.

When the last evening of the recent revival series held at Paulding, O., came, C. L. Johnson, pastor, believed that the work was complete. But on Wednesday of last week, the evening chosen for a devotional service and a reception to the new members, there was such a large attendance that another sermon was demanded, and at the giving of the invitation three adults made the good confession. One of these persons, a lady living in Detroit, remained over to obey her Lord. All were baptized at the close of the service. Perfect harmony in the church work and a record-breaking Bible-school are reported at Paulding. Sixty persons were enlisted in the church work by means of the special series.

Illinois Bible-school Trebles in Three Months.

W. A. Taylor came to the work at Plymouth, Ill., in October of last year. Since that time the Bible-school has trebled its attendance. W. F. Aleshire is the capable superintendent. George W. Wise, of Camp Point, recently preached at Plymouth for three evenings, with six confessions as a result. Mr. Wise and the Camp Point church are planning for "Decision week"—April 16-23. Mr. Wise reports two accessions to his congregation.

Kentucky Bible-school Worker Assists in Ohio Institutes.

Mrs. John S. Asbury, Elementary Superintendent for the Kentucky Christian Bible-school Ass'n, during the last week in January assisted Wilford H. McLain, State Bible-school Superintendent of Ohio, in institutes at Newark and Lancaster. This is the second series of Ohio institutes in which Mrs. Asbury has been an instructor in the last four months. People who have had the privilege of her assistance are anxious that other Ohio workers have a similar opportunity. The institute at Lancaster was well attended by local workers. The institute at Newark besides a large local attendance reached workers from ten of the thirteen schools of Licking County. Effective local advertising had been done in each case. The pastors, W. D. Ward, and J. C. Richards, are each active in Bible-school work.

Concerning "Year Book" Statistics.

Charles E. Underwood, of the Board of Education of the Disciples of Christ, makes the following statement concerning the new "Year Book" statistics: "The Board of Education desires to emphasize two things in respect to statistics in the recently published Year Book: First, the column on education refers only to contributions made to the Board of Education or the institutions whose executive heads hold membership on the Board; second, from necessity the fiscal year of the Board of Education is from July 1 to June 30. Reports in the Year Book cover the fiscal year July 1, 1914 to June 30, 1915. Contributions subsequent to June 30, 1915, will appear in the next annual report."

Grant W. Speer Blesses Ohio Town.

J. H. Coil, pastor at New Philadelphia, O., writes: "We had Grant W. Speer, of Central church, Toledo, with us in January. He revived the membership, encouraged the pastor and added strength to the congregation. His preaching was scriptural, spiritual, clear and convincing. Large crowds heard him from night to night. Nothing draws like sane, dignified, calm, gospel preaching. His stay with us abides as a benediction. Our Bible-school is out-growing the building."

Guthrie, Okla., First Church Grows Without a Revival..

Guy H. Findly, pastor at First church, Guthrie, Okla., reports that about seventy persons were added to the church during the past year, and practically all of these came at regular services. There was a net gain during the year of thirty-four. Mr. Findly made 772 calls on members, 489 on non-members. Using the budget plan, all organizations of the church contribute to all missionary causes. A fine Bible-school of over 300 is reported thriving, as also all other organizations. There are about 500 names in the church membership.

One Hundred Minus One at Lincoln, Neb., Meetings.

The evangelistic series of meetings held at Lincoln, Neb., First, by H. H. Harmon, pastor, W. A. Baldwin and J. W. Hilton, closed with 99 persons added to the church membership. The primary purpose in the minds of the pastor and his immediate advisers when the meeting was planned, was to develop the working force of the church, and quicken the impulses of its separate organizations as well as the individuals composing them, toward the highest forms of social service, and this goal was attained. The climax of the series came on one of the Monday evenings, at which time were gathered together the large majority of the grown members of the church and many also of the youths and children. At this service Miss Sarka Hrbkova, an immigrant, gave an address in which she pictured the immigrant and his life in America and his influence upon American citizenship.

An International Wedding at Central Church, New York.

A unique wedding occurred last Saturday evening at 8 o'clock in Central church, New York City. The bride was Miss Olga Essatoff, the groom, Mr. Alexis G. Greenburg. Both parties are natives of Russia and speak English also. Dr. Finis Idleman, pastor of Central church, performed the wedding ceremony in English and John Johnson, pastor of the Russian Christian church, interpreted the ceremony into Russian for the benefit of the many guests who do not speak English. The bride was attended by three of her girlhood friends, and Mr. Peter Janson, of the Russian Commission for Inspection of Ammunition, acted as best man. The two flower girls were the daughters of Pastor Johnson and also nieces of the bridegroom. The church decorations included Russian and American flags.

Prize Contest on Temperance Popular.

Secretary L. E. Sellers, of the Temperance Board, reports that manuscripts are coming in every day for the essay contest on some phase of the Temperance issue. Thousands of friends of Temperance should participate in this contest. A prize of twenty-five dollars is offered for the three best articles. These articles are to be limited to one thousand words, should be rather in the form of outlines for finished addresses and should reach the office of the Board by March 15. They should be sent to Mr. Sellers at 821 Occidental Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind. Inquiries and offerings also should go to this address.

North Texas Christian Ministers' Association.

The North Texas Christian Ministers' Association met with the South Dallas church on Monday, January 31. Two of those on the program were unable to be present, and the time was used in discussion of topics of general interest. Much time was given to the "Each One Win One Campaign" and considerable interest and enthusiasm were manifested. All the Dallas churches, ten in number, are entering heartily into the campaign besides the following churches outside the city: Plano, Wills Point, Mineola, Corsicana, Blooming Grove, Cleburne, Van Alystine, Richardson, Rose Hill, Rockwall, Galveston, Garland, and many others not definitely heard from. It is the plan to make this move unanimous for all north Texas churches, at least, resulting in a great ingathering of souls at the Easter time. At the close of the meeting the association enjoyed the hospitality of the ladies of the South Dallas Christian church, in a luncheon.

Ohio Church Makes Survey of Township.

The North Eaton, Ohio, Church of Christ is the only church in the township in which it is located. C. M. Ford has served this church for about twelve months. The work has prospered during this period. A religious survey of the township has been conducted, a Farmers' Institute and Farm Products' Exhibit held, a successful, protracted meeting conducted and the Bible-school greatly improved. On Feb. 12 the Loyal Sons and Daughters' Class, which is taught by Mr. Ford, dedicated their new class room which they fitted up in the basement of the church. The day was a cold one, but 126 people were present on time for the Bible-school and 30 of these returned for the Conference on Bible-school Work conducted by State Superintendent Wilford H. McLain in the afternoon. The people of North Eaton, with their pastor and his wife, are to be congratulated on what they have done on their plans for the future.

—At a get-together meeting of the "Minute Men" of Norwood, O., Bible-school, on Feb. 18, a lecture was given by Captain Dunning, the head of the Bertillon System of Identification of the Cincinnati Police and Detective Department.

—At the installation services of C. H. Barnett at Brazil, Ind., J. E. Gorsuch, E. L. Day and Jabez Hall had part in the exercises.

—H. C. Armstrong, pastor at Harlem Ave., Baltimore, Md., has organized a class in public speaking.

—The Bible-school at Wellington, Kan., is completing a "Missionary Tour Around the World." An improvement in punctuality has been noted as a result of this "tour."

—Marshall A. Hudson, of Syracuse. N. Y., founder of the Baraca movement that has been the means of bringing thousands of young men into Bible-school classes, was the honored guest and speaker at Central church, Youngstown, on Feb. 20.

—L. O. Bricker, pastor at First church, Atlanta, Ga., is preaching a series of sermons on "The Poet Preachers." Addresses on Whitman, Browning, Dante, Tennyson, Burroughs and Burns were features.

—Wm. Dunn Ryan, of Central church, Youngstown, has recently closed a series of Sunday evening sermons on the general theme, "Tales of a Traveler."

—The church at Loveland, Colo., where J. E. Lynn is pastor, is in a ten weeks' Bible-school campaign, the purpose of which is to secure one hundred new scholars. Every department of the church is reported "as busy as a bee hive," indicating a state of genuine spirituality and enthusiasm. Mr. Lynn is just closing a series of sermons on "Things to Come," which has secured a very large hearing.

—The famous Philo Christo Class, of Central Bible-school, Des Moines, has redecorated and almost entirely made over its class room. This school has held its own in numbers and has advanced in interest, and this without a pastor since December 19, 1915, showing that the past nine years of teaching has been seed sown in good ground and is now bringing forth fruit. One Bible-school class which has only been organized a year sat down to their first annual banquet with fifty-eight present, and only seventy active members enrolled.

—A. B. Houze, minister of Central Church, Lima, O., is convalescing from a five weeks' serious illness.

—F. D. Kershner, H. O. Pritchard, A. McLean, A. W. Taylor and W. S. Athearn are announced as the lecturers to ministers at Bethany Park, Ind., 1916 season. W. E. M. Hackleman, connected with Bethany Assembly management for many years, is now president. E. L. Day, of Indianapolis, is secretary.

—O. F. Jordan, of Evanston, Ill., represented the Disciples at the church advertising convention, held in Chicago, Feb. 25. The sessions were held in the auditorium of the Central Y. M. C. A.

—James Small, of Hyde Park church, Kansas City, Mo., began an exchange meeting with Sam. I. Smith and the congregation at Pittsburg, Kan., Feb. 20.

—Chas. M. Watson, pastor at First church, Norfolk, with his wife, was presented by the congregation with a purse of gold.

—H. C. Combs has been elected president of the organization of ministers at Norfolk, Va.

—W. S. Buchanan addressed the teachers and officers of Franklin Circle Bible-school, Cleveland, on February 8.

—C. A. Freer, of East Liberty, Ohio, is assisting U. E. Hootman and the New Berlin church in an evangelistic meeting.

—C. B. Reynolds, of Alliance, Ohio, and E. A. Hibler, of Warren, O., are holding exchange meetings this winter. Mr. Reynolds closed a good meeting with the Warren church on February 6.

—The week of January 24, P. H. Welshimer gave addresses to ministers' meetings, groups of Sunday-school workers and to mass meetings of Bible-school people in Chattanooga, Tenn., Atlanta, Ga., and Knoxville, Tenn.

—W. L. Burner, Matanzas, Cuba, reports the organization of a Sunday-school at Cidra, where a work was opened last summer. He also reports the baptism of two young men. One of them is a school teacher in a nearby village and he is anxious to study for the ministry.

—Among those preaching recently in the vacant pulpit at Hartford City, Ind., were:

A New Standard of Bible School Efficiency

At the Bible-school Field Workers' Meeting held in Lexington, Ky., February 8 to 10, a new Standard of Efficiency was adopted for the Bible-schools. This is in the main a re-statement of the old Front Rank Standard to make it conform to the standards now current among the various Protestant churches of this country. It will be noted that practically every point of the old Standard has been retained, and but few points have been added. However, the new Standard has an attractive form that will make it popular among all our schools. It is as follows:

1. Cradle Roll and Home Department.
2. Organized Class in both Secondary and Adult Divisions.
3. Teacher Training.
4. Graded Organization and Instruction.
5. Missionary Instruction and Offerings (State, American, Foreign and Benevolence.)
6. Temperance Instruction.
7. Definite Decision for Christ Urged.
8. Workers' Conference Regularly Held.
9. Workers' Library in Use.
10. Representation in Convention, Institute or School of Methods.

Each of thse ten points is worth ten per cent. A school may easily measure its own efficiency in terms of percentage. A school reaching all ten of the points fully will become a Hundred Per Cent School. Every Bible-school should strive to reach the One Hundred Per Cent Mark before the close of the missionary year, September 30, 1916.

A large wall chart will be mailed to every Bible-school requesting it that will enable the school to keep its own record. These charts may be obtained by addressing your State, District or Provincial Superintendent, or the undersigned.

Every school, both large and small, is able to attain this Standard of Efficiency. We shall watch with eagerness the progress that is made among all our churches.

Robt. M. Hopkins.
Bible-school Secretary.

E. D. Lowe, of Anderson; M. W. Yocum, of Linton and Rev. Mr. Massey, of Pennville.

—The Christian, Baptist and Presbyterian churches of Carlinville, Ill., are considering combining their work under one pastor.

—Mrs. T. W. Grafton, of Indianapolis, delivered an address on "Girls" in one of the free lectureships of the North Indianapolis Federation of Clubs.

—The roof of the West Seattle, Wash., church gave way under a heavy weight of snow, and a $2,000 loss is reported. E. E. Pierce is pastor of the church.

—R. J. Bennett, pastor at Sharon, Pa., preached a sermon recently for the local Presbyterian pastor, taking as his theme, "The Supreme Sphere of Jesus." The Sharon newspapers quoted a large portion of the discourse.

—First church, Vincennes, Ind., was recently entered by burglars.

—A union meeting is being talked for the Centralia, Mo., churches.

—Since Randolph Cook became pastor at Broadway church, Albuquerque, N. M., four months ago, there has been a net increase of 50 in the membership, the Bible-school has increased from 91 to an average attendance of 169 for January, and the church offerings have grown about fifty per cent, without any impetus save that of the Sunday services. Negotiations are being completed with the Church Extension Board for a loan, which puts the finances of the new church in excellent shape. Mr. Cook teaches a Young Men's Bible-class at the State University on Tuesday night of each week.

L. N. D. Wells, of High Street church, Akron, O., recently assisted Franklin Circle church, Cleveland, with William F. Rothenburger minister, in a two weeks' meeting. The meeting followed closely the dedication of the new Bible-school and Community House and resulted in 82 additions to the church, mostly by confession. Mr. Wells' preaching was pungent, scriptural, virile and sweet-spirited and left the regular program of the church uninterrupted, writes Mr. Rothenburger.

—J. H. McCartney, pastor at Modesto, Cal., preached a series of sermons last week on "The Religion of the Family." The topics were as follows: "What a Real Boy Thinks of Religion." "The Faith of a Live Girl." "The Religion of a Genuine Man." "A Busy Woman and Her Religion." "Your Neighbor and Religion." "The Religion of Old Folks." "The Christian Home." These sermons were a special feature of the revival meetings being conducted at Modesto.

—Charles S. Medbury, pastor of University church, Des Moines, discussed "preparedness" again in a recent sermon. Dr. Medbury believes the trip of the president to the central west did not clear the issue, in fact, that in the happenings of the last six weeks the real issue has been lost sight of.

—Helen Keller, the wonderful blind and deaf girl, spoke in First church, Louisville, Ky., recently on "Happiness."

—Finis Idleman is preaching a three-months' series of Sunday evening sermons on "The Way of Jesus." The series will close with Easter Sunday.

—First church, Mason City, Ia., lost its $22,000 building by fire on Feb. 13.

—First church, of Canton, O., has adopted the church at Ada as its Ohio Living Link.

—C. F. McCall and family, of Akita, Japan, will leave that country early in the spring for America to take the usual furlough.

Philip Y. Pendleton delivers a Bible lecture every Monday afternoon in First Methodist church, Canton, O., to the ladies of the city. This class is maintained under the auspices of the local Y. W. C. A.

—Lee Tinsley, pastor at North Salem, Ind., writes enthusiastically of the church there, which, he states, is "a mighty force for the uplift of the community." A series of meetings is now in progress, in which seventeen persons were enlisted for the church during the first few evenings.

—Russell F. Thrapp, of First church, Los Angeles, Cal., addressed the Christian ministers of Southern California this month on "Lights and Shadows in the Life of a Minister's Wife."

NEW YORK CITY NOTES.

The Seventeenth Annual Dinner of the Disciples' Missionary Union, of Greater New York and Vicinity, was held at the Fifth Avenue Restaurant, Tuesday evening, February 8. F. M. Gordon, of Flatbush church, was toastmaster. The annual report was presented by M. M. Amunson, the secretary of the union. Addresses on "Christian Union" were made by John F. Carson, of Brooklyn Central Presbyterian church, and by Earle Wilfley, of Vermont Avenue Christian church, Washington, D. C.

The work of the churches of New York for 1915 was marked by unusual missionary success, due to the splendid co-operation and staunch support of the union by all the churches of the Metropolis, and also due to the generosity of the American Christian Missionary Society. The summarized report of the work is as follows: The total receipts of the union from churches and the A. C. M. S. were $6,472.17; total disbursements, $5,861.02; to balance, $611.15.

The annual dinner this year had a special note of celebration in the coming to the rank of self-support by the Flatbush Mission. Under the fine leadership of F. M. Gordon, the Flatbush church has a membership of 291, with a Bible-school enrollment of 471, and an average attendance of 346.

The Borough Park church, with L. F. Carter, pastor, reports for the year 1915: Additions, 15; total membership, 100; enrollment in Bible-school, 241; average attendance, 174.

The Ridgewood Heights church, with G. S. Bennett, minister, has had 4 additions; total membership, 19; enrolment in Bible-school, 275; average attendance, 176.

The Russian Mission, John Johnson, minister: Additions, 12; total membership, 41; Bible-school enrollment, 14; average attendance, 12.

Is your Church a part of this hand? Have you as a Minister helped to extend this hand to the needy ones in pagan lands?

The hand is a striking illustration of the all-round service the Foreign Society is rendering to help those to light who now sit in midnight darkness. Where can a Christian man put a dollar that will count for more to bring the gospel and the Kingdom of God to all men, than in the Foreign Society at this time? The work of the Society is a record, and not a prospectus. It has something worthwhile to show for its forty years of toil, for the graves of its missionaries scattered over the world, and for the more than $6,000,000 expended.

Every church and every individual that has put a dollar into this cause, can now rejoice over the great results.

We are only at the beginning of our splendid opportunities. Only a few foundation stones have been placed. Our great task of evangelizing the whole great wide world is yet before us. The superstructure is yet to be completed. We must press this work as never before.

It behooves us to make a substantial advance in these March Offering days. The voice of God is speaking to us in clear, definite tones to move forward!

IMPORTANCE OF THE MARCH OFFERING

It is important to all our work, both at home and abroad. If we fail in March we will go limp and maimed all through the year. A big March Offering insures a successful missionary year. Many churches look forward to this day as the most joyous during the whole year. It should be made a day of the very greatest importance.

BRIGHT OUTLOOK

The outlook for the Offerings is fine. Orders for supplies are pouring in by every mail. New Living-Link churches are being enrolled constantly. The words of encouragement were never more numerous or more emphatic. There seems to be a determination all along the line to do a worthy part. Let there be a united, determined, enthusiastic effort to make this a memorable year.

Prompt action should be the word to send all down the line. Please order March Offering supplies today that they may reach you in good time.

Address, F. M. RAINS, SECRETARY, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

"As They Went"

ALL LIFE IS AN APPRENTICESHIP TO THE TRUTH THAT ACTIVITY IS THE KEY OF KNOWLEDGE; THAT MEN KNOW AS MUCH AS THEY DO, AND NO MORE. EQUALLY IS IT TRUE THAT PERFORMANCE IS THE ONLY ROAD TO POSSESSION. MEN HAVE AND ENJOY AS MUCH AS THEY OBEY THE LAWS OF LIFE, AND NO MORE.

Naaman, of Syria, thought the Abana that sang its way from Lebanon to make Damascus the gem of the desert, as good a bathing place as the muddy and turbulent Jordan. Yet when later he knelt, a healed man, in the house of Rimmon, he knew that only as he went and came at the prophet's command, his leprosy was cleansed.

In most of the Savior's works of power the activity and co-operation of the beneficiaries were enlisted, and without such response it is reasonable to suppose there would have been no healing. Indeed it is worth while asking, How much of the healing itself lay in the effort made by the sick man to receive the blessing?

When the Master said to the man with the withered hand, "Stretch forth thy hand," did he imply that the disability lay rather in the enfeebled will than the palsied arm? And did his command summon that will to action as the only means of showing where the difficulty lay? In any event, it was only by such response that the man found restoration.

When Jesus, passing through the throngs of helpless people in the porch of Bethesda, selected one on whom to confer his benediction, he bade him do the seemingly impossible thing of taking up his rug and walking home. If the lame man had demurred, or refused to co-operate, would he have enjoyed the gift of renewal? It was only by active effort that he profited.

Ten lepers besought the Lord to heal them. He commanded them to go and show themselves to the priests, who were the health officials of the time. As they went, they were cleansed. And in that phrase, "as they went," lies the secret of all healing and power.

We live in a divine world. The term supernatural is unbiblical and misleading, for it implies the false dualism which was once the assumption of theology. But a divine world it is; a world in which God is working out his gracious purposes as rapidly as men give him place and room.

And in such a world all things are possible to the man of faith. He knows that all things are set to the realization of the divine purpose at last. That may take a long time, as human nature now reveals itself. But time is a small item in the divine economy. And in the meantime everything is right in the inner world of the one who lives with God.

In such a world, conscious of the forces that are ever at his disposal, the Christian ought to be fearless. The insistent message of the men of God in every age has been, "Fear not!" Those that are with us are more than those against us. The mountains round about us are full of the horses and chariots of God. Nothing can separate us from the divine life, unless we consent. And if there be no separation, nothing else counts.

The men who have gone out at what they believed to be the command of God to try the adventure of the holy life have usually found themselves healed and inspired "as they went."

Godfrey departed as a pilgrim seeking bodily healing at the sepulchre of Christ. But as the enterprise of the First Crusade took form, his trouble gave place to the vaster labor of leading a multitude to the land of heart's desire.

Savonarola and Phillips Brooks were both failures in public speech and were advised to choose some other calling than the ministry. But as they went forward in the fervor of their faith, men forgot their hesitant speech, and soon it came in a torrent of enthralling eloquence.

Augustine and Bunyan were youths whose moral taints were seemingly beyond the power of shame or discipline to remove. But the vision of the Christ appeared to them, and they went at his command to find the better way. And as they went, they were healed.

Contact with Christ and obedience to his directions are the secret of renewal. "As many as touched him were made whole."

The mighty works that have been wrought in the name of the Lord were not the result of the outstanding gifts or spasms of energy, but of faithful continuance in well doing. And as with help and healing, so with conviction. "If any man will do his will, he shall know."

Francis took up his humble work at Assisi, and just by going on with it from day to day in the spirit of obedience and service, he found to his own astonishment that all Europe was drawing nearer to God.

Wesley, troubled over many problems of his own religious life, trying experiments in Christian service, finding light and losing it, went steadily on, working and thinking, and as he went he saw gathering about him a mighty host whose hearts the Lord through him had touched.

Booker Washington, fatherless, nameless, unprovided, saw the vision of the intelligent and competent life. His long, footsore journey to the school of which he had heard seemed the most forlorn of hopes. But it was the Odyssey of the negro race. He went on from strength to strength, and as he went he and his people found help and healing.

The art of going in obedience to the divine impulse, and of going on to the end, is the secret, and the only secret, of the successful Christian life. Of Abraham it is significantly said, "He journeyed toward the land of Canaan, and into the land of Canaan he came."

It is not otherwise in useful Christian living. The small and commonplace lives we live are taken up into the embrace of spiritual forces and given eternal meanings.

As one goes forward in simple trust, wishing only to do the next thing, he finds with astonishment that he is healed of his doubt, his indifference and his sin, and is permitted to render some really worthful service in the name of God.

And gradually the full glory of the life of trust is disclosed, and he knows that he can do all things in Christ who strengthens him.

The Minister and the Bellumist Propaganda

BY ELLIS B. BARNES

ALL of us are acquainted with pastors who in theory, at least, are advocates of peace. They can denounce war in unmeasured terms; they sincerely deplore the present European scourge. They would have done much to have prevented that had an opportunity been given. There is nothing colorless about their anti-war convictions; they are blood-red.

But these same men are non-committal on the bellumist agitation for greater fighting forces in America. They are timid and even reluctant to express an opinion. They would leave all matters to the experts and politicians. They are unaware, apparently, of the perils which militarism is certain to import into the church itself. They have adopted the maxim without question that guns are the ambassadors of peace between nations, and even that God is on the side of the heaviest guns. These military axioms they have never questioned, although they have preached a thousand times that God is likely to be on the side of the weak, and that the race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong. They have unwittingly accepted the soldier's philosophy that might makes right. They forget, as Emerson said, that every mischief carries its plausibility as every man carries his shadow.

PEACE LITERATURE.

If the ministers would read the literature sent out by the Peace organizations their non-committal attitude would disappear, their feeble convictions would be strengthened, their timid voices would become prophetic. And the literature is sorely needed since all classes, even the clergy, are under the spell of the doctrine of the "big-stick," under the spell of might, under the magic of the strong-arm legacies which have come to us from the Stone Age, and are thoroughly mixed in with our blood. To destroy our kinship with Thor we need to saturate ourselves with Peace teaching, to stand ankle-deep in the traditions of Peace for a time, at least.

The great majority of ministers have preached Peace sermons with an apology, with mental reservations, and with fields of glory in the background of their minds, or with the suspicion that the doctrine could be realized only with the advent of the Millennium. I believe many of us would affirm, as we review our experiences with Peace sermons, that it would have been better for the cause of Peace if we had come out openly for war.

THE PREACHER AND PEACE.

The preacher has had many difficulties to overcome. Many great military experts are shouting to the nation to "get ready!" that an enemy may land on our shores before morning and blow us into the sea or sky before night. Popular heroes are going up and down the land throwing communities into a panic because of the Japanese "peril," or of the terrors that are certain to beset as soon as the Great War is over. Other men have made merry over the failures of the Peace-party, and the jokesmith finds an unfailing spring in the efforts of any man who sincerely proposes to find a path out of international difficulties in any way besides bloodshed. Influential men in the pews are on the side of the militarists because preachers are visionary, as a rule, and war brings business. Such men do not like war, but they salve their consciences with the revenues of an increased sale of goods that in the piping times of peace would be almost a drug on the market, and they can devote these revenues to pious uses. The fighter can point to history as his justification for buckling on his armor anew, he can tell us that the progress of the world has ever been by struggle and bloodshed, and that civilization has risen out of a valley of dry bones. He can cite immortal heroes whom war has made, the men to whom nations rear their most enduring monuments, he can tell of the glory of valor, of the eminent position of the soldier in all civilized countries, of the magnificence of his rewards. There are few rewards thus far for the advocate of peace. The recital of these things makes the preacher pause and shake his head and assume the don't know attitude—unless he plants himself squarely on the principles of righteousness, unless he gets a little nearer than ever before to the heart of him whose will it is to break the bow asunder and to burn the chariot in the fire.

A PHANTOM FIRE.

The herald of the cross who allows himself to be blinded by military glory is not wise. He will find himself ere long following a phantom fire. Great names should not count with him, unless they are enshrined in righteousness. He can give all the praise he cares to give to the heroes who performed brilliant deeds on any field. But he must make it clear that the day of battlefields is past. They must be left behind as dueling, piracy, and martyr-fires have been left behind. If the preacher suffer reproach because he will not walk with a multitude to do evil, he should do so gladly for Christ's sake. He should not hesitate to protest against the barbarous practice of settling differences by bloodshed any more than he would to throw himself between two members of his parish who were settling their differences with their fists. He should make it clear that there is not a Golden Rule for individuals and communities, and an Iron Rule for the nations. He should insist upon righteousness and justice as the real bulwarks of a nation, and have scant sympathy with the policy of measuring a nation's strength by its armaments. If that policy prevailed in communities John L. Sullivan would be the ideal citizen. How a preacher can preach the doctrines of the New Testament and be indifferent to the present bellumist agitation is not easy to see. It is as if he loathed a prize-fight and remained unmoved by the horrors of the battlefield. And this agitation is not for fun, the guns are not to ornament parlors. They will be used for the purposes for which they were made. And the Treitschkes of the world have no fine sense of discrimination as to the uses to which guns should be put.

SERVING MARS AND THE MASTER.

War and the accessories of war are atheistical. They fear not God or regard man. They care as little for the sacredness of life as they do for the treasures of a Rheims Cathedral. Humanity is a mere sheet of paper that one may crumble in his hand and throw away, in the eyes of the warrior. So while we pray, "Give peace in our time, O Lord," let us not tamely acquiesce in policies which will invite war. While we declare the sacredness of life, let us act as if it were fit for something more than to be sacrificed to the vengeance of swords and the ambitions of rulers. While we urge upon our hearers the necessity of guarding human life from accident and disease, let us not yield to the importunante appeals for funds with which to buy instruments of destruction. Let us not believe that the mercy of Red Cross organizations atones for the horrors of war. The pulpit must be consistent and not squander with one hand what it conserves with the other; it cannot serve Mars and the Master of men at the same time; it cannot believe in the righteousness that exalteth, and the military rivalries that destroy a nation: it must affirm anew the principles of justice and judgment, applicable alike to the nations and the individual.

WAR AND THE FUTURE OF CHRISTIANITY.

War policies and war-preparations in America at this hour are dangerous to the cause of Christ. The preacher who believes in one cannot countenance the others. He needs once more to consecrate himself to the Prince of Peace, thorn-crowned and marred of visage, calm and unresisting, strong with the strength that right alone can impart. Like him, the ministry must determine to be made perfect, if need be, through suffering in a great cause. And, finally, every man who stands at sacred altars must voice his protest against those sincere but misguided men who know no Christ unless he have fighting in his heart, a sword in his hand, and a helmet on his head.

THE MESSENGER WHO COMETH LATE.

The strings of camels come in single file,
Bearing their burdens o'er the desert sands:
Swiftly the boats go plying on the Nile;
The needs of men are met on every hand.
But still I wait
For the messenger of God, who cometh late.

I see the cloud of dust rise in the plain;
The measured tread of troops falls on the ear.
The soldier comes, the empire to maintain,
Bringing the pomp of war, the reign of fear;
But still I wait.
The messenger of peace, he cometh late.

They set me looking o'er the desert drear,
Where broodeth darkness as the deepst night.
From many a mosque there comes the call to prayer;
I hear no voice that calls on Christ for light.
But still I wait
For the messenger of Christ, who cometh late.

London's Leading Poets Visit Chicago

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

IF THE Great War is responsible for the fact that many of the gifted singers of Europe have been driven to the American shores, there is at least one compensating ray of silver in the cloud of war. However that may be, Chicago has recently enjoyed visits from the two men who are acclaimed as the most significant poets of England writing today. These two men are Alfred Noyes and John Masefield.

John Masefield, who is greeted by many critics as the poet of the future.

Alfred Noyes, who is hailed by such eminent poets and critics as Swinburne, Rudyard Kipling, Theodore Watts-Dunton, and Edmund Gosse as the greatest English poet of the generation that has arisen since the death of Tennyson, is at present only thirty-five years old; but he leaped so early into fame that his work has been generally known in England for a decade.

Mr. Noyes' visit to America in 1913 was his first. His wife, however, is an American woman, daughter of the late Col. B. G. Daniels, who served under Grant. Few English men of letters since Dickens have been greeted in the States with the cordiality and honors which welcomed him in 1913. At that time he accepted the invitation of Princeton University to become visiting professor of English during 1915. Some of his published books are: "Drake," "The Golden Hynde," "The Tales of the Mermaid Tavern," "The Flower of Old Japan," "A Belgian Christmas Eve" and "the Lord of Misrule."*

Alfred Noyes, who is heralded as the logical successor to England's greater Alfred, Lord Tennyson.

The following poem is chosen from the latter volume, recently published:

THE OLD DEBATE.

"His angels fell, and myriads grope
In doubt for this dark cause alone.—
That God hath given them room for hope,
And made their struggling wills their own.

"In the same breath, they plead for chains
And freedom; pray for ordered spheres,
Then murmur that the sun retains
Its course, unchecked by smiles or tears.

"'The omnipotent would grant us this,
Or else He is not good,' they say;
But O, the Power withholds their bliss
Till they agree what prayer to pray."

Mr. Noyes was recently greeted by a large audience at the University of Chicago where he spoke on "Poets of Optimism."

A few weeks after Mr. Noyes' visit came John Masefield, who delivered several addresses to sympathetic audiences. One of these was composed of the public school teachers of the city.

This poet has seen more of the "seamy" side of life than Mr. Noyes. As a boy he became a seaman, and under the spell of this experience he gleaned inspiration for his matchless songs of the sea, many of which he recited while in Chicago. Ten or twelve years ago, Mr. Masefield was tending bar in New York, trying to eke out a living. Today he is greeted by Kipling and others as the poet of the future. Fame came to him with the publication of "The Everlasting Mercy" in an English magazine, and when the poem was published in book form it became at once the most talked of volume of poetry of the day. To this work others have been added, among them: "Daffodil Fields," "The Widow in the Bye Street," "Pompey," and "The Story of a Round House."* The following verse entitled, "Roadways," is contained in this recent collection:

One road leads to London,
  One road runs to Wales,
My road leads me seawards
  To the white dipping sails.

One road leads to the river,
  As it goes singing slow;
My road leads to shipping,
  Where the bronzed sailors go.

Leads me, lures me, calls me
  To salt green tossing sea;
A road without earth's road-dust
  Is the right road for me.

A wet road heaving, shining,
  And wild with seagulls' cries,
A mad salt sea-wind blowing
  The salt spray in my eyes.

My road calls me, lures me
  West, east, south and north;
Most roads lead men homewards,
  My road leads me forth

To add more miles to the tally
  Of gray miles left behind,
In quest of that one beauty
  God put me here to find.

The United States of Europe

Victor Hugo's Prophecy.

(In His Presidential Address at the Peace Congress in 1849.)

A day will come when you, France—you, Russia—you, Italy—you, England—you, Germany—all of you nations of the continent—shall, without losing your distinctive qualities and your glorious individuality, blend in a higher unity and form a European fraternity, even as Normandy, Brittany, Burgundy, Lorraine, Alsace, all the French provinces, have become blended.

A day will come when war shall seem as absurd and impossible between Paris and London, between St. Petersburg and Berlin, as between Rouen and Amiens, between Boston and Philadelphia. A day will come when bullets and bombs shall be replaced by ballots by the universal suffrage of the people, by the sacred arbitrament of a great sovereign senate, which shall be to Europe what the parliament is to England, what the diet is to Germany, what the legislative assembly is to France.

A day will come when a cannon ball shall be exhibited in our museums as an instrument of torture is now, and men shall marvel that such things could be. A day will come when shall be seen those two immense groups, the United States of America and the United States of Europe, in face of each other, extending hand to hand over the ocean, exchanging their products, their commerce, their industry, their arts, their genius—clearing the earth, colonizing deserts, and ameliorating creation, under the eye of the Creator.

A GREAT DAY IN THE CALENDAR

FEW churches that feel the pulsebeat of our brotherhood interests or the movement of the church throughout the world, will fail to observe the "Red Letter Day of Foreign Missions" next Sunday.

Through long years of careful training our churches have learned to set apart with a sort of sacred reverence the First Lord's Day in March for the Festival of Foreign Missions.

Not without careful preparation can that day be approached. It is no time for a hasty announcement and a hurried offering. The minister who would permit his people to pass lightly over that day would deal flippantly with the Lord's Supper, or jest about baptism.

For the Missionary Offering is an ordinance, as holy and obligatory as are they. With every stress of emphasis with which our Master said, "Baptizing them into the Name," or "This do in remembrance," he also said, "Go and make disciples of all the nations."

And how shall they go except they be sent? And how shall they be sent except the churches pour out their offerings for the holy cause?

There may be other plans and other days; but essentially every church in the brotherhood wishes to join in the high fellowship of This Day. Even if a missionary offering is taken every week, the One Day set apart by the churches for this cause is worthy of special observance, if only for the sake of fellowship and education. Even if every sermon has a missionary note, and no Lord's Day service omits a prayer in behalf of the missionaries on the far flung line, yet That Day keeps its place in the calendar of the church.

March Fifth is the Great Day of Foreign Missions.

DR. BUTCHART'S DEPARTURE

THERE is a great sadness in the hearts of all Disciples over the news that our Chinese mission has lost its most notable physician.

Since the retirement of Dr. Macklin from active medical work, necessitated by the condition of his health, Dr. Butchart has been the most outstanding figure in our important mission in the Nankin region, and one of the most notable in all central China.

And this can be said without the slightest reflection upon the large and honorable places won by such able and consecrated physicians as Dr. Osgood and Dr. Wakefield, and the admirable corps of Chinese physicians, like Dr. Li, who have in part been trained by them.

For fifteen years Dr. Butchart was stationed at Luchowfu, where the hospital work took an important place in the life of the community. His name was as familiar and as much loved in that region as was that of Dr. Macklin in the vicinity of Nankin, or of Dr. Osgood at Chuchow.

With the organization of the University of Nankin, which resulted from the successful efforts to practice Christian unity in educational work, Dr. Butchart was called from Luchowfu to Nankin to take the head of the medical school. This was not only an honor for the Disciples, but a merited recognition of a great surgeon and a splendid Christian man.

It is hard to think of his departure just in the beginnings of a great career in this new work. With few men could our missionary forces so reluctantly part.

Such incidents make us scan with thoughtful attention the list of our workers in the far lands, and dwell appreciatively on the worth of each, bearing them on hands of prayer before the throne of God, grateful that they abide with us in loving service.

"God buries his workmen, but he carries on his work."

THE PILGRIMS AT PANAMA

NO READER of The Christian Century will fail to enjoy the interesting letter of Mr. Morrison, noting the arrival of the Missionary Commission at the Canal Zone, and giving some account of the place.

The Panama Canal is the engineering wonder of the century. What the St. Gottard Tunnel, the Brooklyn Bridge and the Eiffel Tower were in their day, that and more is the Canal in ours.

As the great project of De Lesseps in cutting a way from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea shortened by thousands of miles and weeks of time the journey from India to Europe around the "Cape of Storms," so this new labor of the modern Hercules has pierced the western hemisphere at its narrowest point, brought the orient and occident nearer by wide diameters, and erased from the program of navigation the necessity of the long and dangerous voyage "around the horn."

Mr. Morrison's papers are telling us just the things we want to know about the places he visits. The story about Jamaica last week was full of the sort of thing that only a trained observer and writer can set down.

We are just in receipt at this office of several copies of the Panama "Star and Herald," the leading publication of the Canal Zone. Each number contains several columns of material from Mr. Morrison's pen regarding the purposes and personnel of the Conference. It is evident that his abilities as a journalist, already recognized by the leading newspapers of the cities where our national conventions have been held in recent years, are being put under commission in the borders of Latin America as well. This is an honor which readers of the "Century" will understand and approve.

THE VALUE OF EPITHETS

THOSE who possess something of the controversial spirit, or who have certain pet aversions in the domain of ideas, recognize the value of epithets.

It is an easy and inexpensive diversion to characterize the man with whom one happens to differ by a term which carries the burden of disapproval and avoids the necessity of clear statement.

Just at the present time one hears such terms as "molly-coddle," "coward," and "peace-at-any-price man," used energetically of the people who deprecate the wave of militaristic sentiment now sweeping the country, with its insistent demand for increase in war preparation.

Without arguing the principles involved, it may be said with emphasis that the most courageous people of the time are those who are inviting popular disapproval by opposing armament. It is not easy to believe that any "molly-coddle" (whatever that is) or "coward" would wish to take up so unpopular a program. As for "peace at any price," of course every thoughtful person knows that there are no such people, and there never were any.

Every patriotic spirit understands that there are boundaries to the domain of peace. There are events so sinister that only military response can be made. But the burden of proof, and a very heavy burden, too, is up to the man who tries to prove that there is the slightest approach to such a state of affairs, as concerns our own nation, or that the future, within the range of years, holds such possibilities.

With one exception, always to be kept in mind: The attitude of militaristic preparation on the part of the United States may easily bring on the very conflict which the alarmists predict.

In the meantime it is diverting to hear the opprobrious epithets already mentioned complacently bandied about by people who might be the last to enlist if trouble really came.

Such epithets are convenient and inexpensive.

UNION CHURCHES

IT IS apparent that the search for practicable methods of promoting Christian unity is pursued with eagerness by many thoughtful Christians in our day.

With greater frequency there come to us names of churches that are trying to work out a satisfying plan of co-operation or union. The majority of these are community churches, where people of different religious associations have united for purposes of worship and work, preferring no denominational affiliation, lest they should again be drawn into the friction of contending sects.

In many instances the groups that have united or are seeking to unite represent the Baptists and the Disciples, or the Disciples and Congregationalists, and sometimes a third company is interested in the movement.

This is heartening. The effort to unite the broken body of Christ will be promoted in a variety of ways. But most practically of all will it proceed by the uniting of just such groups wherever economy of resources and effort can be secured.

We have been asked repeatedly of late to offer suggestions regarding workable plans of union. This we are always glad to do, knowing of many instances in which the happiest results have been reached. Still further we have been asked to give the names of such churches, and those with whom correspondence might be held by those in need of information.

But it occurs to us that the list of such union churches, under whatever form of combination, must be far larger than we are aware, and that information of this nature would be useful to us, to our inquirers, and to the churches themselves.

May we ask, therefore, that any reader who knows of a union church of any sort whatever, send us as definite a statement as possible regarding its name, location, constituency, and the proper correspondent.

RECRUITING AN ARMY

TO THE men who are advocating a huge increase in the size of our army ever face the real difficulty that lies across the path of such a program?

Unless you can show the average American that he is immediately wanted in the army for purposes of national defense or national honor, he is too much engaged in the serious things of the modern world to take interest in enlistment.

Ask any enlisting officer, and he will tell you that, with the exception of moments of emergency, like the Spanish war, and the little flurry over Mexico a few months since, it is most difficult to get young men to enlist in the army. They know that at best it is not the life the full-blooded American wants to live. And, more than that, small as our army has been, it is a thankless task to keep filled the places left vacant by desertions.

To men who cannot be scared by the ridiculous bogey of "invasion," and to whom any wages the country could afford to pay for soldiering would look undesirable as contrasted with a man's earning power, the army will remain outside the circle of interest.

INWARD INDUSTRIES

IT IS a reason for satisfaction to the students of church economics, that although foreign missions are the most remote of Christian interests, geographically, they have a vital relation to the inner life of the home churches.

Through all these winter months preceding the March offering, the churches are busy with the inward industries of instruction, inspiration, saving and anticipation which depend directly on the enterprise of foreign missions, but are the most useful of activities for the local church.

If not a dollar of the funds gathered on the Fifth of March were to reach the non-Christian lands, still the value of the propaganda would be indisputable as a wise economy of the home churches.

But when so small a fraction of the money is required for administrative purposes, and one estimates the vast stores of information, zeal, consecration, prayer and generosity released by the agitation, foreign missions would seem one of the most economical and productive of Church ministries.

Forward!

By Alfred Noyes.

A THOUSAND creeds and battle-cries,
A thousand warring social schemes,
A thousand new moralities.
And twenty thousand thousand dreams!

Each on his own anarchic way,
From the old order breaking free—
Our ruined world desires, you say,
License, once more, not Liberty.

But ah, beneath the struggling foam,
When storm and change are on the deep,
How quietly the tides come home,
And how the depths of sea-shine sleep;

And we who march toward a goal,
Destroying only to fulfil
The law, the law of that great soul
Which moves beneath your alien will;

We, that like foemen meet the past
Because we bring the future, know
We only fight to achieve at last
A great reunion with our foe;

Reunion in the truths that stand
When all our wars are rolled away;
Reunion of the heart and hand
And of the prayers wherewith we pray;

Reunion in the common needs,
The common strivings of mankind;
Reunion of our warring creeds
In the one God that dwells behind. . . . ,

Forward!—what use in idle words?
Forward, O warriors of the soul!
There will be breaking up of swords
When that new morning makes us whole.

The Visitor

On the Eve of the Congress

OUR party arrived on the Isthmus of Panama a week before the Congress at Panama City was to convene. There were many things to do to make the preparations for the gathering complete, and as a by-product of these labors there came to us many interesting observations. At this writing —the day before the opening of the Congress—we, who have been at Uncle Sam's Hotel Tivoli for a week, begin to feel very much at home in the Canal Zone of the Isthmus and in the City of Panama especially.

We landed at Colon, or more accurately, Cristobal, at the northern end of the Canal. The reader may need to freshen up his recollection of the geography of the Isthmus as most travellers have to do, especially in respect to one matter, namely, that the Isthmus of Panama extends east and west and not north and south. Most of us have to glue our eyes to the map for some time before we can take in the fact that in going from the Atlantic entrance to the Pacific exit one travels in a southeasterly direction. The City of Panama on the Atlantic side, is so situated that the sun actually rises over the Pacific Ocean.

Our boat arrived too late to enable us to catch the early evening train for Panama and we remained in Colon all night, staying at the beautiful Washington Hotel, which is indirectly owned by the United States Government and operated by the Commissary Department of the Canal Zone. This hotel is said to have cost over a half million dollars and is set down as one of the finest hostelries in Latin America. Bright and early the next morning we took train for the other side of the Isthmus. The railroad follows generally alongside the Canal and as we found such points of interest as the Gatun Locks, Culebra Cut, the Pedro Miguel and Miraflores Locks, Mr. Richardson, the Y. M. C. A. Secretary for the Canal Zone, who sat beside Mr. Truman and me, explained the what and the why of things in a most interesting way. I shall not take space in this letter to write of the Canal itself, but will hope to devote an entire chapter to it at a later time. I have seen it and its wonderful workings from various angles and at several points, but as yet have had no opportunity to actually make the trip through the locks, a privilege that has so far been vouchsafed to no one in our party. Imagine the jealousy that fills our souls as we listened just this morning to the taunting story told by President A. McLean of the Foreign Society, Secretary and Mrs. G. W. Muckley of the Church Extension Society, Dr. Irene Myers of Transylvania College and a party of fifteen, whose steamer arrived at Colon yesterday and who by some luck or providence made the trip from the Atlantic entrance as far as Gatun in a little boat that passed through the three great locks at Gatun, raising them eighty-five feet above the level of the sea.

I am not going to write of the Canal until I have gotten even with these people by making that same trip myself—or one just a little bit better.

Settled at last in the beautiful Tivoli Hotel at Panama, we find ourselves amazed and thrilled at the wonderful things we hear and see from day to day. The first surprise is the weather and the delightful habitableness of the Isthmus. Except for two or three hours at the middle of the day the temperature is very comfortable and the noon hours are not more oppressive than one experiences in many a protracted "hot spell" in our northern summer time. This, of course, is the dry season down here and the air is said to have more tang in it than in the wet season when the breezes are less friendly and the humidity especially oppressive. At any rate a blanket or two on your bed at night does not come in amiss. It is interesting to note how almost universally the siesta is observed at the noon hours among all save those who work with their hands. Banks and many stores close from 11:30 a. m. to 2 p. m. The administrative offices of the U. S. Government close also and heads of departments and clerks take their little nap after lunch. We visitors have been advised that this practice is the best economy and have fallen into it without any protest. The Congress sessions are timed to allow for the siesta, the morning sessions closing at 11:30 and the afternoon sessions taking up at 3:30.

Of course when one speaks of the habitableness of the Isthmus, it leads at once to the story of the triumphs of Colonel Gorgas and the Sanitation Department of the U. S. Army in ridding this pest-smitten portion of the world of disease. It is a story that has been told many times, but the magic of it and the awe with which one listens to it do not wear away. The strip of land, ten miles wide, running through the Isthmus, in which is situated the Canal, is owned by the United States. This strip, however, includes but a portion of the cities of Colon and Panama. But the treaty with the Republic of Panama gives into Uncle Sam's absolute control the sanitation of the whole of these cities. Before any digging on the Canal was begun, a systematic attack was made on the innumerable army of mosquitoes which had been found to be the cause of yellow fever by carrying the disease from an afflicted to a sound person. By draining off all puddles of water in the cities into the sewerage system which the U. S. Government had installed and connected with every house in Colon and Panama, and by covering the swampy places throughout the Zone with kerosene oil, the mosquito was absolutely annihilated. I have not seen, nor heard nor felt one of these friends of our northern summertime since I came here, nor have I heard of any person who has met with one. The sanitary regulations are enforced with unrelenting vigilance and as a result the death rate on the Isthmus is no higher than in the United States. There has not been a case of yellow fever in the Canal Zone since 1905. In 1910 the death rate among 50,802 employes of both colors in the Zone was 10.98 per thousand; in 1911, among 48,876, it was 11.02, a rate lower than prevails in most American and European cities. This represented a drop from about 90 per thousand in the days before Colonel Gorgas began his work. Among American white employes and their families the death rate is now about 6 or 7 per thousand. When we recall that it was primarily not lack of engineering genius nor financial resources but yellow fever that for three times defeated the earlier French attempts to build the Canal, the glory of the United States in overcoming this foe is certainly no less than the glory inhering in the marvelous engineering achievement of constructing the Canal itself.

The Panamanians are the native creoles of Spanish and Indian blood. The negroes were brought here by General Goethals from Jamaica and other islands of the West Indies when he found out how incompetent native labor proved itself to be. These negroes are superior in many points to our North American negroes. They are better educated and have somewhat higher standards of living. Religiously they are likely to belong to the church of England which has several strong congregations here, though the Wesleyans and Baptists are also strong among them.

After preaching to a union church of Americans last Sunday morning at Gatun, I returned to Panama for the evening and preached to a congregation of nearly a thousand colored people—a Baptist church. The experience was intensely interesting and revealing. The house was packed, the edge of the platform being used also for sittings. Such singing! A hymn of a dozen stanzas would be sung through without the omission of a single stanza. They would take their hymns at a drawling "tempo" that gave a chance for some members of the large choir to improvise some extra harmony on their own account! It took twelve minutes to sing "How Firm a Foundation," but it was worth it! I do not think these voices are as lyrical and smooth as our own negroes' voices, but they are fully equal in vigor. Probably there is less emotional expression than among the northern negroes also. At one point in my sermon I was pressing my point for a verdict right there and then. I explained that they need not answer publicly, but only in the quiet of their own souls whether the point I was making was not the truth. Afterward their minister, speaking of their great emotional control as compared with the northern colored people, said I need have had no fear that they would answer aloud. They never make the responses which we have been accustomed to expect. They sit as unmoved in their places as if they were a high church Episcopal congregation on the North Shore or Fifth Avenue.

These colored people do most of the labor on the Canal, drive the little old-fashioned buggies, called "coaches," which seem to be the most ubiquitous thing in the city and which make getting around a very inexpensive pleasure, and the most capable of them are the carpenters and tradesmen of the Isthmus. They live in pretty close quarters, but not so close as the quarters inhabitated by their dark brothers of the "black belt" in Chicago, and not one-tenth so squalid.

The American colony lives by itself in houses constructed and owned by the government and furnished rent free. The building of the two communities called Ancon and Balboa, respectively, just outside of Panama City, for the habitation of the American employes of the Canal Commission, is not the least of Uncle Sam's achievements on the Isthmus. The population of Balboa alone is said to be about 3,000. The town has a high-school as well as grade schools, operated by the government and manned by high school teachers from American colleges. The beautiful Administration Building is in Balboa. Here Governor Goethals has his office and from here all administrative functions proceed. Many of the homes in Balboa are being opened to Congress delegates, as the hotel is having difficulty in making room for all. Among these homes is that of Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Nutting, where President McLean, the Pauls and the Muckleys are being entertained, and where the Visitor also was graciously invited to make his home during the Congress. Only the fear that the allurements of such fellowship would tempt me from my duties during the strenuous days that lie before us kept me from taking advantage of the hospitality of this loyal Disciple household. Mr and Mrs. Nutting are very influential members of the American community, leaders in the Union Church and among the most responsible of the local committee having in charge the entertainment of the Congress.

And now I must close this already too long letter without having said a word about the Congress itself. That is the thing with which our thoughts are most concerned. As the hour of its opening draws nigh the fears and doubts of many hearts are being dispelled. Hindrances seem to be providentially removed one by one. A spirit of deep prayerfulness pervades the hotel where we are staying and where the sessions are to be held, and any one even with a faith no larger than a mustard seed can feel that it is God's purpose to bring forth from this gathering results which will profoundly reshape the religious life of the Western Hemisphere.

Neighborhood Playgrounds.

Neighborhood playgrounds under the direction of play leaders were maintained in 432 American cities during the year ending November 1, 1915, according to the annual report of the Playground and Recreation Association of America. The number of new playgrounds obtained was nearly 1,000, bringing the total number up to 3294. More than 100 cities employ 1,053 play leaders throughout the year. Last year the expenditures reported in the cities of America were $4,066,377.

A CONFERENCE ON CHURCH PUBLICITY.

A conference on publicity for the church was held in the Woman's Temple of Chicago, February 25. The meetings were arranged by the Educational Committee of the Chicago Advertising Association. This organization has erected a large building on Madison street in the loop and maintains a club fellowship there. W. Frank McClure, Publicity Director of the Redpath Lyceum Bureau and of the Redpath Chautauquas, was entrusted with the arrangement of the conference.

Rev. Fred A. Moore, pastor of the Church of the Redeemer (Universalist), spoke on "Making Sure We Have Something to Advertise." He insisted that it was the goods of merit only that justified an advertising campaign. Rev. William E. Barton, of First Congregational church, Oak Park, spoke on the topic of "Advertising to Fill a Church." He told the story of changing from a vesper service to an evening service, supported by a publicity program. He advocated a generous use of the newspapers both to carry sermon extracts and to disseminate the news of the church.

Rev. Paul B. Jenkins, chairman of the Publicity Committee of the Milwaukee Federation of Churches, told of efforts there at community advertising. Between twelve and fourteen thousand dollars has been spent in union advertising by the churches of that city and many of the saloons closed on a "Go-to-Church" Sunday. One saloon displayed this sign: "This saloon has gone to church."

Rev. W. B. Norton, Religious Editor of the Chicago Tribune, gave an address on "How Churches May Secure Larger News Publicity." He showed how some churches were on the alert to provide information to the newspapers while others never send any news in and thus the papers do not learn of the news until it is too old to print. He explained the reasons for the great publicity given the Roman Catholics. Their priests are protected from scandalous writeups in the paper by the church acting unitedly against the offending newspaper. He showed how Christian Scientists uniformly refused to be interviewed and referred all inquiries to their publicity man.

Rev. Charles Stelzle, of New York, is an advocate of general advertising. He believes the church must lay out a program lasting for years. He advocated having a layman manage the advertising in a church as opposed to Dr. Reisner who takes care of his own.

Dr. Christian F. Reisner, of Grace M. E. church, of New York, was the most electric personality in the conference. He uses moving pictures, distributes roses and apples, has Sunday evening socials and does many unconventional things. He has paid off the debt on a downtown church and fills it on Sunday evening. His unconventionality is shown by his printing a rooster on certain church advertising and having the boys guess its purpose there for a prize of a dollar.

Some speakers sounded the note of dignity and reverence in a publicity campaign. Carl Hunt, editor of the magazine "Associated Advertising," counseled against the use of certain kinds of advertising.

The use of a parade of all the Sunday-schools in a suburb was advocated by one speaker. Another speaker laid great stress on the use of a carefully prepared mailing list. Practically all the great methods of publicity were discussed as they apply to the church.

Mr. James Keeley, editor of the Chicago Herald, spoke in the evening. He told the preachers that when they made the people talk about religion he would print it. He held an open forum on the relation of the newspaper and the church. Among the questions he raised was, why preachers so seldom visited newspaper offices.

Mr. John Temple Graves was also in the city and he told the preachers they had their sins as well as the editors. He hailed the dawn of a new era when church and press should work together for righteousness.

The conference drew the young men and the live wire men of the city. The push and enterprise of business is about to be put into religion. Mr. James Keeley declared the biggest piece of religious news in a year in Chicago was this conference. With this statement most of the ministers are in hearty accord.

Cook County Sunday School Association Will Meet.

The Sunday-school interests of larger Chicago will be represented in an annual convention to be held April 6 and 7. Among the speakers will be William T. Ellis, world statesman and newspaper man. William C. Pearce will tell of the progress he has made in organizing 500 Adult Bible classes of one hundred men each, throughout the nation. A noon luncheon will be held when Mr. Ellis will speak on "Hard-headedness and World-mindedness."

Raymond Robins Evangelizes.

Raymond Robins is now in the work of social evangelism. He recently held meetings in the University of Texas in which "the commercial aspect was as insignificant as it is in well-bred hospitality." He did not report the number of souls "saved," but instead announced at the close of meetings that "412 university students had professed themselves as having caught a new vision of social and industrial righteousness."

Rockefeller Foundation in China.

The Rockefeller Foundation is undertaking to raise the standard of medical education for China. Through the influence of the foundation some schools are being closed and others better equipped. Rev. W. E. Macklin, a Disciple missionary, writing in the Public, a single tax journal, deplores the use of Standard oil funds for such purpose, declaring that the Chinese in the end will be entirely out of accord with the corporations that are even now exploiting them. The medical school of the union university in Nanking has been closed by the influence of the foundation.

Meditations of a Pastor

BY GEORGE A. CAMPBELL

Three Significant Letters

NUMBER ONE.

A Downtown Pastorate.

My Dear Campbell:

I well remember that when I was considering the call to this church four years ago you cautioned me as to the difficulties of a downtown church. Many times since I have had occasion to appreciate your words of wisdom when the battle pressed me sorely. The problem at Central, Denver, must be somewhat similar to that of Central here, though, perhaps, not so acute. I am more than holding my own here. We have had 120 additions at regular services since the first of last January, and my fourth year here will be by all odds my best. Yet the gain has literally cost me my life—that is my intellectual life, and almost my spiritual life, for I have had time neither to read nor pray. How much longer I can stand this terrible grind, or how much longer I ought to stand it, is a problem.

You have always stood so high in my estimation, and I value your judgment so highly that I earnestly covet your advice in this matter, when it is convenient for you to drop me a line. If I could only have my mornings to myself I could bear up more heroically. But the phone, the caller, the constant revision of the roll, the numberless details of management of a scattered congregation simply swamp one. I fear my pulpit work must suffer if I continue at this rate much longer. Should I decide to make a change you would be of great service to me. With very best wishes, I am,

Very fraternally yours,

P. S.—On an average 15 families move each month. I must keep up with them.

In part, I answered as follows:

I was indeed glad to hear of your work. It is about as I thought it would be, a grind and a struggle to make any great gain. It is a noble work, however. The sacrifice intellectually may not be as great as you think. People may be studied as advantageously as books. And perhaps while serving the multitudes you are building yourself up spiritually—more so, maybe, than if you were more secluded.

It is hard, however, to advise another. I am inclined to stay with the work in hand. The best of us cannot do much in life. There are no places of ideal conditions. The pull earthward is everywhere. But I do not know. I have known several of our preachers to break down. Four I have known to go utterly to pieces in city pastorates. We can talk burdens and duty too much. The soul can only stand so much. If you ever want my help to change, please let me know. I may be able to do a little. I wish you well. With best regards to all yours, I am,

Very truly yours,
George A. Campbell.

NUMBER TWO.

Not a Union Church: But a Union Pastor.

Hamilton, Mo.

Dear Brother Campbell:

I am quite sure that you will be surprised to get a letter from me, but I hope to make it clear why I have imposed upon your time.

I am so pleased with my work here, and the possibilities for the future, that I feel that I want to write to you and tell you all about our plan of co-operation.

Both of the above churches have always been full-time churches and would still be were it not for this present arrangement.

Here is the story: Last spring, the pastor of the Congregational church resigned to take up work in St. Louis, Mo. In looking about for a pastor a member of the Congregational church suggested to his church that they call me and ask my church to let me divide my time with them. After talking the matter over at some length they came to me with the proposition. Well, I arranged for a union service at the Congregational church the next Sunday and we certainly had a great feast of good fellowship.

Then, each congregation met and talked the matter over. Then, each official board met and went over the whole ground. Then, no one finding any objection to the plan, the two boards met in a joint board meeting. It was at this last meeting that the contract was signed. In all the voting there was not one vote against it. The co-operation began with my church year, October 1, 1915. Under the contract I am to preach one Sunday in the Congregational church and the next in the Christian church, and so on. Then, our mid-week services are held the same way. But all of the rest of the church work is kept separate. The Congregationalists are talking now about a Bible-school union.

I was sent by the Congregational church to the State Conference of the Congregational Churches of Missouri, last month. They gave me a most hearty welcome and treated me with every courtesy. I was a member of the council that examined a candidate for the ministry.

With kindest regards, I am, I assure you,

Yours fraternally,
Fred Condit.

This situation at Hamilton is most interesting. Not every minister could have brought these two churches under one pastorate. Mr. Condit is broadly human.

Denominationalism is not final. The Lord's people are not satisfied with the duplication of ministers. Dissatisfaction with the thoughtful is universal. The remedy, as yet, is not clearly discerned. There will be many experiments; and with these all forward-looking men ought to be most sympathetic. Mr. Condit will meet some details not easy of solution, but that he is dealing with one of the great problems is to his credit.

Mr. Speer says in one of his addresses on Christian union that the greatest barrier today to union is the Christian conscience. How can we have a conscience loyal to truth, and at the same time inclusive? That is the crux of the whole matter.

NUMBER THREE.

Finding Out About a Preacher.

January 27, 1916.

Secretary Chamber of Commerce,
Hannibal, Mo.

I am going to ask you to do me a kindness, which I feel sure you will do, and that you will treat this letter as strictly confidential.

Please give me, after investigation quietly made, how Mr. —— stands in your city, as a man, as a minister and as a business man. Does he stand well with the people outside of his church as well as in it? Does he pay his debts promptly, and is his reputation good?

What about the size and kind of family—number of children, age and sex?

Is he considered in his town as a high grade preacher? Does he appear well in the pulpit, and is he a good speaker? Does he do efficient pastoral work? How long has he been in your city, and has the church grown since his pastorate?

Does he appear well in public outside of his pastoral work? Now, all these questions will take considerable of your time, but I will appreciate this favor if you will give me this information. I would not like to have just a general reply, but a detailed reply, as it is a very important matter and some day maybe I can return this kindness.

Yours very truly,

President.

The good churches are more and more seeking full information before they call their ministers. Commercial Club information is a good substitute for the religious paper write-up and the easily secured letter of recommendation from the brother-preacher.

This letter suggests a true conception of the minister. He is not simply the pastor of a church; but he is a citizen of the community. He belongs in a sense to the whole city. The Commercial Club wanted a minister liked by those of churches other than his own, and those of no church. Such a man's ministry will be founded on a catholic conception of Christianity and on broadly human sympathies, rather than a narrow denominational basis. To be true to all men in their deep needs and their perpetual perplexities and struggles should be the ideal of every minister of the brotherly Christ.

Hannibal, Mo.

MYSTICISM.

Mysticism is being discussed as the type of religion best suited for the modern temperament. It is the inward experience of God's presence, the consciousness of God as a great spiritual reality in immediate relationship with the soul. It is what Tennyson expresses in the often quoted lines:

"Speak to him though, for he hears, and Spirit with spirit can meet—Closer is he than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet."

The word mysticism is undoubtedly used in other senses, many of them purely trivial and wholly misleading. "When we examine,' says Bishop D'Arcy, "the records of the great mystics, we shall find that the essence of their doctrine and practice is just the conviction that it is possible for man to enjoy the Divine presence in actual spiritual experience. Many profoundly interesting and important investigations of this subject have been made recently, and it is not too much to say that there is a growing belief in the deeper minds amongst our theological and philosophical thinkers that here is to be found the true center of the religious life of mankind. In my belief it is possible for the human soul to enter into spiritual relationship with God, and to be aware of this as a real experience. I believe that here is to be found the essence of all true prayer and of the whole inner religious life."—The Churchman.

PHILIP AND THE ETHIOPIAN.

Lesson for March 19.

Golden Text: Understandest thou what thou readest? Acts 8:30b.

Lesson Acts 8:26-40. Memorize verses 28-31.

(26) But an angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go toward the south unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza; the same is desert. (27) And he arose and went: and behold, a man of Ethiopia, a eunuch of great authority under Candace, queen of the Ethiopians, who was over all her treasure, who had come to Jerusalem to worship; (28) and he was returning and sitting in his chariot, and was reading the prophet Isaiah. (29) And the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot. (30) And Philip ran to him, and heard him reading Isaiah the prophet, and said, Understandest thou what thou readest? (31) And he said, How can I, except some one shall guide me? And he besought Philip to come up and sit with him. (32) Now the passage of the scripture which he was reading was this,

He was led as a sheep to the slaughter;
And as a lamb before his shearer is dumb,
So he openeth not his mouth;
(33) In his humiliation his judgment was taken away:
His generation who shall declare?
For his life is taken from the earth.

(34) And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other? (35) And Philip opened his mouth, and beginning from this scripture, preached unto him Jesus. (36) And as they went on the way, they came unto a certain water; and the eunuch saith, Behold, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? (38) And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they both went down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. (39) And when they came up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip; and the eunuch saw him no more, for he went on his way rejoicing. (40) But Philip was found at Azotus: and passing through he preached the gospel to all the cities till he came to Caesarea.

VERSE BY VERSE.

26. An angel of the Lord spake unto Philip. The notion of angels in the word of God is confused by the popular conception. A dream, a vision, and some human agent, all these in the Scripture are called God's angels or messengers. We do not know the character of this messenger.—The south. The word has two meanings, as respects time "noon," and locality "The South."—Gaza. About 50 miles southwest of Jerusalem. The same is desert.. An uncultivated plain, pasture land.

27. A man of Ethiopia. Ethiopia is the name of the lands lying south of Egypt. This was a man from that region.—Candace. A title of distinction, like Pharaoh in Egypt and Caesar at Rome. It was not a proper name.—Treasure. It is a Persian word and only found in this verse.—To worship. He was either a heathen converted to Judaism or a Jew living in that country, and in either case he would come to Jerusalem to worship.

28. He was returning. From Jerusalem where he had been to worship. He doubtless heard much about Jesus in the city.—Sitting in his chariot. Common method of travel among men of authority.—Was reading the prophet Isaiah. It may have been that his attention had been called to this while in Jerusalem, in relation to the life of Jesus.

29. The Spirit said. The message came as a divine impulse.—Join thyself. The verb means to glue or cement, and implies that Philip forced himself upon the traveler in this case. Was urgent in the matter. By the authority of the Spirit.

30. Understandest thou what thou readest. The Greek indicates a doubt on the part of Philip. The play upon the words cannot be translated in English.

31. How can I? The question is so put as to imply a negative. How can any one understand until he is guided?

32. The passage of the scripture. The contents of the passage would give us a better meaning.—A sheep to the slaughter. Jesus was gentle in life, and submissive in death.—Opened not his mouth. A vivid description of our Lord's silent submission to sentence and death.

33. His humiliation. The humiliation of his sufferings.—His judgment was taken away. A right due him. A fair trial, justice.—Generation. His contemporaries.—Who shall declare? Who shall declare their wickedness? He has gone from the earth.

34. The prophet. Isaiah. The way to receive knowledge is to ask for it.

35. Opened his mouth. An expression indicating a solemn and important announcement, not spoken by chance; but deliberation.—Preached unto him Jesus. He told how Jesus fulfilled this prophecy, and by his death provided a way of salvation.

36. What doth hinder me to be baptized? He may have seen the rite in Jerusalem and desired to do as other Christians when he had discussed the matter with Philip.

39. Caught away. Just as he was led to join the chariot he now was led to go quickly to Azotus.—For he went on his way rejoicing. "For" introduces the reason for not seeing Philip: he went his own way and did not look for him.

40. Azotus. Ashdod. Ten or twenty miles north of Gaza. Here he was found preaching.

A Faithful Disciple

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

It was not the Apostles, but the disciples, the rank and file of the church, who were scattered abroad and who went everywhere preaching the Word. The task of witnessing for Christ does not fall upon the leaders of the church only, but every member is expected to go everywhere preaching Jesus. In the daily tasks of life Philip was one of the disciples who knew the way of salvation well enough to lead others to him. One of the aims of modern religious education is to equip every soul with power to win men to a conscious knowledge of God "whom to know aright is life eternal." This story should be an inspiration to every disciple who desires to be of service to his fellows and a glory to God the Father.

Personal work is a kind of work that counts. It is the kind of work our churches need, and just the kind of thing our members are neglecting in the work of the church. It is much easier, they think, to pay some professional evangelist to come and do the work for them. It is easier to give money than self. What our Lord wants is a living sacrifice for the upbuilding of the kingdom. We may be reasonably certain that the world will not be won until more personal work is done in its behalf. We must learn how to deal with the individual as well as with the mass. This power comes to one who lives in fellowship with God and man.

Philip was obedient to the Heavenly voice. He was preaching to the people in Samaria, when the Spirit called him south. The exact place was not stated, but obeying the best within him he went on his way, like the heroes of our last Sunday's lesson, trusting and hopeful. This same Spirit bade him to "glue" himself to the chariot. He did not ask himself for the reasons, but obeyed. Like Paul he was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision, and there came to the Ethiopian's heart the intense desire for that which Philip had to give. Both men were in earnest and results could be expected at once. The preaching of Philip brought the Eunuch into living touch with Christ, and he obeyed at once the light he had. Such conduct toward Jesus would send any man on his way rejoicing.

Do we understand the Scriptures? Are we spiritual kinsmen of the Ethiopian? He did not understand and was willing and anxious to be taught. If this mind is in us the foundation for Bible knowledge and spiritual power has been well made. The Bible is the revelation of God to us when it reveals God to us and not until then. Unless our Bibles find us they are of no practical value in our Christian life. In the highest part of Hong Kong during three months of the year a damp fog settles and deposits a blue mold over everything not in daily use. If we lived in that region, would there be any blue mold on our Bibles?

"IN EVERYTHING."

Am I to thank God for everything? Am I to thank him for bereavement, for pain, for poverty, for toil? Must I lift up my hands over my dead and say: "Father, I thank thee that thou hast taken away my friend?" Is it pleasing to my father that loss should be pleasant to me? Is it good that I should be told to "give thanks in everything?" Be still, my soul, thou hast misread the message. It is not to give thanks FOR everything, but to give thanks IN everything. It is not to praise God for the night, but to bless him that the night is not deeper. I have read of the son of man that he gave thanks over the symbol of his broken body. Not for the pain, but for the mitigation of pain, did the son of man give thanks; not that his body was broken, but that it was broken for ME. In thine hour of sorrow give thanks like Jesus.—George Matheson.

More Christian Fellowship at Paris, Ill.

It will be remembered that last spring, when H. H. Peters, pastor at Paris, Ill., came to a Chicago hospital for his health, his brother ministers at Paris supplied his pulpit. Now, O. L. Thompson, of the Methodist Protestant church, Paris, has come to the same Chicago sanitarium and on a recent Sunday Mr. Peters took his entire congregation over to the church of the stricken pastor and held service. Other pastors will serve their town in this good work. Of course there are many brands of "Christian comity," but this Paris, Ill., brand strikes the average layman as being about the genuine article.

Dr. Breeden on "Baptism."

During his recent series of meetings held at Fresno., Cal., Dr. H. O. Breeden discussed "Baptism." The following statement is quoted from this sermon: "Baptism is a profound spiritual experience when linked with faith and repentance; when not so linked it is meaningless. As a spiritual experience, as a response to the command of Christ, as an evidence of loyalty to him it is vital, essential, the crowning act of turning to God. It is the culmination of a vital process. Baptism does not wash away sins or regenerate the soul but as the crowning symbolism to God it is profoundly significant. Christian baptism is to be baptized into Christ, into his death, henceforth to be linked with him in his glorified life."

Reception to Dr. Finis Idleman.

Central church, New York City, will give a welcome reception on the evening of March 9 to Finis Idleman, the new pastor. Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, of the Broadway Tabernacle, will extend greetings, and there will be a musical program. Since January 1, when Dr. Idleman came to Central church, a number of innovations have been made and the congregations have largely increased in size. The triangle meeting on Wednesday evenings is a splendid solution of the midweek meeting, combining sociability, prayer and praise and a business meeting of all the societies of the church.

Dr. Medbury Addresses Des Moines Rotary Club on "Preparedness."

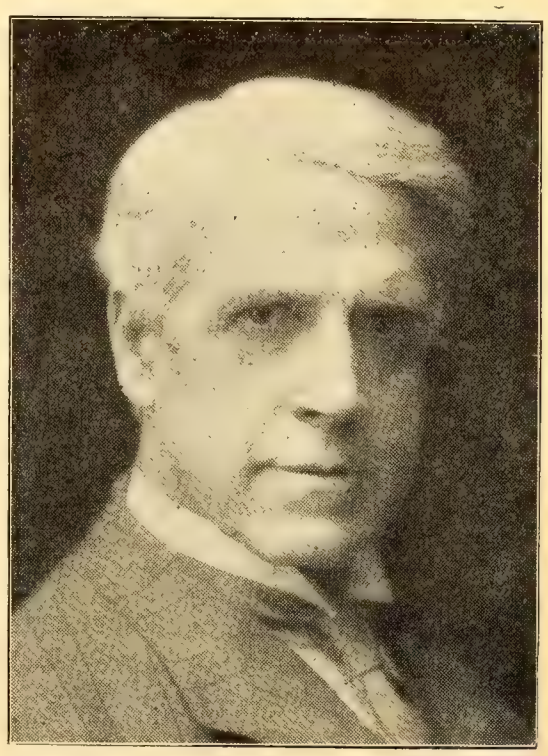
The Des Moines papers comment enthusiastically upon the address of Dr. Charles S. Medbury, of University Place church, delivered before the local Rotary Club. The Des Moines Register says: "The tremendous earnestness of the man, his complete frankness of statement, beauty of diction, and absence of bitterness in criticism of those who take the opposite view all combined to give the address the character of true eloquence. That it created a profound impression was evident from the storm of applause which amounted to an ovation. Dr. Medbury made earnest protest against the terminology employed by advocates of preparedness, which by implication accuses opponents of increased military expenditures of lack of patriotism. He quoted freely from newspaper editorials and addresses to show the widespread feeling that acceptance of President Wilson's program simply is a matter of patriotic duty. He also vigorously assailed the phrase 'Peace at any price.' declaring that no American citizen would even think of such a thing as purchasing peace at the price of self-respect or honor."

For a Christian Church College at Lawrence, Kan.

Ways and means for organizing a state college of the Christian church at Lawrence, in connection with the university of Kansas, were considered at a recent committee conference in Hutchinson. The last state convention of the church appointed a special committee to consider the enlargement of the chair now maintained at the state university, and the establishing of a real college there. The committee consists of O. L. Cook, of Topeka, chairman; Dr. Arthur Braden, instructor in Bible at the state university; George O. Foster, registrar at the state university; I. W. Gill, of Wichita; A. E. Asher, Dr. J. W. Young, and M. Lee Sorey, of Hutchinson. This committee met in Hutchinson at the First church study. The plan outlined by this committee for establishment of the college at Lawrence will be presented to the State Ministerial association, at the convention in Topeka in March, for approval. If ratified, it will then be formally proposed to the national meeting of the C. W. B. M., which organization manages the Bible chairs at the state universities of six or seven states, including Kansas.

Jacksonville, Ill., Central Makes Excellent Reports.

M. L. Pontius has not been at Central church, Jacksonville, Ill., a long while, but the reports of last year's work indicate that his efforts there are being crowned with success. During the year there were 103 additions, 69 baptisms. Loss by death, 22; letters granted, 43, making a net gain of 38. Enrollment in the Bible-school about 1,100—900 in the main school, and about 200 in the Home Department and on the Cradle Roll. Money raised by the church (not including Bible-school, Aid Societies or C. W. B. M.), etc., $8,579.27. Of this amount $1,460.63 was for missions and benevolences; $6,560.22 for current expenses, and the remainder for special work at home. The budget for 1916 is $7,000 for current expenses and local work, $2,500 for missions and benevolences.



Y. M. C. A. Man Wins as Wellsville, N. Y., Pastor.

Herbert Yeuell writes enthusiastically of William A. Young, pastor at Wellsville, N. Y., in which church Mr. Yeuell has just closed a successful revival. The pastor was formerly a Y. M. C. A. leader, and has remarkably successful. Mr. Young speaks The institutional work in this church is remarkably successful. Mr. Young, speaking of Mr. Yeuell as an evangelistic yokefellow in the following terms: "Evangelist Herbert Yeuell in his experienced leadership, with tact, determination, and a thorough diagnosis of the situation laid the plans for the campaign in a most masterful way. Words of praise were heard by not only members of our church, but outsiders as well, of the scholarly, clear-cut, and instructive manner in which Mr. Yeuell delivered his sermons night after night." Eighty-one additions were added during the meetings, the larger part of which were adults, mostly men and young men.

On Taking the Offering

A. McLean.

If ample preparation has been made taking the offering will be a delight to all concerned. The minister and people will be in an expectant and joyful mood. Because of the work already done, they will be satisfied that the offering is going to be tremendously worth while. They will feel as they do when a mortgage is going to be burned or when a house of worship is to be dedicated. They will enter the church with thanksgiving and praise. Assuming that the most careful and conscientious preparation has been made, it is suggested that the services of the day proceed somewhat as follows:

1. Prayer should be offered for the blessing of God on the work and on the workers. The term "workers" should include all at home who are interested and who support the work with their intercessions, their sympathies, and their money, as well as those out on the field. The prayer should stress the offering and cause all to realize that what they give is given to Christ and for the furtherance of his grace.

2. The offering should have its proper place in the sermon. The people should be told again about the work, its nature, its extent and its needs. They should be made to feel that they are asked to do something that will honor and bless their Lord. If there should be strangers and non-Christians present they should be made to understand the dignity and the glory and the fruitfulness of the work. It is simply the carrying on to completion what Christ began to do and to teach in the days of the flesh. It is the consummation of the purpose of God as seen in the incarnation, in the crucifixion, in the resurrection and in the ascension of our Lord.

3. The hymns should relate to the subject. If some of the great hymns of the church appropriate to the occasion are sung, that will help the people to give liberally and joyously. If the choir should render a special number, it should be something that has to do with the principal thing in the work and worship of the day.

4. At the Lord's Table emphasis should be laid on the gift of God to a lost world, and the sacrifice of Christ for the world's redemption, and those who eat the bread and drink the cup can be informed as to what they can do that Christ may see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied. Something may be said about those at home having fellowship with those who have left home and are at work in the regions beyond.

5. The announcements before the offering should make it perfectly clear that the cause of Missions is not a charity or an optional matter with redeemed souls; that the evangelization of the world is a divine enterprise; that the work of missions is the most influential and enduring work that is being done in this day of great enterprises; that this work stands in the front rank of all the duties that the church has to fulfil.

6. Before the officers go out to receive the offering they should be supplied with envelopes and pencils for the accommodation of such as have not been reached in the preparation. There should be no haste in taking the offering. Every one present should have an opportunity to give and should be made to feel that he is ennobled to give. If, while the offering is being taken, the minister will quote appropriate passages of Scripture, that will help very much.

Bible-school Field Workers Meet in Conference at Lexington, Ky.

Thirty states were represented at the conference of Bible-school field workers held at Lexington, Ky., early in February. The following representatives were present: Robt. M. Hopkins, W. J. Clarke, Miss Hazel A. Lewis, of the A. C. M. S.; Frank James, of the Southeast District; S. W. Hutton, of the Southwest District; Miss Katherine Staub, of the Northeast District; W. H. McLain, of Ohio; Garry L. Cook, of Indiana; W. E. Frazee, Roy K. Roadruck and Mrs. Asbury, of Kentucky; Miss Lucy King De Moss, of the Foreign Society; C. W. Dean, of Colorado; David H. Owen, of Kansas; L. S. Dudley, of Iowa; J. S. Mills, of Missouri; P. H. Moss, of the negro work; E. H. Koch, of Tennessee and Richard Heilbron, of the Christian Board of Publication. Strong addresses were made by Chas. W. Dean, District Superintendent for Colorado, Utah, Nevada, Wyoming and New Mexico; W. C. Bower, of Lexington; Dr. Wade C. Barclay, of the Bible-school department of the Methodist Episcopal church; P. H. Moss, superintendent of Bible-school work among the negroes, and Garry L. Cook, Superintendent of Indiana Bible-school work. This is reported to have been a record meeting in every way.

Kansas City Pastor Addresses Kansas University Students.

The University of Kansas, at Lawrence, maintains a religious service known as "Morning Prayers" at which the attendance of the students and professors is voluntary. Those who come expect a purely religious message. The leader for the week of Feb. 14 was J. B. Hunley, of the Ivanhoe Park church, Kansas City, Mo. He gave the following addresses: "The New Life in Christ;" "The Infusion of Life;" "The Transformation of Life;" "The Transmission of Life;" "The Glorification of Life." "The attendance at these services averaged about one hundred.

Niagara Falls Church Has a "Century" Record.

The annual report of the Church of Christ at Niagara Falls, N. Y., Ira L. Parvin, pastor, shows an even one hundred additions for the year. There were raised in all departments $5,152.43. Of this $1,657.21 was for missions and benevolences. Total balances on hand January 1, 1916, $417.96.

"Visitation Week" at Coshocton, O.

The church at Coshocton, Ohio, under the direction of its pastor, C. H. Hood, recently conducted a visitation week in which there were 96 reported calls. This special effort was a source of much value to the whole church, writes the pastor.

Topeka Church Makes Midweek Service Thrive.

That the midweek service is on the point of being resurrected and galvanized seems indicated by the many reports of successful plans of conducting this service in various churches. I. H. Beckholt, pastor at Central Avenue church, Topeka, Kan., sends in his contribution to this helpful symposium. Here is his testimony: "For some time, we have been having very successful midweek services. We call it the 'Three In One" service for the lack of a better term, because we meet at 7:30 for prayer and praise, led by some organization of the church, followed by personal evangelism led by the pastor and then concluded by twenty to thirty minutes' instruction and drill in parliamentary law. The room being too small in which we have been assembling we will be forced to hold the meetings in the main auditorium." Let other pastors tell of plans being successfully promoted in their churches.

A Week of Preachers and Mid-winter Rally.

A rather novel week of special services was held by the Pontiac, Ill., church, February 13-20. Ernest H. Reed is pastor at Pontiac, and writes that these meetings are a part of the preparatory work leading up to the coming vigorous evangelistic campaign to be conducted by F. B. Thomas, beginning Easter Sunday. On each evening of this special week a different preacher occupied the pulpit. The following is the schedule, as carried out: "Sunday, Feb. 13.—Ernest H. Reed. Morning: "The Ungathered Harvest." Evening: "The Lost Sheep, the Lost Coin, the Lost Boy." Monday, Feb. 14.—W. C. Chapman, Fairbury. "The Uninterrupted Program of Jesus." Tuesday, Feb. 15.—Gilbert W. Zink, Flanagan. "Selling the Soul." Wednesday, Feb. 16.—Alva L. Ragsdale, Kankakee. "The Civil War of a Divided Heart." Thursday, Feb. 17.—Stephen H. Zendt, Bloomington. "The Word of God on Trial." Friday, Feb. 18.—John R. Golden, Bloomington. "The Vision of the Unattainable." Sunday, Feb. 20.—Ernest H. Reed. Morning: "Why Be Identified With the Church." (Combined service.) Evening: "A More Convenient Season." Mr. Reed reports 19 additions as a result of this week's work.

Six Courses in Religious Education at Transylvania College.

The Department of Religious Education of Transylvania College, Lexington, of which Prof. W. C. Bower is the head, is offering six courses of study in this field, as follows: The History and Origin of Religious Education, the Philosophy of Religious Education; the Materials of Religious Education; the Psychology of Religion; the History of Religion, and the laboratory course in observation and criticism. There are now forty students enrolled in this department.

Do you read the label to know whether your baking powder is made from cream of tartar or, on the other hand, from alum or phosphate?

Royal Baking Powder is made from cream of tartar, derived from grapes, and adds to the food only wholesome qualities.

Other baking powders contain alum or phosphate, both of mineral origin, and used as substitutes for cream of tartar because of their cheapness.

ciples. As president of Hiram College, and later of the college at Enid, Okla., he was widely known and appreciated. His view point was essentially conservative, and perhaps for this reason he failed to maintain the educational leadership to which on grounds of opportunity and experience he might have been entitled. Some contributions were made by him to class-room literature, mostly on lines of biblical study, and with little recognition of modern problems. In the fields of promotion of college finances he rendered efficient service to the institutions with which he was connected.

Centralia, Mo., Loses Pastor to Carthage, Mo.

Charles H. Swift, during the four years of his service as pastor of the church at Centralia, Mo., has made a record not only for his work in the church itself, but he has also won the admiration of the community's leaders by his character and personality, and especially by his service for the betterment of municipal conditions. He was the prime mover in procuring city playgrounds for Centralia, and he mingles actively in all municipal affairs. Prof. Alva W. Taylor, of Columbus, Mo., speaks in highest terms of his ability and worth. But for some weeks the church at Carthage, Mo., has been urging Mr. Swift to take up the work there. To their urging he has now yielded and will begin in his new field early in April.

Mitchell, Ind., Dedicates New Church Home.

On February 13, the new and enlarged house of worship at Mitchell, Ind., was dedicated. About $7,500 had been spent upon the house. Special attention was given to a Bible-school building and it is said to be a model of completeness and good taste. The building will now accommodate a school of 700 or 800 in its various departments. The people showed the spirit of devotion and sacrifice as they made their offerings to the work, and while about $4,000 were needed to cover all obligations the subscriptions kept coming in until $4,650 had been received and the day closed with great rejoicing among the people. L. E. Sellers, who led in the dedication, reports that special praise is due the pastor, A. J. Cook, who has led wisely in the work and to his earnest official board who have exhibited superb courage and devotion in bringing the work to completion.

Jefferson City, Mo., Church Still Prospers.

A. R. Liverett, pastor at Jefferson City, Mo., reports sixteen additions during January, a Bible-school attendance of about 500, the installation on Jan 30 of an official board of thirty-three members. An increase of salary indicates the appreciation of this congregation for the pastor.

Death of Mrs. M. M. Lindsey.

The announcement of the demise of Mrs. Martha M. Lindsey nee Davidson, and widow of the pioneer Disciple pastor, John Lindsey, came as a shock to those who have known her for many years. Mrs. Lindsey expired on February 2 at the home of Mrs. Cora Lindsey-Lauder, Eureka, Ill. She was surrounded by her children: Cora, wife of Prof. W. W. Lauder, formerly of Eureka college; Dr. John Clarence Lindsey, of Chicago and Mrs. Della Mae Bidwell of New York City and their families, and her sister, Mrs. N. B. Crawford and Dr. Crawford of Eureka, who were also present. The deceased was eighty-one years of age at the time of her death, which resulted from a severe attack of pneumonia. This noble woman and Christian worker is mourned especially by the members of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, not only in Eureka, but also in Illinois, from the fact that she was secretary of that organization in Illinois for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Lindsey lived successively in Eureka, Ill.; Du Quoin, Ill.; Princeton, Ky.; and St. Joseph, Mo. Mrs. Lindsey was an active worker in the Sunday-schools wherever she lived and also in other religious and temperance organizations and after they returned to Eureka to live, she was elected secretary of the State C. W. B. M. in which capacity she acted for more than fifteen years. The funeral services of Mrs. Lindsey were held at the Eureka church, and were conducted by S. T. Willis, of St. Paul, Minn. Mr. Willis was her pastor for several years while she lived in New York City, with her daughter. B. J. Radford and V. W. Blair also had part in the ceremonies. A brief funeral service also was held at Mrs. Lauder's residence, and conducted by Dr. Herbert L. Willett. The death of John Lindsey, husband of the deceased, occurred twenty-nine years ago.

Boy Scouts Hold Service at Whitesboro, Tex.

—J. J. Tisdall recently resigned at Wilson Ave., Columbus, O., will not take up his new work at Toledo, Norwood church, until the middle of June. Mr. Tisdall is a member of the board of education at Columbus, and there is some important business to be carried through that requires Mr. Tisdall's presence.

—Bruce Brown delivered the annual address for the Masonic lodge at Corona, Cal., on Feb. 17th.

—The death is reported of J. M. Morris, for many years a prominent minister of the Disciples in Oregon and Washington. His death occurred at Eugene, Ore.

—Samuel E. Fisher, pastor at Petersburg, Ill., was presented by his congregation with a gift of $130, at the close of the recent revival there, in which Mr. Fisher did the preaching. J. Wade Seniff led the music. Thirty-eight persons were added to the membership. Ninety names have been added in fourteen months. The church at Petersburg gave $800 last year to work outside the local field, in addition to $2,500 pledged to the Men and Millions Movement. Last year's work was closed with an indebtedness paid and a balance in the treasury.

—J. W. Underwood, pastor at Central church, Anderson, Ind., recently gave an address before the Anderson Ministerial Association on "Mobilizing the Men of the Churches of Anderson."

—B. J. Radford gave some personal reminiscences of Lincoln before the Eureka, Ill., Commercial Club, which met in the lecture room of the church. President H. O. Pritchard also spoke, the college orchestra furnishing music.

—First church, Johnstown, Pa., has canceled the mortgage against their church home, which is one of the finest in the city. All the finances in this field are raised by voluntary contributions.

—At a service held at Fairview, Neb., jail by W. T. McLain and some of the members of his congregation, nine converts to Christianity were one result.

—L. N. D. Wells, pastor at Akron, O., recently delivered a strong sermon on the vice problem. In this sermon the Akron pastor indorsed the city's mayor in his fight against vice.

—Nearly 200 pastors and laymen of the churches of Greater Omaha, Neb. launched an "Each One Win One" campaign at First church, of which Geo. L. Peters is pastor. The aim in this campaign is to win 3,000 converts by Easter.

—George Darsie, pastor at First church, Portland, Ore., has declined the call to First church, Lawrence, Kan., and with his people is now working upon an enlargement plan which includes a new church building.

—Chancellor William Oeschger, of Cotner university, has recently made an extended tour through Kansas, Nebraska and South Dakota.

—W. G. Loucks, until recently at South Akron, O., writes that he is already in his new field, at E. Grand Boulevard church, Detroit, Mich., and is very happy in the work. Mr. Loucks is the first regular pastor this church has employed.

—A. B. Jones, of Liberty, Mo., has donated a large number of his books to the permanent library of the Liberty parsonage.

—S. E. Hendrickson, formerly of Benton, Kan., is now located at Coldwater, same state. Mr. Hendrickson recently preached at Douglass for L. L. Roberts.

—Robert Sellers and the East Main St. church, Elmwood, Ind., recently celebrated the twelfth anniversary of Mr. Sellers' coming to this pulpit. The morning sermon was on the theme, "God With Us.'

—Report comes of the death of R. B. Redd, former superintendent of the Masonic Home, St. Louis, and at his death pastor of the Arrowsmith, Ill., church. Death was due to heart disease.

—B. F. Dailey, for thirteen years pastor of the church at Greenfield, Ind., has sold his country home near Greenfield, and moved to Irvington. Mr. Dailey came to Greenfield twenty-two years ago soon after he left Yale. He was recalled to the pastorate three times after he retired at the end of ten years of continuous service.

—E. F. Daugherty recently addressed the Carlisle, Ind., Masons on "The Philosophy of Masonry."

—The brotherhood of Central church, Des Moines, held a special meeting in anniversary of George A. Jewett's fiftieth year as a member of Central.

—"Fathers' and Sons' Day" was observed by the church at Erie, Kan.

—The Wright brothers dedicated the new building at New London on Feb. 13.

—C. W. Cauble recently delivered a stereopticon lecture at Central church, Indianapolis, on "The Origin and Growth of the Christian Church in Indiana." The meeting was held under the auspices of the Men's Bible-class.

—R. W. Lilley, of Kirksville, Ia., delivered his lecture on "The Mountaineers" at the local high school.

—First church, South Bend, Ind., J. W. Alexander, pastor, has burned the last note on the mortgage held against the fine, new organ now being enjoyed by the congregation.

—First church, Davenport, Ia., has decided to build an addition to the present church home to cost not more than $15,000. The addition will not be made until $5,000 cash has been raised.

—H. G. Connelly and wife, of New Albany, Central church, were recently presented by their congregation with a set of Haviland china.

—The friends of J. W. Allen, at Spokane, Wash., were invited to a reception at his home in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of Mr. Allen's entering the ministry. Mr. Allen was formerly pastor of the Dean Avenue church, in Spokane. He is seventy-three years old, and has lived in Spokane fifteen years.

—L. C. Howe, of the Noblesville, Ind., church, addressed a quiet mass meeting of March Offering Nuggets

—It is better to be safe than to be sorry.

—Do not wait until September 30.

—Do not be the "late" church.

—Do not deceive yourself about the offering.

—Are you putting all the blame of the failure on the church?

—Are you putting all the blame of the failure on the preacher?

—One good way to learn to give is to give.

—The March Offering is the opportunity for the preacher's growth for usefulness.

—Not "next year," nor the year after, but now.

—You cannot serve God and mammon, but you can serve God with mammon.

—Your church will grow up through liberality, or go down for the lack of it.

—You can make your influence for good felt around the world the first Sunday in March.

—Preachers that "make good" help to secure good offerings for missions.

—The practice of the March offering increases the efficiency of the local church.

—To turn failure into success in your local church, try the tonic of a missionary offering.

—A widow who teaches school for a small salary, and provides for two little children and supports a helpless mother, sends $45 as her offering. This is sacrificial.

—Get the money that belongs to God. It is due him and he demands it for the world's redemption.

—The growing, prosperous, useful churches are missionary churches without exception.

—Less for music and more for missions would be a good slogan for some churches.

—The Book speaks as clearly and definitely about missions as it speaks of baptism.

—You try to build a church or pay a church debt in the hardest way—by neglecting the March Offering.

—You cannot interest people in missions when you have only a nominal interest yourself.

Please send as much of the March Offering as is available Monday morning, March 6. The balance may be gathered in the following Sunday, or later. Liberality and promptness are the winning words now.

men held by the local Men's Christian League.

—The new church at Henderson, Texas, was formally dedicated Sunday, February 6, by A. D. Rogers. This congregation is less than a year old, having been organized in May, 1915, during a revival conducted by D. A. Leak, with a charter membership of twenty-seven. This number was increased to 100 in the splendid meeting held by the Brooks-Fitz team last August.

—Mrs. T. R. Ayars, of the Christian Woman's National Benevolent Association, St. Louis, reports that this independent organization has in view a much larger building for the old people and children under the care of the association. Two St. Louis friends, she reports, have subscribed $5,000 each. Over $1,000 has also come in from other states. A brick cottage has recently been given to the association by a resident of St. Louis, a $400 lot by a Massachusetts friend. Twenty-five thousand dollars is needed for the proposed new building.

—An educational campaign will be held at First church, Springfield, Ill., beginning April 1. Miss Eva Lemert, who had such remarkable success at First church, Bloomington, Ill., last year, will lead in the effort. Edgar D. Jones, pastor at Bloomington, reports that Miss Lemert's work is 75 per cent permanent.

—A. W. Connor recently gave a course of three lectures on boys at Heyworth, Ill.

—Bethany Assembly will have a Diamond Contest under the direction of the State W. C. T. U. at the evening session of Temperance Day. This promises to be one of the most attractive sessions of the entire assembly. A Diamond contest draws the best speakers of the land, and some will come from outside the state. July 31 is the date.

—O. L. Cook, pastor at First church, Topeka, Kan., has organized a class in personal evangelism. About 100 persons are enrolled.

—Walter Scott Priest, pastor at Central church, Wichita, Kan., recently gave an address in celebration of Industrial Relations Day.

—First church, Mishawaka, Ind., was damaged by fire with a loss of $1,000.

—Central church, Shreveport, La., recently presented Steiner's great cantata, "The Daughter of Jairus."

—H. H. Harmon, pastor at Lincoln, Neb., First church, preached a strong sermon against so-called "Preparedness" recently.

—F. F. Grim, pastor at Lawrenceburg, Ky., has closed a series of sermons to young people on "What Is Your Purpose in Life?"

—W. T. Hilton recently preached a sermon to working men at Central church, Pueblo, Colo. His theme was, "The Artisan, Minister to Daily Needs."

—Frank L. Jewett, of the Bible Chair at Austin, Tex., reports a total enrollment to date of 195. Seven of the students of the present session have become Christians. The annual Texas Bible Chair banquet was held on February 17, Hugh McLellan, of San Antonio, being chief speaker.

—W. R. Motley, pastor of Central church, Richmond, Ind., aims to make the P. B. A. Class in his school the largest men's class in the state. The Bible-school he accounts the peer of any in the country.

—W. O. Dallas, pastor of the church at Garland, Tex., reports for his school at Garland that it is the leader in that town and often trebling the attendance at both the other schools.

—C. S. Chapman, son of C. C. Chapman, well known Disciple of Southern California, has recently become the superintendent of the Bible-school at Fullerton.

—The Christian Courier, under the new editor, W. M. Williams, is promoting a symposium on the question, "Is the Revival Passing?"

—George P. Lischer, a leader in the printing trade in Springfield, Ill., recently gave an address at First church on the labor movement. Frank W. Allen, pastor at first, will be a guest of the local typographical union some time in the near future.

CLEAR THE TRACK!!!

For the March Offering

Get all three of them out of the way if possible. Big job, but try it. They are not bad men. They are slow, and may bring the train almost to a stand still. It is important that the special, "Christian Progress," has a clear track on March 5th. It is hoped the train will be permitted to run at full speed.

Some March Offering Thinking

—The church that has the March Offering habit is to be congratulated.

—Much depends upon the strong emphatic way the offering is spoken of.

—When sending the offering please give the local name of the church when different from the postoffice.

—Our country is now the money center of the world, let us make it also the Christian center as well.

—It is a good habit to hold a foreign missionary rally in the church the Sunday night before the March Offering.

—We cannot preach a full gospel without preaching missions. Let this be borne in mind during the March Offering season.

—If you want to enlist those not reached in the Every-Member-Canvass, you will have a fine opportunity in the March Offering.

—When speaking of the offering please let there be no apologetic note. Assume that every Christian favors it and go forward.

—Let no church fail to have fellowship in the day's doings.

—Please see that all offerings taken the first Sunday in March are devoted to Foreign Missions.

—Let it be borne in mind that the first Sunday in March has been set apart for that special interest.

—Let us remind ourselves that the churches are asked for only one offering during the whole year for world-wide missions.

—Much depends upon the wise use of March Offering supplies. Use them as intended in their preparation and you will not be disappointed in the results.

—It would be an inspiring thought to know that all the churches were directing their efforts on an offering for world-wide missions the first Sunday in March.

—Many religious bodies that have no special day for Foreign Missions believe they make a mistake in not having.

—If anything should happen to make it impossible to take the offering the first Sunday in March, please give it attention the second Sunday.

—P. H. Welshimer delivered an address before the Kent County Sunday-school Association at Grand Rapids, Mich., on Feb. 28.

—W. E. M. Hackleman is assisting R. A. Doan and other missionary leaders in rallies, beginning February 25.

—Hugh Wayt, pastor at Zanesville, O., has been elected a member of the local Rotary Club.

—C. S. Medbury gave the principal address at the latest dinner of the joint boards of the Kansas City churches.

—A women's class of the First church school, Pasadena, Cal., has inaugurated a nursery to care for the infants and small children during morning services.

—W. H. Boden's class of men, from Nelsonville, O., attended the opening services of the meeting at Indianola church, Columbus, O., in which Mr. Boden is doing the preaching.

—Nine churches at Fort Scott, Kan., are in a simultaneous campaign to gain 10 per cent in membership by Easter. W. Y. Allen has for eight years ministered at Ft. Scott.

—Homer F. Cooke, has been elected secretary and evangelist under the Florida Missionary Society.

—The Greencastle, Ind., church is promoting a series of preaching services in the homes of the members.

—Seven new volunteers for the ministry are reported from North Yakima, Wash.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Volume XXXIII MARCH 9, 1916 Number 10

"Touching a Little on the Future Life"

WITHOUT INJUSTICE TO FACT, ONE MAY SAY THAT IN OUR DAY THE MOTIVES TO CONDUCT DERIVED FROM A BELIEF IN THE LIFE TO COME, AND EVEN THAT BELIEF ITSELF, HAVE RECEDED INTO THE BACKGROUND OF CHRISTIAN THINKING.

Most members of the religious community, if interrogated on the point would affirm some sort of a faith in the future life. But if pressed for more explicit statement, they would be compelled to say that their hope was rather of the conventional and inherited type than personal and vital.

The reasons for this doubtful or indifferent mood are various, most of them the result of the changing conditions of modern life, the wider vision of the universe, and the shifting center of human interest.

It cannot be doubted that for a very large section of the religious community the extension of life in any other time and place is a matter of small concern. To those who are sensitive to the importance assigned to this theme in the past, and to its implicit relations to the Christian faith as a whole, this seems astonishing. Yet it is hardly to be questioned.

If one is sceptical on the subject, he has only to talk with the first half dozen Christians he meets, and after the first surprised and commonplace acknowledgments of something like faith in the life to come are secured, he will find himself groping in vain in the region of their real thinking for any vital interest in the subject.

In simple truth, the average man and woman in the church today, apart from such as have through personal bereavement, or trying experience, been compelled to take refuge in the hope of the greater life, are quite too fully occupied with the world that now is to be much interested in that which is to come.

The world in which we live is enormously larger than that of our fathers. Its spaces have been pushed out on every side, its secrets have been disclosed, its activities multiplied and its attractiveness vastly enhanced.

The new sense of the meaning of the gospel for the present life has also had its effect. The apocalyptic parts of the Scripture on which the saints dwelt with satisfaction in the days of persecution, are all but meaningless to the church today. The hymns that emphasized "the present evil world," such as "The world is very evil, the times are growing late," and "This world's a wilderness of woe," sound remote and unconvincing, and are omitted from the hymnology of the actual working church.

We are neither justifying nor condemning this tendency; we are chronicling the fact.

Futhermore, the reflective mind finds the belief in survival more difficult than once it was. Physiological researches bring nothing of assurance regarding the persistence of the soul. Physical science is wholly silent or sceptical on this theme.

Who that has gone down into the depths of the anaesthetic sleep, feeling the world slipping away from him, and knowing that the work of life and death is presently to be begun by skilled hands among the sensitive and vital tissues of his body, has not seriously asked, in spite of all his resignation, and his calm trust in God, "What if I should never waken?" Nor is it faithlessness, but only a certain unquenchable desire to look facts in the face.

Let us frankly admit that in such moments we do not know. We have great reserves of faith, based on what seem convincing, but we do not know.

But we must also confess that the man and woman of purpose have not found in the conventional program of the future life anything sufficiently stimulating to make it seem worth while. Of course we know the reason for this. To the early Christians, with their narrow limitations of privilege, and their constant fear of persecution it was enough to be assured of a life in which those limitations should be removed, and those persecutions cease. The triumph of the faith was to them the supreme hope. Beyond that, the enjoyment of limitless wealth in a city of gold, and of limitless leisure in a country where the tired body was not summoned incessantly to its galling tasks, was a sufficient picture of heavenly happiness.

We know how ineffective these pictures are today. We have no program of the future life, save what hints of the Master and his first interpreters furnish us. But our own highest thinking attempts to frame for itself some worthful employment for the energies which have been brought to high perfection by discipline here. And not in vain. Yet we have to confess that the conventional description of heaven as a place of endless church services, considering many that we have to endure in this life, is not alluring.

And yet it is precisely this sort of picture with which the average Christian is supplied in those rather unusual moments when any reference is made by sermon or hymn to the life to come. Why should any healthy, purposeful man or woman look forward with pleasure to the future?

We affirm with emphasis that the church has not faced the problem of immortality with anything like recognition of its difficulties, nor has it attempted to supply itself with a wonderful apologetic in the face of the real difficulties which gather around the theme.

Dante and Virgil walked together down the slopes of the place of torment, which corresponded to the theology of that early age. And as the writer of the great Comedy describes the incident, "Thus passed we through the shadows and the rain, with paces slow, touching a little on the future life."

We know far less of the future than Dante and the schoolmen of his day thought they knew. We are not so confident today. Our universe is not the snug little place in which the older theology lived with its three fixed compartments of heaven, earth and hell. Nevertheless, if we are less confident on some points, we have larger grounds of assurance than had they.

Shall we go on to further consideration of this problem, "touching a little on the future life?"

Jesus and Today's Social Needs

BY CHARLES T. PAUL

Editorial Note: Probably no one who heard the address of President Charles T. Paul, of the College of Missions, Indianapolis, Ind., on "The Principles and Spirit of Jesus Essential to Meet the Social Needs of Our Times," will hesitate to place it at the very top of all the great utterances of the Panama Congress. The distinctive thing which characterized Dr. Paul's message was its philosophic interpretation of social conditions in Latin America and in the modern Anglo-Saxon world. At the same time his address carried with it the flavor and atmosphere of Latinity. It was evident that Dr. Paul had drunk deep at sources of Latin American literature. He drew his description of the spiritual condition of the Latin American peoples from statements by their own poets and philosophers, and showed how nothing but the Gospel of Jesus could supply the lack of these peoples which their own greatest interpreters had portrayed. A portion of Dr. Paul's address follows: C. C. M.

SOCIAL concern in some form is the main theme of our contemporary literature, not only in formal treaties on sociology, but drama, fiction and poetry as well. The best books have a way of speaking out what is uppermost in experience. They try to paint things as they are and ought to be. There is no denial of the multitude of reconstructive and redemptive agencies efficiently at work, and the resultant ground for encouragement as to general progress and prospect; but notwithstanding all this, and notwithstanding the unquenchable assurance which burns in the Christian heart that Christ is now achieving and will some day consummate his peaceable victory of universal righteousness in the earth, there is no secret about the fact that thinking men and women in all lands, especially Christians, are viewing much in the present social structure and procedure of even the most advanced nations, with unprecedented disquietude and distrust.

This Congress, from the midst of its survey of a whole group of aspiring peoples, looks out upon a disillusioned world—a world which, however glorious its achievements in the mastery of knowledge and of nature, was never so dissatisfied as now with its social order. The church does not need to inform the world that the very texture and tendency of our modern organized life are shot through with danger, discord and wrong. The world is aware of it only too sadly and well. The evidence is blazoned in letters of blood and fire over the fairest fields of Latin and Teutonic culture. Men and nations know it with that bitter knowledge which has come to them the past year and a half, and which has well nigh stilled the songs of confidence and triumph in what was complacently called Christian civilization.

WHAT THE GREAT WAR MEANS.

What has happened in Europe? Simply this: The problems of home and community, of town and country, of commerce and industry, of capital and labor, of politics and diplomacy, of morals and religion, of nation and world—about which for the past twenty-five years European economists, sociologists and reformers have been lifting their warning, though often conflicting, voices, have leaped into startling combination and consummation in the most brutal war in history.

There is only one way in which the Christian consciousness can conceive and characterize that colossal carnage, namely, that it represents the supreme social failure of European civilization, which let its foremost nations slip from the bonds of brotherhood back into the jungle to kill and to destroy. Not philosophy with its insight and reason, nor science with its discoveries and inventions, nor art with its beauty, nor law with its restraints, nor diplomacy with its finesse, nor literature with its inspirations, nor esthetics with its refinements, nor even religion with its ideals and institutions—not all of these combined availed to prevent the humiliating collapse of the social edifice of two millenniums.

FACING THE TASKS.

We are here as Christian representatives of all the Americas not to celebrate our triumphs, but to face our tasks. We want to see our problems steadily and to see them whole. We should be dishonest if we allowed interest in our particular ecclesiastical system or denomination or any zeal for doctrine, or even our knowledge of the great achievements of Christianity in this hemisphere, to hide from us these great chasms which yawn between the farthest reach of our church activities and certain attitudes, institutions, forces and customs which make for deterioration.

Simple candor as well as clear discernment of duty, compels us to recognize that there are vast zones of our corporate and national life in all parts of the Americas which have not been brought under the influence or control of the principles and spirit of Jesus Christ.

Now in connection with the remedial and redemptive agencies at work two things are very hopeful. In the first place, the social problems of the Americas are seen as needs. To the purely theoretical sociologist society presents simply problems. But a social problem translates itself vitally into the Christian consciousness and program when it is conceived as a social need. There are thousands of Christians whose eyes are open today to the social needs of our times and of our Americas, whose hearts are warm and whose hands are ready to minister to those needs.

CHRIST'S MESSAGE AMPLE DYNAMIC.

The second thing is the conviction that in the life and message of Jesus Christ Christianity possesses an applicable, sufficient and solving dynamic for those needs. This conviction stands behind every minister and social worker in North America. It inspires every evangelical missionary in Latin America. It is the confidence which Jesus himself had when confronting alike the woes of Palestine and the iniquities of Rome.

Jesus taught principles rather than framed laws to meet all possible cases. He was not a legalist, but a redeemer. Not a sociologist, but a revealer. Many ills of his day are not mentioned in his recorded teaching, as for example, slavery. Yet the world recognizes that the application of his teaching and the manifestation of his spirit led to the abolition of slavery in many Christian lands. In pagan countries there was no force strong enough to undo it. Eight of the eleven social sins which Gibbon mentions as destroying Rome have been practically exterminated by Christianity, although they are not even named in the Gospels. We shall look in vain in those Gospels for any reference to some of the crucial social questions of our day.

It is not necessary to presume that they were foreseen by Jesus, but the perennial wonder and power of Christianity consists in this, that we find imbedded in the teachings of Jesus certain principles and manifested therein and through his life a Spirit which, springing from the fountain of eternal reality are seen to have solving reference to the ever shifting forms and phases of social disorder.

FUNDAMENTS OF CHRISTIANITY.

What are some of those principles—the great fundamental truths of Jesus' teachings and what is their bearing on the salient social needs of the present time?

First of all may be mentioned the principle of individual worth.

His thought of the inherent significance and worth of the individual and reverence for personality as such, would be revolutionary if it were carried out in our present industrial system. The great factories have lost sight of men as men. Workmen are numbered rather than named. Or they are collectively named by that producing fragment of their personality which contributes directly to the company's interest, i.e., they are so many "hands."

How shall the discontent that embitters the laborers, enrolls him in the "strike," be removed unless industry can somehow convince him that his rights are reverenced, that this individuality is recognized and that in his labor he has an opportunity to realize himself? And whence shall the desire so to convince him come to industry except from Jesus? Industry can not be anything else but selfish and anti-personal unless it is Christianized.

Immediately complementary to the principle of individual worth in Jusus' teaching is the principle of co-operative solidarity. Though the worth of the individual is infinite, priceless beyond all worlds, it is neither a separate nor a solitary value.

CHRIST AND COMMON LIFE..

How sane and practical is the mission of Jesus in interpreting each single personality in terms of every day contact with others! As a man he realized and expressed his own personality in the same way. If there ever were a person who had a right to live his own life alone, to remain on some mountain of contemplation, to retire into the enjoyment of his sublime and superior consciousness, unreached by the mists and turmoil of the world, it was Jesus Christ. Not so. For do we not see that if he had never mingled with men, if he had never entered into the common life of his generation and thus into the current of the life of mankind, if he had not offered himself in sacrificial service to the world's need, we never would have known him to have the consciousness and character which he revealed?

The crown of our Master's glory, that which clothes him with authority to be humanity's leader is the fact that he, "the mightiest among the holy and the holiest among the mighty," realized and revealed himself in his association with men.

It is in the socialized life, then, that the individual finds at once opportunity to serve his fellow man, and in that very service, and only therein, to exercise and bring to realization all the inherent powers of his own life. To lose ourselves and yet find ourselves: to receive by giving: to die and yet to live eternally: —In this sublime paradox we come upon a great spiritual law, whose working is supremely illustrated in Jesus himself, and which, so far as men, following him, have conformed to it has proved to be the secret of social welfare and progress.

EDUCATION FOR ALL.

Co-operative solidarity means not only community and mutuality of work, but also extension of advantages and privileges. No class, according to this principle, could retain for its own exclusive enjoyment any privilege of physical, moral or mental development of which man as man is capable. Knowledge can not be regarded as inherently restricted property. The recognition of this truth is needed today throughout South America where the percentage of illiteracy ranges from 50 per cent to 80 per cent of the population. The state can not consistently profess regard for its future eitizens and leave millions unreached by educational provision.

Property is another problem which may expect solution only from the touch of Christ. Its temporary relief and its ultimate removal are bound up in the principle of co-operative solidarity. The same is true of the neglected classes in general—the Indians, Negroes, mountain whites, inhabitants of congested districts, foreign immigrants, in America; the 6,000,000 Indians and mestizos in Mexico who have never been lifted by Christian civilization; the millions of inquilinos, cholos, and indigenous tribes of South America, who are as intact in their ignorance and paganism as they were before the eyes of the white man looked upon the American shore.

CHRIST THE LIFE-GIVER.

A third principle of Jesus' teaching was the emphasis upon the spiritual. It is distinctively as a religious teacher that Jesus is presented in the Gospels, and not as a political reformer, an economist or a philosopher. The whole basis of his thought and activity was religious. His claim is that he has for the world a supplementing and regenerating dynamic which has its source in that which lies above the sphere of time and sense. He came he said that men might have life abundantly. Phillips Brooks once said: "Jesus was not primarily the Deed-Doer, or the Word-Sayer, he was the Life-Giver." He does not seek to re-organize society by external means but to regenerate it from within by a spiritual method and to include the regenerated into a new society which he called the Kingdom of God.

We may recall the words of Lecky, the rationalist historian, who declared that in the record of three short years Jesus has done more to soften and regenerate mankind than all the disquisitions of the philosophers and all the exhortations of the moralists. The cry that escaped him on the cross has been sometimes regarded chiefly as an exclamation of expiring agony. It was vastly more than that. It was a cry of victory wrung from the consciousness that he had set in motion forces that would save the world.

"IT IS FINISHED."

It is finished! What? Not the actual redemption of the race; but incarnation and demonstration of the spirit and principles of the life to which God designs to lead mankind, and the communication of that spirit and those principles to a group of men who should in turn mediate them to others, by bringing others into their fellowship and into living contact with their ascended Lord.

It is finished! Not the organization of the machinery of social reconstruction, for he left his followers without any organization or rule concerning it. Nothing is more apparent than their bewildered helplessness and lack of program when he who had been their light and leader withdrew into his heaven with the strange declaration that for them it was expedient that he should go away. He had not achieved the social deliverance of even his own people for he left the Jews still under the Roman yoke and his Jewish disciples disappointed saying "We had hoped it was he who should redeem Israel."

But that triumphant cry of the Master was the commission and challenge of the early disciples, as it is ours today. It indicates that to which Jesus was content and confident to commit his hope for the world. He had finished the work of communicating to men his eternal principles of regeneration, and of breathing upon them his spirit of sacrificial love.

As the first disciples went out to win Palestine and the Roman empire, in the conviction that the Gospel was a mission to the whole of humanity, so may the missionaries and Christian leaders of Latin America return to their respective countries with fresh realization of the mighty power of the message they have to deliver and with renewed faith in him who through them waits for the uplift and redemption of the Latin-American world.

Servants of God!—or sons
Shall I not call you? because
Not as servants ye knew
Your Father's most innermost mind,
His, who unwillingly sees
One of His little ones lost—
Yours is the praise, if mankind
Hath not as yet in its march
Fainted, and fallen, and died.

. . . . . .

Beacons of hope ye appear!
Languor is not in your heart,
Weakness is not in your word,
Weariness not on your brow.

. . . . . .

Eyes rekindling and prayers,
Follow your steps as ye go.
Ye fill up the gaps in our files,
Strengthen the wavering line,
Stablish, continue your march,
On, on to the bound of the waste,
On to the City of God.

Those that hope little cannot grow much. To them the very glory of God must be a small thing, for their hope of it is so small as not to be worth rejoicing in.—George Macdonald.

Would You Advise a Young Man to Enter the Ministry?

Editor's Note: In a recent issue of the Youth's Companion appears an editorial on "Young Men and the Ministry." Although this article encourages young men of today to enter this field, it makes the point that the ministry as a profession is not respected now as it once was. "One hundred years ago," says the Companion, "the ministry was the noblest career a young man could choose. It meant dignity, authority, leadership, high standing in the state, and the respect and esteem of all. In the ministry centered learning, intelligence, and judgment. It is not so now, and everyone admits the change. The minister no longer leads the general thought of the community. He is treated with consideration, but too often with patronage, by the active, wealthy members even of his own parish. And because the office commands less respect, it is less sought by men of first-rate energy and ability."

"The Conquest" asked a number of our leaders to express themselves upon this important and interesting question, and the following testimonies were published in a recent issue of "The Conquest." The symposium is reprinted from that journal.

REV. PETER AINSLIE.

The Christian Temple, Baltimore, Md.

The quotation that you make from the Youth's Companion relative to young men in the ministry is altogether unfair. It falls to my lot to sometimes go to Washington when I run in to hear what the Representatives are saying, and then I go over to hear the Senators. Then occasionally I get into a group of scientific men, as I did a few days ago, in an annual association. Then I sometimes attend an educational association and more frequently I attend gatherings of preachers. I do not hesitate to say that there are just as many strong, influential men in the group of preachers as in the educational association, scientific association, or in the House of Representatives or in the United States Senate. It depends upon where you get your group of men. The most influential voices today in America are those coming from the pulpit. In the councils of politicians, educators and ministers my experience has been that the minister measures up equally to the best. Of course, there are a good many who do not, just as there a good many in every other calling belonging in second, third or fourth rate classification.

Would I advise young men to enter the ministry? Of course I would. I am doing it every day. If I had my life to live over a hundred times, every time I would put it in the ministry. It is the greatest opportunity of service that the human soul can have. Frequently young men are not directed into the ministry because the influence of their parents is against it. So many parents are looking for their sons to make a fortune, making the money consideration the dominant thing. Then sometimes the young man himself has grown up in an atmosphere where success is expressed in dollars and cents and the life of worth is a secondary thing. That young man will necessarily look down upon the ministry. This is the age of materialism and has been so for three hundred years, consequently success is measured in dollars and cents. But after all the biggest things in this world are spiritual, and the greatest success is a life that gives itself for the good of others. No avenue furnishes the accomplishment of this task as the ministry.

REV. J. H. GARRISON.

Editor-Emeritus the Christian Evangelist.

Referring to the quotation from the Youth's Companion: I suppose it is true that the average minister of the gospel today occupies a less conspicuous place, and exercises less "authority" in the sense meant, than he did one hundred years ago. But the opportunity of service to the community and to the world is greater now than it was then. A man who would be deterred from entering the ministry because it commands less honor from the world, is not the type of man who is likely to make a success of the ministry. After all, the measure of respect and authority a minister exerts is largely determined by the ability and training, and the unselfish consecration he brings to his work. Here position or office counts for less now than of old, but personality was never more potential. If I had my own life to live over again, beginning now, I would devote it to the ministry of Christ's gospel, but I would give more time to the preparation for the high calling.

REV. E. F. DAUGHERTY.

First Christian Church, Vincennes, Ind.

Of course, it's true. That Youth's Companion editorial to which you invite attention. I read it on its original page and questioned its truth; a second reading brought me up-standing vs. the shock of its solar-plexus statement of facts; the third reading, secured by your challenge, compels my candor to acknowledge—"It's true!"

Since I chose the ministry "consideration" has been handed me; at first commiserating "consideration" from the worldly wise, and pious, holily joyful "consideration" by the presumably consecrated; later, "consideration" of hopeful, kindly quality by earnest souls who trusted my metamorphosis into puissant prophecy; now in the noon-tide of full maturity, "consideration" still comes in tolerant, benignant, indulgent phrases of mental attitude toward the idealism I champion amid men of affairs in the supreme Man's name. "Patronage," condescending patronage, has come and still comes along the line; fees for weddings and funerals, social, political and business recognitions, graciously vouchsafed, along with occasional gifts of small and large consequence, but all wrapped up in the air of "you need this, and are entitled to it, and we are giving it to you in praise of your impractical idealism and devotion thereto—but WE, WE—swim in the currents of business, politics and pleasure, while you are an interesting fog-horn ornament on the bank of affairs." It's a short-sighted parson who can't see through the veil of "patronizing tolerance" nine people out of ten hold between their real lives and his own. Fifteen years of observation and experience with as good and as bad people as ever tested a parson's mettle warrant my affirmation on the editorial—"It's true!"

To a young man contemplating the ministry as a career, I'd say, "Don't!" For the second time, I'd say, "DON'T!" For success, on any scale of worldly measurement is impossible in the ministry. Don't take the ministry, UNLESS God and his righteousness are the only things counting in your life philosophy. Don't enter the ministry if you can throttle and deny and push off your life map—its call. But if you can't choke off its call, if you've simply GOT TO PREACH, why, then, God bless you, go to it, and you'll be happy through all the tides of misery you will be called to wade in carrying the burdens and solving the troubles of others.

By and large, the ministry has more mollycoddles, spineless sissies and posing pious martinettes than any other calling, simply because they have bowed the neck before conventional usages offering incense of "patronage." There are some stalwarts in the ministry, but the average ranks are forceless and valueless for anything other than ritualistic fol-de-rol on parade occasions.

And the ministery is not the "noblest calling." That's a superstitious and exploded tradition. A real man ennobles any calling; I know a few clerks, farmers, business men—and one lawyer—as clean, straight and firmly allied to God's program in the earth as any parson dare be.

The ministry is easier to get in, and its way more pampered with easements tempting to soul-sloth than any other path holding a living in prospect for those who want merely to "get by." If a young man wants to give a life to the world, rather than hold up the world for all he can get out of it, he's a rare fool to think anything offers so big a chance as the ministry.

REV. BURRIS A. JENKINS.

Linwood Boulevard Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo.

Would I advise a young man to enter the ministry today? It depends on the young man; if he has the qualifications of speech, personal address, a good education or the means of getting one, and willingness to devote his life to a comparably unremunerative task that can be of great service to his fellows, I would certainly advise him to do so.

I believe there is a swing backward of the pendulum to a higher regard for the ministry, for a greater opportunity in it than there has been for some time. Every minister at times is inclined to think himself the most useless man in the community, and he is even sometimes told so. This is good for his health, but most of the time he can feel the response to his own efforts to help, if he is honestly trying to help. And it looks to me as if the next twenty-five or fifty years is going to be a period of great activity in the church and of corresponding opportunity.

REV. HOWARD T. CREE.

Augusta, Ga.

The life of the minister, like that of any other vocation, is determined by the definition which he makes of his calling. If it be true that the minister is treated with patronage by his people, it must be because of the personal equation.

In my twenty years of ministry I have found that the minister was treated with dignity when he was dignified, that he was accorded authority and leadership when he was worthy of it. The consideration he is granted depends more upon his personality than upon his profession. Other things being equal, I am sure he is treated with more respect and esteem than men of other callings just because he is a minister of the Gospel.

In the last analysis, however, it depends upon the man: the community, with a remarkable degree of justice, will grant him usually just what he deserves. Today, as never before, the opportunity of place and leadership is open to the minister who is equal to the task.

REV. JOHN R. EWERS.

East End Christian Church, Pittsburg, Pa.

It is true that there are many undesirables among modern theological students. It is also true that many of the strongest and best young men are entering the ministry. You might almost say that the best and the worst men are ministers. Nothing can be nobler among the sons of men than the worthy prophet. He stands like a mountain peak above the foothills, catching the first rays of light and holding the rosy sun long after shadows have gathered in the valleys. Nothing can be more disgusting than the unworthy clergyman. He has no light or leadership. He kowtows before strong laymen. He murmurs the partisan "shibboleths." He breeds divisions. He is professional, slouchy, half-alive, flabby and inefficient. He has sold his own self-respect and everyone hates him. Such a priest is the most pitiable object upon earth; a dog is a king in comparison!

Quickly, in these days ministers strike their level. The king is he who can. First-rate men hold up their heads among the best. Capable men, prepared and confident, become leaders. Big men are never patronized. On the other hand, hard-working, keen-minded business men have little patience with bigoted, fearful, boot-licking, unprepared, narrow-minded, watery-blooded preacherettes. Sometimes it seems that it would be a mercy to allow the capable ministers to gather all of the people about them. It must be remembered, however, that there are a lot of small-gaged people who demand a bigoted preacher. Thus all of the incompetents, who graduate from the schools—any kind of school—find supporting groups "after their kind." Like people, like priest. Thus the strong and broad-minded will steadily push up toward the most capable groups, while the weak and narrow-minded will gradually slip down to his own level. This is very accommodating. It reminds me of a sign I saw nailed up in a country store: "If you spit on the floor at home, spit on the floor here; we want you to feel at home." No matter how bad your ecclesiastical habits there is a group as bad as you are where you can be made to feel at home! A bigoted revel awaits you somewhere if you like that sort of thing.

Speaking generally, ministers are a superior group. In any given community the minister is, more often than not, a leader. In recent years a better, braver type of man has been entering the ministry and it will continue to attract the best. Most ministers work hard. Most ministers are clean and devoted. Most ministers know self-sacrifice that is deep and true. It is the noblest calling upon earth; but like every other—law, medicine, education—the unworthy and unprepared must expect a sorry time. We want fewer and better men for our calling.

REV. WILLIAM DUNN RYAN.

Central Christian Church, Youngstown, O.

Of course, young men whose aim in life is to become famous, abide in the limeligt, receive the adulation of the public, etc., are not likely to enter the ministry. Perhaps it is true that the vocation offers less opportunity for notoriety than it did fifty years ago. This does not indicate, however, that "men of first-rate energy and ability" will avoid the ministry. It rather indicates the contrary. Its appeal is to the heroic. To the place-hunter or fame-seeker the ministry has little or no charm, but to the young man of first-rate energy and ability, coupled with real consecration to Christ, it offers incomparably the biggest opportunity known, in this year of grace 1916, to bury himself in a satisfying effort to lift this world up toward God. And his reward is not the reward of the Scribe or Pharisee.

REV. E. L. POWELL.

First Christian Church, Louisville, Ky.

In response to your request to send a word for the "'Conquest," in response to the inquiry, "Would you advise a young man to enter the ministry today?" I have this to say:

It seems to me there has never been greater need for young men, able, consecrated and gloriously optimistic, who shall give themselves to the high calling of the ministry. It is the crowning day of spiritual leadership. He who enters the ministry now may be assured of a great constituency if he shall only have the elements of high spiritual leadership. This condition, of course, calls for the very best intellectual training no less than profound convictions of the great unseen spiritual realities which will unquestionably dominate the future. The age in which we live is a challenge, an invitation to every young man who wishes to invest his life in that which is tremendously worth while. I would certainly, therefore, advise a young man of the right sort who has heard the call, and has gotten a glimpse of the opportunity, to enter the ministry. It will not be worth while for him to join this noble calling if he shall be content with the sort of success which can be associated with even brilliant professionalism. The call is for prophets, and I have no doubt that many are on the way.

I suppose no truths can be dearer to a human heart than these two—the sympathy of the Son of Man in temptation; the victory of humanity in the Son of Man over evil.—Stafford Brooke.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

A BEGINNING ONLY

THE period of special interest in the cause of Foreign Missions begins, but does not end, on the First Sunday in March.

Sometimes it is inconvenient or unwise to take the offering on that day. The weather may be unpropitious, or local circumstances may render it wise to defer the offering.

In such instances a later day may be chosen wisely. But the offering will not be omitted or permitted to lapse indefinitely on that account. All the effort that has gone into missionary education in the weeks preceding the First Sunday in March must be conserved, and the only way in which this can be done is by the observance of the offering at the earliest possible date.

The entire month of March ought to be set apart to this holy cause. Not all the values of so large an interest can be secured in one day. The after-results are often as valuable as the first full statement and offering.

A beginning only is made on the First Sunday. No church ought to miss the joy and the value of participation sometime during March.

A MESSAGE FROM THE EDITOR

FROM the Hotel Tivoli at Panama, the meeting place of the Congress, Mr. Morrison writes, in part, as follows, under date of February 16:

"I have been writing the story of the Congress for the local papers, of which you are receiving copies. This was additional duty which the Business Committee, of which Dr. Mott is chairman, wanted me to undertake. I have found a lot of satisfaction in it.

"It has been a wonderful Congress, in many respects better than Edinburgh, and in significance, fully equal to it. 'Our' men were in the center of things. McLean, Muckley, Inman, Paul, Mrs. Harrison, Dr. Myers, and several Mexican missionaries made up a company of more than twenty-five.

"Mr. Inman has the confidence of all. He has been elected secretary of the Committee to continue the work of the Congress. He will be located in New York.

"I am leaving this morning for the long pull around South America. There are about twenty in the deputation, and we are accompanied by about as many returning missionaries."

OUTGROWN DOGMAS

THE Gospel is ever the same, the Good News of a divine universe, of a Father who knows and cares, and of the possibility of friendship with him.

But it is astonishing that this Good News is so frequently obscured by association with theological opinions which have nothing in common with it, and yet are insisted upon as essential to Christianity.

Recently there came to notice a brief statement of belief published in the interest of a school for Christian workers. It was issued by men who were profoundly in earnest, and had all the marks of sincere desire to further the interests of the kingdom of God.

Yet its statement of Christian belief necessary to salvation was so crude that it was difficult to believe that any intelligent person could associate in any remotest manner the contents of this creed with the life of the Spirit.

It stated that there are five cardinal doctrines in the plan of Christianity. They are the verbal and plenary inspiration of the Bible, the deity of Jesus, the efficacy of the blood atonement of Jesus for the deliverance of mankind from the wrath of God, the literal and endless punishment of the wicked, and the speedy return of the Lord, in physical and visible form, for the judgment of the world and the inauguration of the endless reign of good.

Three of these so-called doctrines are repulsive both to the intelligence and the feelings of the modern world; one is unintelligible in the form stated, and the last is so debatable as to be at best a theme of controversy rather than edification. And belief in these things was termed Christian faith, without which acceptance with God was not to be gained!

Is it strange that there are many who doubt the value of the Gospel, when it is clothed in such mouldy and unsightly garments? Even if these dogmas were not medieval and obsolete for the most part, they would still be meaningless and unpersuasive to the men and women of our age. No one who is sensitive to the necessity of giving a vital message to our time, to preach what Peter calls "the present truth," would permit himself to be betrayed into affirmations so questionable, not to say dishonoring to our holy faith.

THE FAILURE OF GERMANY

UNQUESTIONABLY the most impressive feature of the great war was the masterful readiness of Germany for its effort to secure a larger place in the sun.

For more than twenty years, first under the leadership of Bismarck, and later under the direction of the war office in Berlin, the nation had been piling up its resources for war, and the military party whipped into line the reluctant with the menace of world-hatred against Germany, and world-jealousy of her achievements.

The war began when Germany was ready to the last detail. That magnificent advance over the Belgian border, when like a resistless wave the grey Teutonic masses pressed steadily onward, bearing down all opposition, and organising the territory under German government, was like nothing ever seen before.

No wonder the German people had come to believe in the invincible strength of their military machine. There was little boasting. Everything was taken for granted as inevitable. German officers confidently made appointments to meet newspaper correspondents and other friends in Paris in the early days of September. There was no doubt about the complete success of the marvelous drive to the south.

An American war correspondent has recently published some intensely interesting letters written in the midst of the eventful days of that drive, which throw light upon the shock of disillusionment and chagrin which came over the German troops when the dream of taking Paris faded away.

The writer of those letters, with the German forces on the advance line, stood one day on the banks of the Marne, where the great army had come to its standstill. Before it was a bridgeless river, beyond which lay the fresh and gathering masses of French troops, while coming up on the flank were the English auxiliaries.

In the distance he could see a tall mass of steel rising high into the air. He asked a comrade what it was, and to his astonishment heard him say, "It is the Eiffel Tower!" And yet in that very hour the orders for retreat were being passed along the lines, and the mighty drive to Paris had collapsed.

As this writer makes clear, the failure of that seemingly irresistible advance was nothing less than a sickening blow to German pride and prestige. It proved to Germany and the world that the magnificent machine which had been built up at such cost of money and sacrifice was not the superhuman mechanism it had been supposed to be, and that before Germany there lay not the serene and unobstructed march to supreme power which had been predicted, but a life-and-death struggle, whose issue was an inscrutable mystery.

Many variations of success and failure German arms have known since that time, but it is the view of that sympathetic writer that in the failure of the huge drive on Paris Germany sustained a moral defeat which changed entirely her strategy and permanently impaired her power.

THE GARY EXPERIMENT

ONE OF the facts made clear by the discussions of the Religious Education Association last week in this city was the very great interest which has been awakened by the so-called Gary Plan of co-operation between the local churches of a community and the public schools.

In that interesting city, where so many new experiments, educational and industrial, are being tried, a method has been devised for the instruction of the children of the various churches in their own church buildings and under instructors provided by the churches themselves, at hours arranged in the school schedules, and with proper recognition on the part of the school authorities.

Several of the Gary churches have taken part in this plan. And it has come to wide recognition as at least one of the ways, and perhaps the best way, in which the children of any community may be given that training in morals and religion which the public schools seem at present unable or unwilling to provide.

To the Disciples the Gary Plan is of special interest, for it is an undisputed fact that the leading spirit in the formulation and carrying out of the plan has been Mr. Myron C. Settle, the director of the enterprise as represented by the Disciples. Other men of ability have wrought at the enterprise in other churches, but the current of the discussion last week showed that Mr. Settle has been in a large way the maker of the plan.

This is a satisfaction to the Disciples. Our people are sensitive to such opportunities to render effective service in so fundamental a way. We hope that the foundations thus laid so well by Mr. Settle's work may be the basis for a solid structure of theory and practice. Already many other localities are considering the wisdom of similar steps.

THE CONVENTION OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

THE PAST week has been marked by an event of importance in the world of religion and education. The Convention of the Religious Education Association has been in session in the various public halls of the Congress Hotel, in this city. It was not a convention in the usual sense, but rather a conference of the leading spirits in the field of public instruction who at the same time are concerned regarding the problems of moral and religious education.

Most of the sessions were devoted to the questions arising from the effort to provide public school children with some competent instruction in ethics and religion. This theme has been taking an increasingly outstanding place in the regard of people sensitive to the welfare of the coming generation.

Between those who advocate the earlier and now impossible plan of Bible study in the public schools, and those who protest against any form of moral or religious training for public school children, there is a wide gulf set. And yet some method of co-operation must be devised. This was the purpose of the conference.

Our readers will have a more extended notice of the sessions in another column. It remains only to indicate here that the conference was largely attended, and that the papers and discussions, presenting as they did widely differing points of view, were followed with the closest attention by all present.

We cannot doubt that out of this frank and free discussion of a most important theme, there will come certain constructive plans on which all friends of religious education can agree.

THE "CONQUEST" SYMPOSIUM

READERS of The Christian Century are all aware that "The Conquest" is the sprightly young people's journal edited by Mr. Thomas Curtis Clark, and circulating widely among the Bible-schools and Endeavor Societies of the Disciples.

Recently a feature of that very readable weekly was a symposium on the timely subject, "Would You Advise a Young Man to Enter the Ministry?" Some of our most widely known writers and preachers have contributed to the discussion. The statements made by one and another of them are profoundly interesting—so much so that request has been made that the testimonies be reprinted in the "Century." The symposium is presented in this issue.

There is no more timely theme than this in the church life of today. We wonder what is the reaction of the individual members of our "Century" household to the question, "Would you advise your son to go into the ministry?"

LENTEN DAYS

FOR many centuries certain sections of the church have observed with loving memory the Forty Days of the Temptation.

Not without meaning has this period of trial been joined with the closing week of suffering, ending in the triumph of the Easter time.

Gradually the entire church, forgetting its ancient animosities, has found increasing satisfaction in the keeping of this period. Not in any mechanical observance, but in sympathetic remembrance, and for purposes of the holy life.

Insensitive, indeed, would be that soul that could pass thoughtlessly through a portion of the year so significant in our Lord's experience, and so full of meaning to the saints of every generation.

With unfailing remembrance of the days in the wilderness, and their meaning for Christianity, let us go through the Lenten time.

Religious Education Association Meets

An Estimate of the National Convention Held in Chicago, February 28-29, March 1.

"We chose a safe Presbyterian man to prevent any witchcraft from the number 13," said Rev. Henry F. Cope, secretary of the Religious Education Association, in introducing Rev. George B. Stewart, president of Auburn Theological Seminary and the president of the Religious Education Association, to preside over the thirteenth session of that body. The Association was briefly reminded of the remarkable history which has resulted from the formation of the organization at the suggestion of Dr. William Rainey Harper thirteen years ago. In these thirteen years, religious education has been born as an organized program, and has come to the present favor in the attention of the church.

The president spoke on the relation of world politics to the great task of moral and religious education. He disclaimed belonging to the neutrals with reference to the great conflict in Europe and hinted that there were no real neutrals. His address might be called a defense of "preparedness," though he had nothing to say about military measures. He insisted that peace was not the ultimate goal of the race, and that a certain kind of peace talk in our country arose out of selfishness and moral flabbiness. A wrong attitude toward these questions may hinder the future development of morals and religion, he declared.

The same evening, Dr. M. J. Exner spoke on Sex Education and the High School Age. He described a method by which college men had made reports on their history without revealing their personal identity. These reports were gathered in many sections of the country and tallied everywhere in their results. It was shown that eighty-seven per cent of the men received their first striking impression of sex before the thirteenth year and the average age was below ten. His deductions from a number of very startling statistics were that these men, presumably from the best homes, were the victims of late and inadequate instruction in human biology. His address has been printed in bulletin form and will repay careful study.

The chief topic of the convention was the relation of religious instruction and public education. The various denominations using the parish school made reports. The Gary plan by which the public school dismisses pupils for religious instruction, but has no relation to it in any way, was discussed. The Colorado plan of giving credit in high schools for work done in Sunday-school by an approved teacher, was described. The North Dakota plan of giving credit for outside religious study of any kind by means of examination, was the topic of another address. The difficulties besetting the Gary plan in New York environment were noted.

The declaration of principles by the convention is important:

"The church and the state are to be regarded as distinct institutions, which as far as possible co-operate through the agency of their common constituents in their capacity as individuals."

"All children are entitled to an organic program of education, which shall include facilities not only for general but for religious instruction and training."

"Such a division of a child's time as will allow opportunity and strength for religious education should be reached by consultation between parents and public school authorities without formal agreement between the state and the churches as institutions." This seems to favor the Gary plan.

Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of the Methodist Episcopal church, was elected president of the Association, and Dr. Henry S. Pritchett, president of the Carnegie Foundation of New York, was elected vice president. The members of the board of directors were also named by the convention, and this board will probably re-appoint Dr. Henry F. Cope as general secretary and David R. Forgan as treasurer.

Several hundred of the leading educators of the nation were present, representing Protestants, Catholics and Jews.

Presbyterian Brotherhood Has New Leader.

In the days when denominational brotherhoods have been disappearing, the Presbyterian brotherhood has continued. They have recently called a new leader, Dr. William F. Weir, who will serve as general secretary. He is an Ohio pastor whose ministry has been marked with success, and much is expected from his work with Presbyterian laymen.

Militant Pacifist Speaks.

Rev. Martin D. Hardin, of Third Presbyterian church, Chicago, is known to his friends as a militant pacifist. He was invited to address a meeting of Chicago ministers on World Peace under the auspices of the Federation Council of Churches on Monday, Feb. 21. After the stirring address, a motion was put before the house asking that the Carnegie Foundation should give the address the widest possible publicity. This motion was debated pro and con and those speaking on the "con" side declared that Mr. Hardin had insulted the president of the United States and George Washington. The motion prevailed, by a good majority, after a hot debate.

Noon-Day Sermons During Passion Week.

During recent years, Passion Week has been the occasion of a number of religious services in the loop. It is announced that the Garrick Theater meetings will be addressed this year by Dr. James M. Gray and Rev. John Timothy Stone, the former a teacher of Moody Bible Institute and the latter pastor of Fourth Presbyterian church.

National Missionary Congress Will be Held.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement has been holding a series of well-attended conventions in the leading cities of the country during the winter. There will be a national missionary congress at Washington, D. C., April 26-30, at which the great missionary leaders of the country will speak. Among the outstanding leaders of Christian activity and thought who have accepted invitations to speak at the Congress are John R. Mott, Robert E. Speer, Dr. Shailer Mathews, Dr. W. D. MacKenzie, Bishop Francis J. McConnell, George Sherwood Eddy, Raymond Robins, Silas McBee, Dr. John F. Goucher, Ex-Lieut. Gov. A. J. Wallace of California.

Chicago Presbytery Builds Home For Unfortunate.

An evidence of the virility of Presbyterianism in Chicago is found in the vote of the presbytery to raise a fund of $200,000 to build and endow a home for the aged, orphans and convalescent, the home to be located in the country just northwest of Evanston, Ill. It is planned to get the money at once so that the new building may be occupied by May 1, 1917. The building will be erected in a way to provide for an ultimate equipment of $600,000. That the accommodations will be high grade is seen in the fact that the initial building will house only sixty people.

Panama President Vacillates.

Under the whip of his bishop, the president of the Panama republic withdrew his permission for the Latin America Missionary Congress to use the national theater building in Panama. Political conditions have settled somewhat, however, and the president attended the opening sessions of the Congress and in his address of welcome made such amends for his lack of courtesy as he was able.

Rev. B. Fay Mills Returns to Chicago.

Rev. B. Fay Mills, not very long ago preaching in a Chicago theater a mixture of oriental religions, is back in the city and began evangelistic meetings in Rogers Park, beginning March 5. His ministry in various cities this winter has been waited on by good congregations, though not of the size that greeted him in the old days of his evangelistic work.

Dr. Jowett Recovering.

Dr. Jowett has been ill with the grip and ptomaine poisoning which has kept him out of his pulpit for some little time. He will preach only for the morning now for a while and will speak at his Wednesday evening meeting.

Church People Deal With Tramps.

In Evanston, Ill., a high grade suburb of Chicago, the tramp problem grew in intensity with the years. A Social League was formed of the members of the various churches, which voted to cooperate with the Chicago Christian Industrial League of Chicago. The latter organization came into being through the encouragement of the Presbyterians. Evanston citizens now hand a tramp an order on a League house and here the tramp may have a bed, a meal and a chance to work. Repeaters who will not work are not welcomed back.

First Quarterly Review

THE CHURCH.

By Asa McDaniel.

THE church is an organization of people seeking to give expression to their inherent religious feeling, and to cultivate that feeling under the power of the Holy Spirit.

The Greek word which we translate "church" meant any public assembly in New Testament times, and was used to designate the town meeting where the people were called for any community interest, without any thought of religious values. Later, however, the word "church" meant a gathering of people for religious purposes. The content of the word has come to us in the progress of the Christian religion. It varies today all the way from the very simple organization to the highly centralized and elaborate organization of the Roman church.

The spiritual idea of a Christian church is a body or collection of persons, voluntarily associated together, professing to believe what Jesus teaches, seeking to do what Christ enjoins, to imitate his example, cherish his spirit, and make known his gospel to others.

There are some institutions in our life which illustrate the function of the church in our day. The first one is the family. The church as a family seeks to protect its members from harm, and help them to their highest life. The modern church is seeking to realize this ideal more and more. It is attempting to minister to the whole of life.

It is a school where the disciples are learning the lessons of life from the Divine Teacher. As their life grows like that of their Master they are called Christians, like the disciples at Antioch. We have spent so much time calling ourselves Christians that we have very little left in which to live so that the world can call us Christians. We must either "live up" or "shut up."

The church is a religious hospital where those who are sick of sin are being made hearty and strong by the best possible treatment. It is not a place where you should expect perfection; but a company of believers who are striving after the perfection found in their leader, Jesus Christ. The only reason the Church is not more efficient is that so many of the members insist upon taking absent treatment.

The church has often been called an army. It is organized to fight all forms of sin, to fight the battles of the Lord against the hosts of evil in all parts of the world. When the army is on dress parade the enemy is not in great danger. But when the soldiers are in united action on the firing line, results may be looked for, so when the Church unites upon any task results pile up on the side of humanity. What we lack is the unity of the army.

The Church is also a band of workers, carrying on the Lord's work, and fulfilling his mission over all the world. Here again we find many parasites in the Church. The early Church had "all things in common," and they were found observing those things which tended to develop their efficiency in the great social task. More important, however, than any formal exercise of their religion was the Spirit of Jesus which filled their hearts, and sent them out to conquer the world for Jesus Christ.

Dan Crawford and War.

Writing from Africa, Dan Crawford, the famous missionary, says:

"Even the weary and weather-beaten war talk begins to jade us and here we are getting behind the scenes at last, back to the ruthless thing that brought it all about—sin!

"There are mothers here going home to be near their soldier sons; wives whose husbands are on the North Sea; boys and girls who have lost fathers and brothers on the red fields of Flanders. Therefore, with time so lightly held and so lightly left, now is the opportunity for eternity to loom large. And the curious thing is that the very folk who will have nothing to do with God now whine accusingly and ask, 'Why, oh why, does he not intervene and stop it?' To all of which we answer: 'The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's: but the earth hath he given to the children of men.' Yes, to make it or mar it or mend it, the earth hath he given to the children of men. It is men who dig the graves of men. This is 'Man's Day.' Oh, yes, this wild war will eventuate in good things. The bolt fell from the blue like a stroke of apoplexy, felling a huge, hale man; and such a primitive thing as apoplexy (war!) I sadly suppose must have the old primitive surgery, to wit: the bleeding profusely of the stricken patient. How we forget that the words 'bless,' 'bloom,' 'blossom' and 'blood' are all from the same root!"

"Still as of old
Man by himself is priced;
For thirty pieces Judas sold Himself, not Christ."

In God's presence.—The first you are to do when you are upon your knees is to shut your eyes and, with short silence, let your soul place itself in the presence of God; that is, you are to use this or some better method to separate yourself from all common thoughts and make your heart as sensitive as you can to the divine presence.—Andrew Murray.

* * *

A Christian may for many days together see neither sun nor star, neither light in God's countenance, nor light in his own heart, though even at that time God darts some beams through those clouds upon the soul; the soul again by a spirit faith sees some light through those thickest clouds, enough to keep it from utter despair, though not to settle it in peace. In this dark condition, if they do as St. Paul and his company did, cast anchor even in the dark night of temptation, and pray still for day, God will appear, and all shall clear up. We shall see light without and light within; the day-star will arise in their hearts.—Richard Sibbes.

Disciples Table Talk

David Starr Jordan Speaks on "Preparedness' at First Church, Fresno, Cal.

When David Starr Jordan, formerly President of Leland Stanford University, appeared at First church, Fresno, the seating capacity of the auditorium was taxed to the limit. In his address Dr. Jordan told of conditions in Europe as he has found them, and had this to say of possibilities of the United States being dragged into war: "This country has nothing to fear from European nations or from Japan. Europe is bleeding to death and Japan is not so unwise as to seek trouble with this country. Our war with Spain was a needless and cowardly war. Spain yielded everything that was asked of her before the war was declared. This fact is generally understood now. The war traders have done more to bring about war than is generally known today. The manufacturers of war munitions in Germany, France, England and the United States have paid tremendous and unbelievable dividends as a result of the profit accruing from wars in recent years. Crooked diplomacy has caused many nations great physical and financial losses. Forged scraps of paper have figured as the principal aftermaths of interest of many wars. Money and money interests are trying to cause wars today. Wars bring profits to certain people. War does more to ruin the physical health and strength of a nation than any other scourge."

Dr. Jenkins Advises Modern Mothers.

In a sermon delivered at Linwood Blvd. church, Kansas City, Mo., on Feb. 20, Burris A. Jenkins paid tribute to "Great Mothers." The speaker, however, made three suggestions to modern mothers. He urged a positive rather than a negative attitude toward children; the exaction of obedience, with the added general suggestion that military discipline should be enforced in the secondary schools as a means of inculcating in the minds of children a respect for law and constituted authority; and finally a co-operation on the part of mothers with the institutions which in these days have children under their care from the earliest years.

Joseph A. Serena Installed as William Woods President.

February 24 was the day set for the inauguration of Joseph A. Serena as president of William Woods College, Fulton, Mo. Mr. Serena came to Fulton last November and assumed the duties of president of the College and has been acting in that capacity since. Before coming to Fulton he was president of Keuka College, of Keuka Park, New York, and has had much experience in the educational work. Since coming to Fulton he has made many friends. It was greatly regretted that Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Woods, the largest benefactors of the college, were unable to be present on this occasion; they are now in their California home, and could not risk the Missouri climate at this time of the year. Among those who had part in the installation exercises were: Rev. A. N. Lindsay, of Clinton, Mo.; W. E. Jameson, president of the Board of Trustees; Mrs. Frank T. Mitchell, of Columbia, Mo.; John C. Jones, of the faculty of the University of Missouri; President A. C. Stockard, of the college at Nevada, Mo.; President E. E. Reed, of Westminster College; G. D. Edwards, of the Bible college, University of Missouri; and W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City. In the afternoon the new McBride Gymnasium was dedicated. A general reception was held in the evening. The prospect for a period of great prosperity and success under Mr. Serena's leadership is foreshadowed by the wise words used by him in his inaugural address.

Four Definite Aims at Valparaiso, Ind.

Valparaiso, Ind., church, led by Claude E. Hill, has the following high aims for its pre-Easter campaign: First: To secure a 25 per cent increase in the enrollment of the church school. Second: To secure an average attendance in the church school of 75 per cent enrolled membership. Third: A campaign of personal evangelism under the leadership of a committee of laymen. Fourth: To make the week preceding Easter Sunday a decision week in the church and the church school. To this end special services will be held each evening during the week preceding Easter Sunday. These metings will be conducted by home forces and will culminate in a great service on Easter Day.

Pennsylvania Pastor Trebles Membership in Four Years.

E. N. Duty has recently entered upon his fifth year as pastor of First church, Charleroi, Pa. Many and varied have been the things accomplished by this church during the past year; however, the largest thing done was the holding of the Minges tabernacle meeting. There were 671 additions at this meeting and the expense was met by this local congregation, with very few exceptions; the little band of the Baptist church co-operated splendidly with their pastor, W. G. Carl. This was the largest meeting ever held in the Monongahela Valley by one church. Cards turned over to the churches of the city, 200; cards turned over to the churches of the Monongahela Valley, 66; cards that came directly to Disciples' church, 405; making a total of 671. The pastor made 1,752 calls during the year. An automobile was recently purchased for Mr. Duty by three men of the church, so that he could look after influx of new members, and had it not been for this splendid response to the emergency by these men, the condition of the present membership would not be what it is today, writes the pastor. A total of 460 persons have been added to the church membership during the past year. There have been 640 additions during Mr. Duty's pastorate. The present membership is 927. The Bible-school gained during 1915 an average increase in attendance of 92.

A Miracle Work in a Half-Mormon Town.

D. B. Titus ministers to a town which is 40 per cent Mormon, and very prosperous, and it need not be said that religious work here is promoted under difficulties. Mr. Titus came to this town, Idaho Falls, Ida., with 8,000 people, three months ago. The State Board supports him. There was nothing to start on, except a good lot; not even a church organization. But the record to date is as follows: Bungalow chapel built, costing $3,200; dedicated Feb. 20, $1,800 cash, $1,900 in notes. The new home has full basement, with kitchen and eight class rooms. The congregation has 90 charter members, the Bible-school enrolling a hundred persons.

Another New York Church That is Making Strides.

Second church, Bronx, New York City, is the only church of the Disciples in that borough of over 600,000. O. L. Hull is the pastor, having come to the work recently from Cleveland. Here are some signs of progress that indicate that Mr. Hull was wisely chosen for this work: An Every Member Canvass was put on in December. On January 1, $500, besides interest, was paid on a mortgage. On February 13 five young people were baptized. A patriotic service was held on the 20th, Gen. Geo. Byron Loud, a G. A. R. man and veteran of the Civil War, speaking. On the 22nd Mr. Hull made an address at the Father and Sons' banquet at Second church, Brooklyn, where Mr. Pardee ministers. The mid-week and Endeavor prayer-meetings are growing in interest and numbers. The audiences are growing. A new sign is being installed in front of the church, which will be visible from both car lines. A fine spiritual atmosphere prevails in the church. A campaign has begun looking toward Easter. Reports like this which are coming each week from the churches of New York, give evidence that the work of the Disciples in the East is "getting under the skin" of that conservative section.

Dr. Powell Again Appreciated

The National Canners' Association recently met in convention at Louisville, Ky. Dr. E. L. Powell, of First church, was called upon to pronounce the Invocation. A copy of the "American Grocer" has just come to hand which prints Dr. Powell's words in full, and the editor comments upon them, as follows:

"There was no one event that created so much talk, was so highly commended and copies requested as the Invocation, by Rev. E. L. Powell, D. D., pastor of the first Christian church of Louisville, Ky. It was regarded remarkable and as we learned later was an extemporaneous effort, so expressive of the new spirit of organization that we reproduce it in full—for it means much. It is worthy to be framed and hung in the offices and factories of the great land, 'which the Lord thy God, has given thee.'"

Dr. Powell's "Invocation" follows:

"We thank Thee, our Father, for this occasion and hour.

"We thank Thee for the fellowship represented in this gathering.

"May these men come together under a solemn sense of responsibility, under the inspiration of the new and higher ideals in business life.

"May they find joy in planning and devising methods and means to best serve their great constituency.

"Teach them, and all of us, the great lesson of community interest.

"May we know that only as all are benefited can each be benefited.

"May we not seek our own profit at the expense of others, but may we seek our own profit in making profitable to all—the business which enlists our thought and service.

"Help us to capitalize our ideals and to know that the investment of courage and conscience and optimism will bring in rich returns.

"And as we think of our material interests may we know that the whole world of commerce can only be brightened and exalted as we shall interpret business in terms of co-operation with God in material concerns.

"Help us to know that as business men we can make a splendid contribution through our business to the country we love.

"Help us through the spirit that we put into business to make the stars on our flag, which are symbolic of our ideals, to shine with new luster and ever brightening vividness.

"We are met, Holy Father, in the name of business, but as well in the name of service.

"May the genius of money making be consecrated by the end sought—that of bestowing the greatest service within our power to those whom we are called upon to serve.

"May fellowship, friendship and fraternity be the high notes in the music that shall come forth from all our material interests.

" 'The Lord bless us and keep us, the Lord make his face to shine upon us and be gracious unto us, the Lord lift up his countenance upon us and give us peace,' through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen."

Lincoln, Neb., Pastor Strong for Social Service.

It will be ten years next June since H. H. Harmon came to the pastorate of First church, Lincoln, Neb. The church is located in the down-town section, and always contains in its ranks a considerable number of students, and some of the faculty, of the University of Nebraska, of which institution Mr. Harmon is himself an alumnus. Throughout the decade Mr. Harmon has led the church aggressively and progressively. Up to last year the congregation was engrossed in erecting and paying for its physical plant. With that task largely completed, the church, under the pastor's leadership, is addressing itself more and more to the problems presented to the down-town church, and to various phases of community service. This church has recently closed a series of evangelistic meetings, with the pastor preaching. T. F. A. Williams, of Lincoln, First, congregation, writes of Mr. Harmon's preaching in these complimentary terms: "His sermon work is keen in analysis, simple and effective in presentation, and marked by a fervent and well-poised evangelistic spirit. It is evangelism of the social, as well as of the individualistic type; and the results sought have as much to do with the leavening of the social environment as with the bringing of members into the church." Mr. Williams states that the Lincoln preacher is a "social service" leader, and that his congregation is quite sympathetic with him. There were 99 accessions during the meetings.

Indianapolis Church Has Special Day.

Central church, Indianapolis, observed February 20 as "Central Church Day." Seats were reserved for the sixty members of the official board of the church, and during the service the pastor, Allan B. Philputt, asked them to stand, that the congregation might know them better. A large congregation attended the service, which was marked by twelve additions to the church membership. Most of the hymns sung were written by former members of the congregation. Mr. Philputt made a prophetic appeal for a larger and more convenient church home to house the rapidly growing Central church work.

Mrs. C. S. Weaver Undergoes Operation.

The report comes that Mrs. Clifford S. Weaver, wife of the Endowment secretary of Texas Christian University, Fort Worth, is now thought to be out of danger from a very serious operation, which she underwent in that city recently. This is the second operation Mrs. Weaver has undergone within six months.

"Held to Answer"

By Peter Clark Macfarlane.

This striking novel by Mr. Macfarlane has created a larger advance interest than any other novel ever put out by the publishers; and they have had to their credit some of the "best sellers" of the last few years. A slogan of "100,000 by Christmas" has been set as the selling slogan on this book for this year. The price of the book is $1.35, postpaid. Send your order in today and it will be filled at once. Central, Des Moines, Has a "Dynamo Class."

If there is anything in a name, we would expect the "Dynamo Class," of Central School, Des Moines, to have power a-plenty, at least it should have what is usually labeled "pep." Fred M. Pringle, president of this organization assures us that this class has a name to fit. A class room has been fitted up "to attract any normal high school fellow." Every member is kept busy at some definite task. Last year athletics was featured, and this year the leaders have set about to win the Intermediate championship in basketball. Baseball and track training also will be taken up. But best of all, Mr. Pringle writes that the "Dynamoes" stand for purity and Christian training.

Foreign Missionary Rally in Chicago.

The Chicago Rally for Foreign Missions was held on Wednesday of last week at the Jackson Blvd. church. It was conducted by R. A. Doan and M. B. Madden.

Sessions were held morning, afternoon and evening, and refreshments were served by the ladies of the church. Coming as it did on the day preceding the quarterly all-day session of the C. W. B. M. at the Hyde Park church, the attendance was not large. But interesting meetings were held. Most of the local ministers participated in the rally, and the inspiring addresses of the leaders were greatly profitable.

The March Offering Only Started

The offering for Foreign Missions was only started March 5. The returns are already being received. There is a hopeful tone in the reports. Some churches are going far beyond their apportionments. The friends are not satisfied to keep the missionaries on a 10 per cent reduction of their meager salaries. There seems to be a determination to correct this wrong which was not intended.

Now let every church do its full part at once. Do not delay. Sometimes a church procrastinates in the discharge of its missionary duty, like sinners procrastinate in obeying the gospel. Please do not put it off. Act now! If you did not take the offering last Sunday, please attend to it now. There is no time to be lost.

The churches have made a good start on the year. Up to March 1 they increased their gifts $6,265 over the corresponding five months of last year. And there has been a gain of over 200 contributing churches.

The present opportunities on the mission field are importunities to our great and prosperous brotherhood. There is no use of speaking of the glories of "our plea" if we ignore the claims of the world-wide missionary cause. Remember, that missions are as binding upon the church as baptism is upon the non-church member. The imperative, "Go," has never been abrogated nor modified. It is as binding now as when it fell from the warm lips of the immaculate Christ. All the authority of high heaven, all the compassionate interest of the Christ who gave his heart's blood are behind this imperative. This command is not to be trifled with by really serious people.

Please let us have an appreciative and helpful word from you and your church. Tell us of your missionary situation. And let the communication be accompanied with the best possible offering you can send. If all the offering has not been collected, please forward what you have on hand and gather all the balance later.

We hope to cheer the hearts of the whole brotherhood with good reports next week.

March 14-15, Portland, Jay County. March 15-16, Winchester, Randolph County. March 16-17, Daleville, Delaware County. Second week: March 20-21, Orange, Fayette County. March 21-22, Metamora, Franklin County. March 22-23, Liberty, Union County. March 23-24, Richmond, Wayne County. Third week: March 27-28, Greenfield, Hancock County. March 28-29, New Castle, Henry County. County workers and representatives of the various departments of the state co-operative work will appear on the program.

Secretary Corey Better.

Secretary Stephen J. Corey, who has been quite ill, has gone to Martinsville, Ind., to receive special treatment for inflammatory rheumatism from which he suffers severely. He hopes to be cured within two weeks.

A Good Way to Close a Revival

The Minges' Evangelistic Company closed a meeting at Valley Junction, Iowa, with an appeal for a Living-Link in the Foreign Society. It is believed the amount will be reached. This is a wise step for any evangelist.

One Hundred at Cedar Rapids School of Methods.

The School of Methods at Cedar Rapids, Ia., late in February, was a success. The total attendance was 100, and 25 finished the requirements for a graduation. There were in attendance nine ministers, six superintendents, six department superintendents, eleven other officers, thirty-six teachers, thirty-two students.

J. T. Houser Forsakes Ministry for Business.

J. T. Houser, former pastor of First church, Davenport, Ia., and one of the promoters of the Church Efficiency Congress held there some time ago, has forsaken the ministry and is now a full-fledged merchant at Newton, Iowa.

Disciples Congress, Chicago, April 25-27.

The Disciples Congress will meet in Chicago, April 25-27. Great and timely themes are to be discussed and big men are to discuss them. Some of the notables to be present are: W. D. Ryan, Youngstown, O.; H. E. Stafford, Massillon, O., Prof. C. E. Underwood and Prof. W. C. Morro of Butler College; Prof. Charles M. Sharpe, of Chicago, and Editor F. D. Kershner, of the Christian Evangelist.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—After six years of faithful service as an official in Phillips Univrsity, Enid, Okla., Chancellor O. N. Roth has tendered his resignation to the Board of Trustees, to take effect June 1, 1916, at the close of the present school year.

—The Bible school of the church at Rushville, Mo., claims the largest men's class for a town of this size in the state. The attendance on a recent Sunday was 121. M. M. Goode, of St. Joseph, is pastor of the church and F. M. Allison, teacher of the young men's class.

—C. M. Chilton, of First church, St. Joseph, Mo., gave a memorial address on George Washington at the church and the meeting was attended by the Sons of the Revolution, in a body.

—Maywood church, Oklahoma City, Okla., has begun the erection of a new building. Garrett W. McQuiddy is pastor.

—Carl Burkhardt, pastor at Franklin, Ind., gave the annual sermon to the local Knights of Pythias Lodge. His theme was "Practicing Friendship," and the sermon was reproduced in the Franklin papers.

—In connection with the proposed revival series to be held at Battle Creek, Mich., by M. H. Garrard, pastor, and J. S. Raum, evangelist, the following schedule of special days is being followed: February 27, visitation day number one; March 5, church attendance day; March 12, personal workers' day; March 19, visitation day number two; March 26, Bible-school day; April 2, women's day; April 9, men's day; April 16, young people's day; April 23, Easter Sunday, decision day and the beginning of the revival.

—Central Avenue church, Cleveland, Tenn., J. C. Polley, pastor, announces that it will erect a new $30,000 home.

—D. A. Wickizer, pastor at Norman, Okla., and, on the side, owner of a 2,000 acre ranch in Texas, recently occupied W. S. Lockhart's pulpit, at South Side, Houston, Tex.

—Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, pastor of the Linwood Blvd. church, Kansas City, will deliver the baccalaureate sermon at the June commencement of the Bible Chair at the University of Texas.

—The following "Men and Millions" leaders visited the Youngstown, O., churches recently: Mrs. Anna Atwater, president of the National C. W. B. M.; Secretary A. E. Cory; Secretary R. H. Miller; President T. E. Cramblet of Bethany College; President M. L. Bates of Hiram College; Dr. R. J. Dye of Africa; H. P. Shaw of China; Secretary J. H. Booth of the Board of Church Extension; Secretary J. H. Mohorter of the Benevolent Association; President F. W. Burnham of the American Christian Missionary Society; Secretary W. R. Warren, of the Board of Ministerial Relief, and W. E. Gordon of India.

—Arthur Stout and wife, who led the church at Bowling Green, Mo., report the arrival of an assistant pastor on February 22 —an eight pounder.

—Melnotte Miller, evangelist of the Southwestern District, Indiana, has resigned and accepted work in California. His wife has been in the West for some time and Mr. Miller will go this month. Indiana will lose a good man and California gains a successful evangelist.

—Announcement was made recently of the Kentucky Eleventh District School of Methods to be held at Mt. Vernon, May 29-June 2, 1916, the plans for which are now being made.

—A recent sermon of Carey E. Morgan on "Living in Three Tenses," was published in full in the Nashville, Tenn., "Banner." This address was the first of a series of "Every Day Life Sermons."

—It is reported that the attendance at the Des Moines Laymen's Missionary Conference was so large that the women were requested to stay away. The meetings were held at Central church.

—A $12,000 mortgage on First church, Johnstown, Pa., went up in smoke late in February. C. W. Stine is pastor at this church.

—Geo. E. Lyon, State Secretary of Kansas, has brought out a brief history of every minister in the State, the fields of his labor and interesting facts of his ministry.

—Kyle Brooks, pastor at Henderson, Ky., will remain with this work. It was rumored that the church would lose Mr. Brooks from its pastorate. A hundred new members have been enlisted at Henderson during the year of the present pastorate.

—A debate on "Preparedness" was held between the Men's Christian Brotherhood, Havana, Ill., and a team from the High School.

—"I'd rather lead a person to Jesus Christ than to put through the biggest business deal ever presented to me," is the way R. A. Doan, successful business man, now engaged as a missionary leader, put it at a recent rally in Peoria, Ill.

—Edgar D. Jones preached a sermon to young people on marriage. His theme was, "To Have and to Hold."

—Ernest C. Mobley, pastor at Amarillo, Tex., is chairman of a committee of the churches there to post directories of the city's churches in hotels, passenger stations, etc.

—At a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees of Atlantic Christian College, Raymond A. Smith, of Beckley, W. Va., was unanimously elected president of Atlantic Christian College, Wilson, N. C., to succeed J. C. Caldwell, the newly elected dean of the College of the Bible of Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa. Mr. Smith will assume his new task in June.

—Walter Scott Priest, pastor at Central church, Topeka, Kan., talked to the Kansas Club at a luncheon given in honor of Washington's birthday.

—Hon. Eugene W. Chafin, twice a candidate for president on the prohibition ticket, delivered an address at First church, Independence, Kan., on Feb. 25.

—About three hundred persons were present at a recent business meeting and social evening at Albion, Ill., church. Miss Lulu Miner, representing Eureka College, was one of the guests.

—Judge J. N. Haymaker of Wichita, Kan., promised his class some time ago to banquet them if they would increase their enrollment to 100. The goal was reached and Judge Haymaker is reported to have carried out his promise most loyally.

—President R. H. Crossfield gave the principal address at the annual reception of the large men's Bible-class, at Nicholasville, Ky.

—W. B. Clemmer has been selected as general chairman to superintend a union meeting of the Rockford, Ill., churches extending up to Easter.

—Third church, Topeka, Kan., H. J. Crockett, pastor, has received forty-two new members since January 1.

—A. B. Philputt recently spoke at one of the Indianapolis branch libraries on the subject, "Country Folk in Town."

—J. W. Underwood addressed an audience of over 2,000 women on "The Traffic in Souls," at Central church, Anderson, Ind. His discourse was based on government reports from the general cleanup of Pittsburgh, which was made while Mr. Underwood was pastor of a Pittsburgh church, and in which be participated.

—There were 75 added to Third Church, Philadelphia, Pa., last year, T. E. Winter is pastor.

—Guy W. Sarvis has been chosen to succeed F. E. Meigs in the work at the college in Nanking, China.

—The great Christian Endeavor Society at Central church, Des Moines, held its annual banquet late last month, and at this season had turned over to its hands the editing of one issue of the "Christian Worker." The special issue is remarkably bright and newsy.

—Des Moines, Ia., churches will observe April 9, as "Everybody-go-to-Church Sunday."

—D. L. Hilligan, pastor of the Christian church at Arlington, Ind., has seven brothers in the British army and navy. One brother left for the Dardanelles a year ago. Shortly thereafter he was wounded, but Mr. Milligan has never heard from him since.

—R. W. Gentry, pastor at Winfield, Kan., has for the third time been elected platform manager of the Winfield Chautauqua.

—C. F. Hutslar, J. P. McKnight, R. F. Thrapp, J. G. Warren and R. W. Abberley as a committee are making a survey of the location and opportunities of the churches in Los Angeles, and will present a report on the possibilities of greater efficiency by consolidation.

—In an address by Frank Waller Allen before the Federation of Labor at Springfield, Ill., he urged the necessity of the church standing for the principles of organized labor.

Louisville 1916 School of Methods Breaks All Records.

The Third Annual Greater Louisville School of Principles and Methods at the Clifton church closed Feb. 21, breaking all former records and no doubt had the largest attendance of any School of Methods ever held in the State. The total registration was 320 and 40 people were awarded International Certificates. The State Superintendent, Walter E. Frazee, was Dean of the school and presided at all sessions, as well as presenting the courses on administration. The faculty and special lecturers numbered fifteen. Mrs John S. Asbury had charge of the Elementary Department and was assisted by Miss Bernice W. Bell, Miss Carline B. Bourgard and Miss Nannie Lee Frayser, who also gave two special lectures before the entire school. W. N. Briney gave a course in "Studies in Soul Winning." The adult division work was given by W. J. Vaughan, Field Worker of the Kentucky Sunday-school Association, who also spoke on Temperance; Dr. George A. Joplin, State Secretary Kentucky Sunday-school Association; Marion Stevenson; Mr. Briney; and C. C. Stoll, Chairman Adult Division, International Sunday-school Association. The Secondary division was in charge of Roy K. Roadruck, who was assisted by Miss Mary A. Price, State Secondary Superintendent of the Kentucky Association. The course in Missions was introduced by Miss Kate Galt Miller. Mrs. T. J. Minary, State Missionary Superintendent, spoke on the Standard for the School. Miss Lucy King DeMoss, of the Foreign Society, presented "Little Journeys to Far Countries," and Robt. M. Hopkins, National Bible-school Secretary, closed the series with an address on Alaska. Marion Stevenson, of St. Louis, was chief lecturer, presenting studies on the Bible, Religious Pedagogy and special lectures. W. P. Crouch is pastor of the Clifton church.

ON THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

HERE'S WHAT HE SAYS ABOUT THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

"No study is more important than the study of the Bible and the truths which it teaches, and there is no more effective agency for such study than the Sunday School. It is certainly one of the greatest factors in our lives in the building of character and the development of moral fiber. The Sunday School lesson of to-day is the code of morals of to-morrow."

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity -several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Volume XXXIII MARCH 16, 1916 Number 11

"If a Man Die, Shall He Live Again?"

THE HISTORY OF HUMAN THOUGHT, BUTTRESSED BY THE EXPERIENCES OF THE RACE IN ITS EFFORTS TO EXPLORE THE FUTURE, POINTS TO THE CONCLUSION THAT THERE IS NO SUFFICIENT GROUND FOR THE BELIEF THAT ANY FORM OF SURVIVAL OF DEATH IS THE CLEAR AND UNESCAPABLE DESTINY OF MANKIND.

In our reflection upon this theme which has engaged the interest of the race from its beginnings, it is well to take inventory of our possessions, and not to cheat ourselves with guesses. It has been pointed out already, in an earlier word upon this subject, that the mood of the present age is largely indifferent to a future life, and that it is no longer possible for even the most concerned to rest in easy security upon the confident beliefs of former days.

When Job, perplexed by the tangle in which he was involved, turned for a moment from the usual unconcern of the Hebrew over the problem of death, to an agonized inquiry as to whether there might be some solution for his perplexity in the speculation of a future life, he gave it but a moment's regard, and then in weariness set himself once more to the contemplation of the great enigma.

This scepticism, or rather total indifference, on this theme was the attitude of the people of the Old Testament until its latest period. Satisfied with the blessings of long life and a numerous posterity, they lived in the clan, and any survival of death, save as the family and the nation went on to nobler fortune, was beyond the frontier of their thinking. The individual withered, but the tribe survived. Even if such an idea as personal immortality could have been entertained, it would have been a strange guest, and counted of little worth.

Though there were races, like the Egyptian, who had an elaborate program of the future life, they seem in no way to have influenced the Hebrews in this regard, and their fanciful conceptions of the future were but slightly conducive to morality or character.

It is true that many Old Testament texts have been pressed into service in the interest of a doctrine of the future life. But with the exception of late and apocalyptic passages, there is not a word in the Hebrew Scriptures which relates to immortality. Careful study leads to the conviction that Christian translators and interpreters have unconsciously read into the aspirations of psalmists and patriarchs the glowing hopes of a later age and a fuller faith.

Nor must it be forgotten that while some of the early races had in various forms the idea of a future life, and others had none, there is another phase of the problem which throws light upon the desirability of such an expectation. A large fraction of the human race in Asia, uninfluenced by the doctrine of immortality, and indifferent to ancestor worship, which in a manner involves the same idea, hold unquestioningly to the belief in pre-existence, as well as survival, under the idea of transmigration. They accept implicitly the teaching of their sages that through uncounted eons they have lived in various forms, animal and human, and through other eons they must still continue the weary round of existence till their mysterious destiny has been fulfilled, and they are released from the dreadful "wheel of life."

To such multitudes the confident expectation of a future existence is unattended by any satisfaction. Like the old lama in Kipling's "Kim," they would be willing to undergo any penance in order to gain release from the endless round of lives. And if we say that their notions of pre-existence are delusions, should we say the same of their views of the future? At all events it is clear that survival is not of itself a thing to bring happiness.

Of widely differing moods are those who have put all interest in a life to come out of their minds. Whole races go down to the dust without any apparent concern for the future, or, like many of the Chinese, quite untouched by any implications of the doctrine of ancestor worship, take their own lives with fatalistic unconcern.

And there are other multitudes, cultered, gifted, but world-weary, who take the road of philosophic despair, and disdain any speculations regarding the future. To them the negative words of science are conclusive. The aspirations of the centuries after a better life to follow death are admirable superstitions, to which the sophisticated can give no heed. They hold the creed of Omar:

"Alike for those who for To-day prepare,
And those who after some To-morrow stare,
A muezzin from the tower of darkness cries,
'Fools, your reward is neither here nor there!'"

And in the thought of many such, death is no tragedy. "To die, to sleep; no more." With such a solemn consummation life seems crowned with a certain dignity. It is the coming of the cool and silent night after the rush and turmoil of the day. There are no stars in the sky, but the hush of brooding quietness seems like a benediction.

To the Christian this seems a tragic defeat of all the holiest hopes he has cherished, and no defence is here attempted in behalf of this mood. But there can be little question that great numbers of our fellow men contemplate death in this all but emotionless manner. They are not afraid of death. The incidents told of the death-bed experiences of the unbelieving sound remote and foolish to them. They do not care what happens, for whatever it be, they will not know. In that confidence they can make their own that curious song of Christina Rossetti, deprecating any sorrow or solicitude on the part of the loved who are left behind:

"I shall not see the shadows, I shall not feel the rain,
I shall not hear the nightingale sing on as if in pain:
A dreaming through the twilight that doth not rise or set,
Hap'ly I remember, and hap'ly may forget."

It is the thesis of these reflections upon the future life that we can only gain for ourselves and our generation a valid faith after facing with something like sympathy

The Disciples' Congress

BY F. E. LUMLEY

FROM time to time many good people have questioned the value of the Disciples' Congress and some have had the courage to advocate its abandonment. These persons may be divided into several classes: those who oppose the Congress because they never attend it and really know nothing about it; those who condemn it because they disagree with its past promoters and those who, while once its friends and supporters, have for various satisfying reasons become doubtful of its present worth. To the first and second of these classes we have little to say; no argument would be convincing because conviction is not desired. They are against the Congress for the same reason that the Irishman was 'agin' the government. But for those who, after honest consideration of the matter, have become doubtful and have dared to express their doubts, we have the utmost regard, and it may not be amiss to respectfully request a reconsideration of some neglected aspects of the question.

SERVICE BY CRITICISM.

It should be said at the outset that those who offer honest and pointed criticism of an institution or opinion do a real service. No institution should become so sacred that it cannot be re-examined. Such an attitude is dangerous to those who take it and it makes for impositions upon future generations. It is dangerous for us to get into the habit of perpetuating institutions and beliefs simply because they have always been, or are very old. When we passively receive what the past has given us with no recognition of its intrinsic worth to us we are doing no better than primitive people who always offer one and only one reason for certain forms of behavior and belief: "Our fathers believed in this and did it this way." And of course some of us see that this is no reason at all. To take such an attitude is to blunt our powers of discrimination and it usually inmeshes us in a web of hindering and useless practices. Such an attitude is retrogressive in a progressive world.

In addition, we work a harm to future generations when we carelessly transmit useless luggage. We thereby bind on them heavy burdens which we have been unwilling or too indifferent or lazy to handle. Each generation has a moral obligation then to inquire into the value of what they have inherited, to appropriate what is valuable and cast off the rest so that the future generations may not be fettered and handicapped at the very outset. It is entirely commendable, therefore, to criticise the Congress and fearlessly set aside what is mere impedimenta in it. If, as a whole, it has outlived its usefulness, then let us frankly say so and have done with it. On the other hand, if we can discover real values in it which are worthy of more appreciation, then let us keep it and develop it into a more serviceable institution. This is the only honorable thing to do from every standpoint.

IS THE CONGRESS WORTH WHILE?

This brief writing takes the position that the Congress is worth while, indeed, that it is of the very greatest importance to us. Among other reasons that might be mentioned, one seems outstanding: the Disciples need a truth-seeking body and this is the function of the Congress. Every movement needs such a body. To be always repeating the past in word and deed as far as possible is to drift. To be ever harping on old, well-formulated doctrines and defending them against all attacks is to develop a spirit of pugnacity which is all too easily cultivated. To be ever emphasizing some program and trying to carry it through as it was originally outlined is often to make it ridiculous and bring it into disrepute. Our world continually changes and there must be ever new adaptations and re-discoveries. Each generation has the responsibility of transmitting what is good out of the past and in addition, making a contribution to it.

It is undoubtedly true that the blind acceptance of political, economic and religious dogmas which have been widely accepted in the past but which, on examination, are found to be out of adjustment with our present thinking, acting and needs, is one of the chief failings of most people. It is easier to accept gifts than to discover them; it is easier to walk in the old paths than to blaze new trails. The Disciples need a body of people with the avowed purpose of challenging everything and holding fast to that which is good.

BLAZING NEW TRAILS.

Our National Convention is not a truth-seeking body so much as it is a propagandist body. Its aim is not to know reality better so much as it is to outline certain programs of action, enlist interest and then put them through. It is an agreeable manner of informing our congregations of what is expected of them. It is not affirmed, of course, that the Convention does not seek the truth. It does seek it but always for practical and immediate purposes—the working out of some missionary or reform program. And its aim being practical, the convention, like every other such body, is subject to the bias of urgency and expediency. And this bias may and often does almost nullify the efforts expended in truth-seeking. The facts and principles presented are not presented for their own sake but for the purpose of stirring the people to action. Then it is almost unavoidable that some facts and principles should be neglected, some minimized, some exaggerated, some distorted and all suffused with emotion to accomplish the desired result.

It is not argued that such unfaithfulness to the truth is conscious or intentional. No sordid motive is imputed. It is argued, however, that with a certain end in view and a certain purpose to be attained, it is easy and natural to adopt questionable means. All respectable propagandists recognize this danger. And it is especially insidious at large gatherings where there is much enthusiasm, much ground to cover and little time.

CONVENTION HANDICAPS.

Moreover, the people who attend our conventions, for the most part, are not there to be enlightened so much as to be stirred up and made to feel right. They do not go to hear cold-blooded, dispassionate, logical presentations from thinkers who have given years of research along certain lines. They do not go there to think hard. In a very real sense our National Convention is a gigantic revival of enthusiasm for various of our favorite programs. Knowing this the speakers are tempted sorely to employ such means as will best attain the end.

The National Convention is the Disciples congregated for the purpose of getting something DONE. On the other hand the Congress is the Disciples gathered for the purpose of getting something better KNOWN. The difference is one of the emphasis largely but it is fundamental. In the convention the supposition always is that, in the words of a recent correspondent, "we know enough now, let us be doing something about it." There is usually a large display of wide open doors of opportunity and we are all encouraged to enter at once, it being assumed always that it is desirable to enter—and at once. What attention is given to research and information always has this end in view.

REDISCOVERING TRUTH.

The Congress has no object. In it we are encouraged to understand our world better, to take a new look at reality, to patiently and persistently re-examine problems which many superficially have considered solved. The enthusiasm is all for the re-discovery of truth. And the assumption is that those who get a new vision will go home and apply themselves with more vigor and intelligence to their own particular problems with the new light to guide them. There is the least possible room for diverting influences of any kind for no attempt is made to commit anybody to any particular theory or line of action. The fullest possible discussion of every theme is desired and every speaker is heard for the worth of what he has to say in itself. The sole object is to light up truth and when this is done in any degree, the purpose of the meeting is attained. And the people attend not for the purpose of being enlisted to take up some work of great importance represented by an advocate who leaves the impression that nothing else in the world is worth while. They attend to think and to think hard. Consequently the Congress has never been popular. Hard thinking and earnest consideration are not popular; Christ-like toleration of opposite opinions freely and fearlessly expressed is not popular; patient examination of the difficult problems of life with the avowed purpose of following the gleam wherever it may lead is not popular.

The difference, therefore, between the Convention and the Congress is great but both are needed. It is important to get things done but so is it important to get things understood. It may be observed also that the Congress considers a greater variety of themes than the Convention. It is more universal in its outlook. It thus helps us out of our provincialism.

"The Fellowship Movement"

At First Christian Church, Springfield, Illinois.

BY FRANK WALLER ALLEN

THE Fellowship Movement grew out of the need of a means of expression for the life of the young people of the community through the church. As is indicated in Mr. Meredith's article, printed elsewhere, in the fall of 1914 there was a dearth of youth in First church. Of course this does not apply to the Bible-school.

The Christian Endeavor Society was composed of a small group of excellent young people, working faithfully at what to many seemed a lifeless task. It was with these twelve or fifteen young men and women, trained in the Endeavor Society, that the Fellowship Movement was instituted. In a year and a half it has manifested itself in three or four different ways, enrolling something over two hundred in some active service through the church.

THE FELLOWSHIP CLASS.

One of the most popular expressions of the Movement is the Fellowship Class. This meets every Sunday evening at 6:30 o'clock. The work is opened by a ten minutes' devotional service led by some member of the class. It is claimed that the value of the devotional service does not depend upon its length. After this the pastor of the church informally lectures on some phase of religion as it is related to the lives of the young. The entire service bears in mind the facts learned from psychology, that there is a religion for youth itself distinct and apart from the religion of maturity or childhood. During the fall and winter work of this year the theme has been "Jesus Among the People."

There follow some of the subjects discussed under this head, in every instance modernizing and making personal the application: Jesus Among the People: The Child, The Youth, The Carpenter, The Citizen, In the Toils of Temptation, As Preacher and Teacher, As Traveler and Companion, Among the Children, At the Marriage, In the Home, With the Hungry.

The meeting is closed by a freewill offering, two verses of song and the Endeavor benediction. It has been discovered that a freewill offering proves more practical than a system of dues. Practically all other meetings are free, no offering or admission being allowed. The offerings of the class finance all other work.

THE FORUM IDEA SUCCESSFUL.

The second expression of the Movement is the Fellowship Forum. At least once a month, and more frequently if necessary for the sake of variety, an outside speaker appears before the Fellowship Class, speaking on a subject pertaining to some practical issue in the city or national life. After his message an opportunity is given for any one to ask questions, or to reply to the speaker. The idea is not merely to have a "speech" by an "outsider," but to have a really debatable problem brought before the Forum by one who speaks with a measure of authority. Neither is this done to get a "prominent" man in the community to make "a little high and mighty talk" to "our young people." It is to get issues about which information is needed before them by anybody who possesses the facts and the ability to present them.

SOME FORUM TOPICS.

Thus the matter of a prison farm for Sangamon County was discussed in the light of modern prison reform and the practibility of such an institution for Springfield. "The New Education," especially as it is being worked out at Gary, Indiana, was thoroughly thrashed out in this Forum. "Trade Unionism" was presented by a member of the local Federation of Labor. "The Church and Social Service" has been discussed from many points of view by different speakers. "Preparedness," "The Initiative and Referendum," and other issues which pertain to state and national life have been presented.

This Forum takes the time and place of the class, operating under the same machinery, opening in the same manner. It creates interest through change, bringing a new and fresh point of view, and yet practically carries out the ideal of the class in seeking to interpret religion for youth in the terms of daily life.

PLAY IN THE FELLOWSHIP.

A third manifestation of the Movement is the Fellowship at Play. The vision of the builders of the First church of Springfield facilitates this plan. The building contains a large indoor playground at one side of which is a stage. Under the leadership of a young man with Y. M. C. A. training, indoor lawn tennis, indoor baseball and basketball are played throughout all the winter months. The young men have certain evenings in the week and the young women the afternoons. The stage is used for such entertainments and plays as the young people care to give.

At least once a month all are brought together in a social gathering that is either a "party," or an athletic contest. Two organizations connected with this expression of the work are the Discussion Club made up of a High School group, who, fortnightly, around the supper table, to which each one brings his own food, discuss new books, athletics, and plans for work. One advantage of this club is that these discussions are not carried on under the auspices of mature people, but give expression to the initiative and leadership of its members.

The other organization connected with the Fellowship at Play is the Illini Junior Republic, a group of young boys, under the leadership of the young man who has in charge the athletic work. These young men have in the church a club room, containing a small library and periodicals, which they use as headquarters for their various activities. An out of door tennis court and playground are maintained for summer use.

NO HARD AND FAST METHODS.

It will be seen that this Movement covers the complete expression of the life of the young. Supervised play, indoors and out; instruction, discussion and leadership in matters that pertain to the practical problems of their individual and social life; and the need of worship is met by the devotional period of the Fellowship Class.

The pastor co-operates with the leaders of this work, bearing in mind the particular needs of the adolescent period. No methods or forms are maintained for their own sake, but only as they give the best medium of expression to youth. It is an application of the modern ideals of religious education. The old Endeavor Society was not dropped just for the sake of dropping something. It was failing to do the work it had once done so splendidly and is still doing so effectively in many places. Nor was the Movement inaugurated for the sake of "starting" something. It grew out of the desire of a great church to meet the need of the young people of the community. It is the utilization in the interest of religion of the information that general psychology has stamped with approval. It is an attempt to train youth "not merely FOR religion, but also IN religion."

Attracting Youth to the Church

The Springfield Experiment as Reviewed by One of the Members of the Fellowship Class.

BY DE WITT MEREDITH

YOUTH is no longer interested in old methods of education. Youth is not interested in yesterday. The younger generations today are doing their best to throw off the old and improve the new. Youth can no longer be compelled to learn, youth is resourceful and aspires to see. Education must be made attractive and the element of forced study must be eliminated.

These are educational truths proven by the success of the young people's movement in the First Christian church at Springfield. The realization of the attitude taken by the youths of today toward education in all its forms, is responsible for a rapidly turning tide of interest in church work in this particular institution.

The church is first an institution of education. If it fails in modern methods, its usefulness is ended. Eager youth is disgusted rather than interested. The church is far behind modern school systems in methods of teaching. It lacks interest because of time-worn theory and practice.

Development of the church for the future depends upon what it holds for youth. It must give much, to receive much. Youth is ever watchful and ambitious to attain. It aspires to leadership and holds reverence for wise leaders.

These facts are summarized of indefinable facts which have unfolded to work a reformation of activity in this particular church. Youth has responded to that something which creates interest, and fosters endeavor.

SOMETHING TO DO.

Educators and churchmen wonder just what has happened. Two years ago there were not enough young people in the church life, outside of Sunday-school, to hold a song service. This was true in spite of the fact that a beautiful new house had just been placed over their heads. There seemed to be nothing for youth to do. A young people's society struggled along with a few staunch members who held prayer and song services on the order of those attended by their great-grandfathers.

About fifteen months ago, Rev. Frank Waller Allen, formerly of Paris, Mo., took charge of the church work. Youthful himself, he was shocked to find that the younger folk had apparently fled the church. He at once centered his efforts on bringing youth and life back into the church. He faced a great handicap. The old had worn completely out, for youth, and the new was too new.

Gradually plans were formulated. Radical changes were necessary. Staid old churchmen gasped when Rev. Mr. Allen announced an intention to do away with the old formalities and begin a new kind of work in the church which placed the emphasis on social service.

Instead of the old prayers, songs and personal experience confession program for young people's meetings, he proposed lectures. These lectures were to be entirely educational and tempered by song and prayer.

The excitement of getting away from the old solemn sessions attracted youth. Youth knew something was happening and wanted to be there because something was happening. An effort was being made to pull the old cart of religious formality from the rut of time. The cart might break down and curious youth wanted to be "in" on the excitement.

YOUTH'S ENERGY HARNESSED.

The cart did not break down. A miracle, it seemed, changed it into a mighty tractor which pulled youth and life and energy back into the church. Youth saved the day. The teachings of a wise leader accomplished unusual results. Today no church in Springfield can boast a more interested and energetic houseful of young people.

The energy of youth, the development of a new educational scheme, attracted the old as well. Many of the oldest members of the congregation and of the community are now active in the young people's movement. They are attracted by the unlimited possibilities which are developing rapidly through the co-operation of youth.

The young people's work is centered in what is called the "Fellowship Class." It formerly was known as the Christian Endeavor Society and the average attendance has increased from 10 or 12 each Sunday evening to 100 and 150, in the last year. It is now more on the order of a public forum. Outsiders, even those of opposing religious sects, are invited in to attend the meetings and hear the lectures. The class meets for an hour each Sunday evening before church services begin.

NEW IDEALS.

Religious education full of new ideas and ideals is the keynote of the program. Problems of social welfare are discussed and prominent men in affairs of the world often are asked to address the class on various subjects.

Most of the lectures, however, are given by the pastor. A very interesting series on the life of Christ, based on "Jesus in Every Day Life," has just been completed. Problems of every day life are talked upon and then discussed. The class endeavors to consider with open minds the daily problems of man, no matter what his estate.

Community socials, for which there is no charge, are a feature of the work and a Discussion Club also figures prominently in attracting youth to the church. Young people gather for suppers and spend the evenings playing games or discussing problems of the day. They often read books and stories of interest to youth and development, and then discuss them. The church has taken a new lease on life, through youth.

At Syrian Protestant College

Something of the Work Being Done by Herbert L. Willett, Jr., and Others in a Strategical Field.

AS IS known by most Disciples, Dr. Willett's son, Herbert L. Willett, Jr., is a teacher in the largest missionary college in Asia. This is located in Beirut, Syria, a city of more than a hundred thousand population, situated on the Mediterranean coast, about twenty miles north of Sidon.

The situation of Beirut is very beautiful. It is as attractive a location and harbor as Genoa or Naples or Hongkong. The city lies upon rising ground close to the harbor, and back of it lie the Lebanon mountains, the highest peaks of which are always crowned with snow.

The college is situated at the southern end of the city, perhaps a half mile distant from the harbor, and on higher ground than the business section and the bazaars. The college is almost a city in itself, surrounded with a high wall and including a score or more of buildings and residences.

MANY RELIGIONS REPRESENTED.

The students of the Syrian Protestant College come from all sections of the Levant, including Egypt and Asia Minor. They include representatives of many different religions, Christian, Mohammedan, and all the other varieties which abound in the Orient. The work of the school is conducted wholly in English, and the first months of the student life in the college are devoted to the mastery of the English language.

The college was founded nearly sixty years ago, by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, but is now an independent institution carrying on all grades of collegiate work, for the purpose of preparing the young men of the Turkish Empire for usefulness in all the modern fields of activity. Regular religious services are held in the college daily. Attendance upon these was formerly required, but during the past year the Turkish government abolished the so-called "Capitulations," or agreements made with the government of the United States granting certain privileges to American citizens and institutions in Turkey. The college is no longer permitted to require the attendance of Mohammedan students upon its Bible classes or religious services, but it makes these exercises as attractive as possible and many of the students still attend. The college has been granted the right, however, to substitute required courses in ethics for the former compulsory biblical and religious courses.

MANY AMERICAN TEACHERS.

The president of the institution is Dr. Howard Bliss, whose father, Rev. Daniel Bliss, founded the college, and still survives as a venerable figure on the campus. Dr. Bliss has been able to finance the institution through the generosity of friends in America. A large proportion of the teaching body is American. The college has a plan of employing young men as members of its staff of instruction for a period of three years. This is the term for which they go out to Beirut.

Herbert L. Willett, Jr.

Afterward if their service has been acceptable they may become members of the faculty and remain permanently.

Mr. Willett is completing his third year as a member of the staff. His work has been in English and history. In addition he has conducted certain Bible classes and has had much to do with the musical activities of the college. He will return in August to complete his graduate studies and receive his degree. Whether he will return to Beirut as a member of the faculty, as he has been invited to do, has not yet been decided.

There are three important missionary interests centering in Beirut, but under separate management. One is the Syrian Protestant College, one is the Presbyterian Mission in charge of the Lebanon district, and one is the Syrian Protestant Press which publishes the Arabic Bibles for the entire Moslem territory, and a very large amount of Christian literature in the Arabic tongue. Dr. F. E. Hoskins, the head of the Presbyterian mission, is the director of Presbyterian missions not only in Beirut, but throughout the extensive Lebanon region.

DERANGEMENT OF POSTAL SERVICE.

On his various vacations Mr. Willett has had admirable opportunity to visit these various stations and other places of interest in northern Palestine. For a time he contributed regularly to the pages of The Christian Century articles of interest on the work of the college and life in Syria. But the total derangement of postal service incident to the war, and the strict censorship which has made communication with Syria very difficult, have compelled him to abandon this interesting line of work, which did much to interpret educational, political and social conditions in Syria to American readers.

While the members of the college community have not been placed in danger by war conditions, they have been called upon to witness the sufferings and hardships of the entire native community, and to assist as far as possible in relieving the distress and the sickness which have resulted from the war. The political situation in Beirut is far from secure. Yet up to the present time the rights of Americans have been reasonably respected. No doubt this has been due to President Bliss' tact, to the presence and activity of the American Consul, to the long-standing acquaintance and high regard in which the missionary community is held by the people of the district, and to the presence most of the time of the United States battleship "North Carolina" in the harbor of Beirut. The chief difficulties are the danger of epidemic, and the excessively high prices which make life very hard. Examples of the high cost of living may be noted in the price of kerosene oil at $2 a gallon, and sugar at 38c a pound.

SERVICE RENDERED BY MISSIONARIES.

The Americans in Beirut have done much to relieve the situation among the unfortunate and suffering people, whose property has been taken and whose men have been drafted for war purposes. Residents of the foreign colony who happened to be citizens of the allied countries fighting against Germany and Turkey have been summarily removed and in many instances interned in most uncomfortable places. At the same time thousands of Jews, Syrians, Greeks and Russians have taken refuge in Egypt, whither large numbers of them have been transported by the American warships. In these unhappy events the American missionaries have rendered services which can never be computed, and have found means of serving their fellow men as important and sacrificial as those rendered by the Red Cross Association on the battle fields of Europe. THE WORLD'S SADNESS

THE Lenten days are the memorial of the Savior's sojourn in the wilderness. They recall the long and lonely tarrying in the desolate uplands of Judea. They bring to mind the vigils and fasting through which the Lord passed in his prolonged contemplation of the task to which his life was devoted, and the means by which it was to be accomplished.

It was a time of sadness as well as of solemn joy. It closed the period of high and purposeful youth, and opened that of consecrated manhood. He knew himself at last implicit in the struggle of the race. Henceforth mankind was his concern. And that meant that the sorrows of all the world were his own.

It has not been otherwise through the ages. The great Christians have been those who have suffered with the race and borne the world's distresses. The missionaries have always counted it the sad privilege of their lives to share the griefs of their great parishes. The humblest Christian worker must to the limit of his sympathy enter into the world's sorrow.

One wonders if this is not the proper Lenten thought for our day and our nation. Most of the world is in agony of spirit, passing through a deep and tragic Gethsemane. Our own land is at peace with all the nations, and for this there is a universal sentiment of gratitude. May that peace remain unbroken.

But the Christian is humbled by the reflection that vast numbers of our people, untouched by any sentiment of regret, are hastening to coin the bloody tragedy into the sordid money of selfish profit. If we were but supplying the actual needs of the suffering in Europe no voice could be lifted in protest. But there is something unspeakably abhorrent in the thought that America appears before the world as the eager profit-maker in a time of almost universal grief.

Has the Lenten time any meaning to us in days like these?

THE DISCIPLES' CONGRESS

IT OUGHT not to escape the remembrance of any of our intelligent and progressive men that the Congress is to be held in this city April 25-27. The program has been prepared with the same care that has marked the preparations for all the previous gatherings of this body.

Not all who would enjoy the sessions will be able to come. But deliberate effort will do much to clear the way to such an end. No one who attends the sessions of any of our Congresses feels at the close that he can ever afford to remain away again.

Watch for the notices and the program, and plan to be here.

DR. CLARK'S RECOVERY

LOT Christian Endeavorers alone, but all Christian people have been concerned at the long illness of Dr. Francis E. Clark, whose life has been spent for thirty-five years in the cause of the young people of the churches.

In a note just received from Secretary Shaw, of the Christian Endeavor Union, there are these good words: "I know you will rejoice with us in the news that comes from Dr. Clark of his complete restoration to health and strength, He is now on his way to Japan, Korea and China for a series of conventions, and he will return in the early summer."

This is good news, indeed, and with it comes a reference to the campaign for millions suggested by Dr. Clark at the Chicago Convention last year, and adopted by all the unions. It is being pushed with enthusiasm and success. Nothing ever suggested to the societies seems to have caught the imagination and interest of the young people as has this plan.

FRESH PLANS FOR THE YOUNG PEOPLE

NO BETTER proof of the perennial vitality of the church is to be found than its constant reaction to new stimuli in Christian service. The best evidence that Christianity is alive is the emergence of new activities to meet the changing need.

On other pages will be found interesting reports of the movement which has taken form at Springfield, Ill., under the leadership of the pastor of the First Church, Mr. Allen. The significance of the Fellowship Movement, as it is called, seems to lie in its answer to a real demand of the young people of the church and the community. Nothing in church life is worth while merely because it is venerable. The effort of the church in the present time seems to be to rid itself of customs which have outlived their worth.

Similarly any method which appears to enlist the young people in happy and effective service is worth while, though it may never have been tried before. We shall watch Mr. Allen's experiment with interest. It seems to have all the suggestiveness of a fresh discovery. Many, in fact all, of the devices now used with effectiveness in the church came into notice in the same inadvertent manner.

Why might not many churches whose young people are missing the note of reality in their co-operative work find value in some such plan as that now proving so helpful in Springfield? Mr. Allen informs us that he will be pleased to receive correspondence regarding this movement from interested pastors and other workers.

THE SUNDAY NEWSPAPER

THERE is a good deal of question in the minds of some conscientious people over the propriety of taking Sunday papers. Since it is plain that the quiet of the day of worship should be disturbed as little as possible, it would seem right to apply this principle to the Sunday paper.

There are those who are fully persuaded in their own minds on this question, and could not keep a clear conscience if they did otherwise than exclude such journals from their homes. For such we believe the duty is plain. And certainly they have on their side the overplus of the argument.

On the other hand there are those who believe that the Sunday paper is as much of a necessity as the street car, the police or the fire department. They think that the day of leisure should not be closed against one of the most important agents of public information and direction.

Much of the objection to the Sunday newspaper grows out of its undue size and the large amount of unworthful material with which its many pages are loaded. There can be no question that a large amount of church non-attendance is directly traceable to the Sunday paper. The temptation to sit down in negligee with the armful of sheets of the Sunday paper and then find it impossible to arouse oneself till the last page from colored comics to advertisements has been scanned, is in many cases too luring to be resisted.

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

By that time, it is, of course, too late to go to the church, and the day that should have been one of recreation, physical, mental and religious, has been started wrong, with a type of dissipation which casts its baleful effect over the entire day.

There are uses and abuses of the Sunday paper. The taking of such a sheet is a matter of the individual conscience. But its proper use, if it is taken, is a matter of good taste and common sense.

IF A MAN DIE, SHALL HE LIVE AGAIN?

the prevalent mood of indifference or scepticism experienced today. There is no virtue in unintelligent affirmation. A real faith in the life to come is neither an inheritance nor an easily annexed possession. It only comes with struggle, after a frank facing of the odds against it. No one believes in eternal life who has never doubted it. It has never been a matter of demonstration, and probably never will be. On that point something will be said later in these studies. But the Christian's hope must rest on faith and not on sight, and to that extent must be achieved and not lightly plucked by the way.

Is it possible to gain a faith, so that in the clear light of all that science can teach, experiment has defined, the Bible has affirmed, and the lives of the saints and the Savior have disclosed, one can acquire a confidence which shall be of value in the building of character and the interpretation of the universe? That is the question that must be answered if one would go forward in the companionship of the holiest spirits of the past, "To where, beyond these earthly voices there is peace."

CHANGING IDEALS

The man who makes his community a better place to live in is the man whose life is worth living. He may be rich or poor—that does not matter. A rich man may be a blessing to a town and a poor man may be a curse, or vice versa. It all depends upon the individual character of the man, whether he lives for the common good or against it. When a man's ambition and purpose is to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with his God, then, poor or rich, he is on the road of life's deepest satisfactions and values.

There has been, in the last twenty years, an overwhelming emphasis put upon riches and the power of riches, that has hurt the souls of many men. To-day, young men are beginning to have a clearer vision. They see increasingly that an ideal which includes greed of money is no ideal at all, but only a collection of selfish desires. The apostle Paul wrote to a young man once: "They that are minded to be rich fall into a temptation and a snare and many foolish and hurtful lusts, such as drown men in destruction and perdition"—and what is true in Timothy's time is equally true to-day.—The New Guide.

Union Churches

We are herewith presenting the first of a series of letters we expect to publish on the subject of union churches. These are not discussions of the subject, but actual reports of what is being done in various localities to reduce friction, to economize force and to promote in the most practicable manner that union which is increasingly desirable.
We shall be glad to use other reports of the same sort, and to learn of other instances in which the union movement is in progress, or is contemplated.
H. L. W.

A letter from Dr. James M. Campbell, of Claremont, Cal., a Congregational minister, but deeply interested in all efforts to promote Christian union, at various times pastor of churches that were practically union churches:

———

I am sorry I cannot give you much information regarding the Union Church Movement, which is the only solution of the problem in small communities. When I was at Lombard, Ill., the Congregational church at Elmhurst removed the denominational tag. We did not protest, but simply said that if they thought they could do their work better that way, let them try it. Our association did not even send a deputation to reason with them. I mention this simply to show the temper in which Congregationalists take such things.

The Lombard church had as its original name, "The First Church of Christ." That was afterwards changed to the "First Church of Lombard," it being for many years the only church in the place. I don't believe that one person in twenty in town could have told you to what denomination he belonged.

The church in Sierra Madre, Cal., has in its membership representatives of about twenty denominations. The only people we could not get into our happy fellowship were the people called "Christians."

The Avalon church was for about 20 years the only church on the island, and those who divided up the community for the glory of God will have to answer for it to him.

A united Christendom is bound to come—is coming—but it is folly to look for it in uniformity of doctrine or of ceremony. Christianity is vital, not static, and we are as free to change its outward forms as the apostles were. We may turn our heads backward, but the spirit of the time will sweep us on.

And at any rate, I am united to you all I can be—in spirit, in love, in faith, in fellowship, in everything that is worth while. We don't even need to keep jumping back and forth across the narrow stream that divides so many of God's people. We have moved beyond it.

Sincerely yours,
James M. Campbell.

THE CHURCH AT MONROE, WIS.

Our church was organized in 1905 as a Union church of Disciples and Baptists. Since the organization, we have kept along the even tenor of our way, growing somewhat numerically, and fostering broadness of view and a spirit of liberality for the various beliefs and doctrinal views on minor theological points held by the members of the church. And I may safely say that a minister would serve us a long, long time and not know who were Baptists, who were Disciples, or Episcopalians unless by special inquiry. We have been fortunate in having pastors of exceptional ability and tact, including Rev. J. H. Berkey, C. J. Armstrong, H. F. Burns, C. C. Todd and A. S. Cross.

While the union has been confined, I might say, narrowed, to the two denominations, I think the time is not far distant when we will admit members from any orthodox church by letter, whether immersed or sprinkled, and perhaps allow new members joining the church to exercise their own choice as to the form of baptism given.

We have as active members in the church, many who cannot at present become members, some Episcopalians, and some Congregationalists, who believe themselves to be baptized. I think that we are growing and broadening and that we shall take them in in the near future and be a REAL Union Church.

Very truly yours,
W. B. Monroe.

Methodists Face Problems at Saratoga.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church meets only every four years, but it remains in session for some weeks. This year the meeting will be held at Saratoga, New York, in May. There are some very urgent problems to be considered, chief of which is the problem of union with other branches of divided Methodism. The re-organization of the benevolent boards of the denomination looking to a decrease in numbers, is a matter of great importance. The appointment of negro bishops is a moot question which will receive further consideration this year. Last but not least is the perennial question of the amusement paragraph in the discipline book. There have been efforts for years to have this toned down in such a way as not to mention specific amusements by name.

Chicago Leads World for Sunday--schools.

It is not inappropriate that the International Sunday-school headquarters should be in Chicago, for this city has a larger Bible-school enrolment than any other city in the world. It is said there are fourteen states which have a smaller enrollment than this single city has, and the teachers and officers are greater in number than any one of twenty-six states has. This ought to mean that boy bandits will grow less in number and that Chicago will take her place in the foremost ranks of those who would claim the world as the home of righteousness.

Archbishop Surrounded by Pomp.

Archbishop Mundelein, of the Roman obedience, has become the owner of fifty millions of dollars of church property, and the spiritual ruler of a million and a third of religious people. In his archdiocese are 800 priests, 250 schools and fifty hospitals and asylums. When he was inducted into office, the governor of Illinois went beyond the state limits to meet him and he was presented with a document signed by the governor and the mayor of Chicago.

Riligious Riots in Chicago.

An ex-priest by the name of Slattery, with his wife, has been giving lectures in Chicago recently under the auspices of the Guardians of Liberty, an anti-Catholic society that is headed by General Miles. Catholics have packed the halls and assailed the speakers with bricks, eggs and other missiles. Mr. Slattery was slugged on a street car. Catholic policemen in the halls have been accused of inciting the riotous spirit instead of undertaking to quiet it. A priest is said to have led one mob and Archbishop Mundelein has been asked to discipline him. This he has refused to do.

St. Louis Will Receive the Gospel.

The inhabitants of St. Louis will have special facilities for receiving the gospel this coming summer. The pastors of the city will co-operate in supporting five different places for preaching in the city, where the gospel will be set forth every night during the season from May 1 to October 1. The effort is under the auspices of the Church Federation and the pastors will do all the preaching.

Dr. Aked Resigns.

There is no more outstanding ministerial figure on the Pacific coast than that of Dr. Charles F. Aked, of the First Congregational church, of San Francisco. He secured a leave of absence from his church to join the Ford party going to Europe and he is now to give all his time to the Peace League which has resulted from that journey, so he has now resigned his pulpit. During his ministry with this church a commodious church building has been erected, well located to reach transients in the hotels as well as the city in general. He was originally an English Baptist, and held a pastorate in New York.

Pope Seeks Temporal Power Again.

There seems to be little doubt that the Pope of Rome is hoping for a return of temporal power through the victory of the Central Powers. The German Roman Catholic organ, Germania, has recently published forecasts of a return of temporal sovereignty for the Pope following the war, and the clerical paper of Cologne followed suit immediately afterwards. The presence of Cardinal Mercier, of Belgium, in Rome at this time would seem to be an embarrassment to these plans.

Methodist School Plans Expansion.

Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill., a leading Methodist theological school operating on the campus of Northwestern University, lost its dormitory by fire two years ago when the historic Heck Hall burned. It is now announced that a new site has been purchased for the erection of a $150,000 dormitory for the theological students.

New England Ministers Have Circulating Library.

The Theological Library located at 53 Vernon St., Boston, is a circulating library for ministers. Practically all the religious books of value are to be found there. Transportation is paid on books in the rural parts of New England.

Catholics Have Suffered Losses..

The Rev. H. R. Fairbanks, rector of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic church, of Milwaukee, has issued a statement that if the Roman church had held its immigrants and their children in the United States, the Catholic population would be thirty millions instead of fifteen millions. This helps us to appreciate the claim of great Catholic advances in the United States.

Minister Starts League for Prisoners.

The Rev. Charles P. Tinker, D. D., superintendent of the New York City Mission Society of the Protestant Episcopal church, has started a Friendly Correspondence League, the members of which agree to write a friendly letter to a prisoner in the penitentiary once a month. The chaplains of the City Missionary Society connect religious people with worthy cases in jail and other penal institutions. Each Christian person is given just one prisoner to be concerned about. The plan is simple and has possibilities of helping prisoners after they leave prison.

Methodists Honor Bishop Thoburn.

Bishop Thoburn, the missionary bishop of India, for the Methodist Episcopal church, reached the age of eighty on March 7. Methodist churches throughout the land honored him by purchasing photographs of him and putting them up in the church. Sunday-schools had special programs giving the children information about his life and work.

Dr. Forsyth Questions Dr. R. J. Campbell.

Dr. Forsyth, principal of Hackney College of England, and a great non-conformist leader of England, has been writing Dr. R. J. Campbell, who recently left the City Temple for the service of the Established Church, about his relation to his former brethren. Dr. Forsyth has asked him to say that they were valid ministers of Christ. Dr. Campbell has refused to make any statement on this point. Dr. Forsyth evidently feels that men called to leading free church pulpits of England should be tried and true men for he writes: "This is far from the only case, which suggests that we ought to regain enough self-respect to be less easily exploited, less ready and effusive in receiving and accrediting people with obvious popular gifts without inquiring how they stand on the matters for which we exist, and without demanding a period of either training or postulancy sufficient to show that we respect the ministry—if, indeed, we still do so—if we still do more than court the popular or impressive speakers."

German Lutherans and Mohammedanism.

In order to make the German alliance with Turkey more popular, the German theologians have been induced to make a statement favorable to Islam. According to the Churchman, Professor Delitzsch, speaking before a representative audience in Berlin including many clergymen and theologians, said: "Islam, so far from being a barren and retrogressive faith, leaves the door wide open to religious, moral, and social progress, and that, therefore, no German Christian need be ashamed of an alliance which, begun in time of war, will be cemented and bear fruit in time of peace." Professor Wilhelm Hermann, of Carburg, in a lecture also gave expression to such views. The stricter evangelicals, however, are beginning to voice a protest and to insist that Christianity will have a mission to Islam after the war.

Baptist Training School Difficulties.

The Baptist Mission Training School, of Chicago, is an institution to fit women for missionary work. Last fall an instructor and a group of students left the school on account of alleged skeptical teaching about the Bible. A larger number of students remained and are loyal to the administration. The seceding teacher edits the alumnae magazine, and prints editorials that are very embarrassing to the administration of the school. The instructors have been presenting in mild form the commonplaces of the modern view of the Bible, but these proved to be a surprise to some of the students. Other students claim to have come into greater faith and deeper certainty about the Christian religion through the instruction given.

Lesson for April 2.
CONVERSION OF SAUL.

Golden Text: Faithful is the saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief. 1 Timothy 1:15.

Lesson Acts 9:1-31; (compare also Galatians 1:11-17; 1 Timothy 1:12-17): Acts 9:1-11, 17-19 printed. Memorize verses 17, 18.

(1) But Saul, yet breathing threatening and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest, (2) and asked of him letters to Damascus unto the synagogues, that if he found any that were of the Way, whether men or women, he might bring them bound to Jerusalem. (3) And as he journeyed, it came to pass that he drew nigh unto Damascus: and suddenly there shone round about him a light out of heaven: (4) and he fell upon the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? (5) And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: (6) but rise, and enter into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do. (7) And the men that journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing the voice, but beholding no man. (8) And Saul arose from the earth: and when his eyes were opened, he saw nothing: and they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus. (9) And he was three days without sight, and did neither eat nor drink.

(10) Now there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias; and the Lord said unto him in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord. (11) And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go to the street which is called Straight, and inquire in the house of Judas for one named Saul, a man of Tarsus: for behold, he prayeth; (17) And Ananias departed and entered into the house, and laying his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, who appeared unto thee in the way which thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mayest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Spirit. (18) And straightway there fell from his eyes as it were scales, and he received his sight; and he arose and was baptized; (19) and he took food and was strengthened.

And he was certain days with the disciples that were at Damascus.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. But Saul. A contrast between Luke's zeal for the church and Saul's zeal in persecuting it.—Yet. Since the stoning of Stephen.—Breathing threatening and slaughter. Breathing harder and quicker because of murderous desires. Noted in great excitement or strong emotion of any sort.—The high priest. Jonathan or Theophilus, depending upon the date. They were both sons of Annas.

2. Letters to Damascus. These letters were his authority to bring the Christians to Jerusalem.—Unto the synagogues. The Disciples had not separated themselves from the Jewish synagogues.—The Way. An expression for the Christian religion. A number of people following Jesus as their leader.

3. Suddenly there shone round about him a light out of heaven. This flashed about him. It was at noonday, and the light was intense..

4. He fell upon the earth. Probably from his horse.—Heard a voice saying. In Paul's own account (Acts 26:14) he says the voice was in the Hebrew.—Saul, Saul. The repetition is for the sake of emphasis. Why persecutest thou me? When he persecuted Christ's disciples he had been persecuting him. See Matt. 25:40.

5. Who art thou, Lord? Paul may have asked the question many times before the conviction came to him concerning Jesus. At this time the Christ became real to him.—I am Jesus whom thou persecutest. "I am the way, the truth and the life," and Lord of life and glory. See also verse 4 and Luke 10:16.

6. First part of verse 6 is omitted from the revised version for it is not found in the best Greek texts.—But rise. See Acts 26 for Paul's account.—Enter into the city. He was to continue his journey to Damascus.—It shall be told thee what thou must do. Here he received his directions for the future. "There is nothing like an obedient today to reveal God's will tomorrow."

7. Hearing the voice, but beholding no man. In another place (22:9) it is stated that "they heard not the voice" which is taken to mean the sound but not the words.

8. His eyes were opened. He lifted up his eyelids which were closed on account of the bright light.—He saw nothing. He saw none of his companions, he was blind. This may have been the "thorn in the flesh."

9. Did neither eat nor drink. The practice was common and shows the depth of feeling Paul experienced.

10. Ananias. He was probably the leading man in the small Christian community at Damascus.—Vision. The text does not inform us whether Ananias was awake or asleep when the vision came to him.

11. Street which is called Straight. There is a street bearing that name in Damascus at the present time. It may have been very beautiful and noted in that day.—He prayeth. Being a devout Pharisee he must have prayed often; but this time he was calling on the name of Jesus.

17. Brother. A brother in Christ.—Hath sent me. Ananias gives authority to his mission by coming in the name of the one whom Paul had become conscious of as Master.

18. There fell from his eyes as it were scales. A vivid description of Paul's feeling at that moment. The sensation was as if there had been scales removed from his eyes.

19. Certain days. Those days which followed his recovery of sight were spent in company and conversation with the disciples.

Conversion

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

THE work of the church is that of making converts. Since the work is so important and at the same time so difficult, it should be our desire to secure the very best possible method of bringing our children to a conscious knowledge of Christ, and to win the world to this better way of living.

There are two methods employed to accomplish the result. One is the normal religious development idea by which we come into possession of religious life in the same way by which we secure other ideas. The other method is the conversion idea. It is this method we are to think of in connection with this lesson. It is the common method among the churches; but one that seems to be passing. A very insistent demand is being made in our day for salvation by education rather than by conversion. As Sunday-school teachers, therefore, we stand at the very heart of the problem as we face the new and better day.

The common notion of conversion is "a turning about." By this we mean that it is the moment at which the focus of attention shifts from one system of ideas to another. At this time a new center of interests is being established in the mental processes.

The line of thinking leading to this step is self-depreciation on account of some wrong or an improper system of living. There are a multitude of things which might start one thinking in this way, but the usual cause is the elaborate revival technique developed by some churches. It is not at all surprising to find sudden conversions in the churches prepared to secure them by this very elaborate technique. In this connection they cite Paul as a case in point. It is wrong, however, for us to consider Paul's conversion as typical or his experience as necessary to our acceptance by the Father. Paul himself does not so use his experience.

The reaction received by the converted depends upon the strength and character of the earlier experience. If the former experience was a burden of sin the new experience would be one of escape from sin. This experience is most likely to occur at about fifteen or sixteen. A little later in life the sense of incompleteness captures the individual, and is only removed when the mind finds its fulness or completeness in Jesus Christ who becomes the ideal in life.

Unless in the conversion process there is a body of teaching by which new habits belonging to good character may be established, the conversion is a momentary emotion without positive religious value. It produces formal and superficial church members, who are of little value to the life of our day. It tends to set religion apart from one's normal and well regulated activities, making it seem unnatural and weird. Conversion apart from the normal processes of education is apt to be little more than hypnotic control, and does not present intelligent and rational grounds for action.

There is an old saying in medicine that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and in religion it becomes increasingly apparent to religious educators everywhere that the great need is prevention through the normal activities and development by the processes of religious culture from the earliest childhood. While it is true that the early preachers had by necessity to go to grown-ups to ask them to begin the Christian life, surely that was not to be the perpetual picture of Christian culture.

The great question is, have we taken Jesus as our ideal in life? Some one has said, "Some people are converted like the flashing of a meteor; with others it is like the rising of the morning sun, and you cannot tell the minute it was light." Has he become for us "the way, the truth and the life?"

Disciples Table Talk

"Mothers' and Daughters' Service" at Wellington, Kan.

March 5 was "Mothers' and Daughters' Day" at First church, Wellington, Kan., where H. W. Hunter ministers. Among the features were talks on the following topics: "What I Like to See in a Woman," "What I Like to See in a Girl," " What the Church Means to Me," "Why I Am Trying to Be a Christian" and "What the Girls of This Church Think of Their Mothers." On March 10 a social evening was given for men only, at which time W. S. Priest, of Wichita, gave an address on "A Man's Job."

Lexington Broadway Church Burns.

Within an hour following the morning services on Feb. 27, the Lexington, Ky., Broadway church was discovered enveloped in flames and its complete destruction soon followed. The origin of the fire is unknown, but the theory is that it was due to crossed electric wires or defective flue. The net loss is said to be $50,000. There was $20,000 insurance on the building and contents. The church will rebuild. The late building was erected in 1891. Mark Collis is pastor at Broadway.

Big Medical Department for T. C. U.

Edward M. Waits, pastor of Magnolia Ave. church, Ft. Worth, Tex., delivered an address before the Ft. Worth physicians recently, and after his address it developed that the Texas Christian university had completed arrangements for the beginning of a campaign to raise $500,000 for the establishment of a hospital to be operated in connection with the medical department of Texas Christian university, and which will have an endowment fund of one million dollars. The beginning of the campaign is awaiting the arrival of a competent director to assume charge.

Ira M. Boswell Meets With Hearty Welcome at Georgetown, Ky.

On February 24 a reception was given to the new pastor at Georgetown, Ky., Ira M. Boswell, who came to the Kentucky field after a thirteen years' ministry in Chattanooga, Tenn. A member of the Georgetown congregation writes that the new leader and his family have already won many friends in their new field.

Locating Lost Disciples in the Big City.

A unique campaign for unattached church members of western and southern churches of the Disciples of Christ, is being planned by Central Church, New York. It is estimated that more than a thousand persons have moved to New York in the past few years and have not become identified with a church of this communion. To stop this leak in membership, Dr. Finis Idleman, minister at Central, has inaugurated a new plan of "membership in the congregation." This provides a church home to all Disciples who are in New York temporarily. All such persons who do not expect to be in New York for more than a year, including students, are received into the membership publicly with the understanding that it does not interfere with the relations to the church back home. This opens to each a plan for investment of service in the New York church and is proving a happy solution to the problem of "sermon tasters" or "church tramps."

Steubenville, O., Pastor Evangelizes in West Virginia.

The pastor-evangelist is coming to be the thing, and the quiet, substantial meeting, without emotionalism or claptrap methods, is the logical resultant of this fact. E. N. Wray, pastor at Steubenville, O., has recently closed a meeting with the church at Chester, W. Va., where C. E. Rostofer ministers. Sixty-four persons were added to the membership. The West Virginia pastor speaks enthusiastically of the preaching of Mr. Wray. The church at Chester is recognized as the leading one in the community. About 350 persons are actively enlisted in its work. Mr. Rostofer occupied the Steubenville pulpit for two Sundays.

Debate and Oratory at Butler College.

On March 10 Butler College was scheduled to debate Indiana University on the question of a convention for the formation of a new constitution for the State of Indiana. On March 30 the college will debate Wabash College at Indianapolis, and Miami University at Oxford, Ohio, on the question of preparedness as outlined in President Wilson's program. Butler also expects to participate in the Indiana Intercollegiate Oratorical contest in Indianapolis, the Peace contest at Bloomington, and the Prohibition contest at Greencastle.

Hannibal, Mo., Pastor, Completes Five Years of Fruitful Work.

George A. Campbell recently began his sixth year of work at First church, Hannibal, Mo. Five years ago Mr. Campbell went to Hannibal from Chicago, where he had held the pulpit at Austin for twelve years. This and Hiawatha, Kans., were his only charges prior to taking the work at Hannibal. During this latest pastorate of Mr. Campbell, 517 persons have united with the church. This is a clear gain of 220 members, the church now having 990 resident members. The Bible-school has been graded and all organizations of the church are in good condition. Mr. Campbell has participated in many activities of the city and has been identified with every inter-church movement.

A Fillmore Music Evening at Hillside Church, Indianapolis.

A recent evening at Hillside church, Indianapolis, where Chas. M. Fillmore ministers, was devoted to "Fillmore music." The congregation sang hymns written by A. D. Fillmore and his sons and daughters, including Charles M. Fillmore and family. Miss Georgia Fillmore, of the Hillside family, played the piano, Ruth contributed a violin number and Katherine gave selections on the cornet. The service closed with the song, "Tell Mother I'll Be There," which was written by the pastor at Hillside. In 1848 A. D. Fillmore, the pastor's father, published his first music book. Until his death in 1878 he was a writer, teacher and singer of popular church music. His sons, James H. and Fred, formed the music firm of the Fillmore Brothers in Cincinnati and later two other brothers entered the firm.

Pennsylvania Pastors Exchange Meetings.

Exchange meetings seem to be in style these days, and that is an encouraging sign. It indicates a tendency toward more substanial, sane evangelism. Ben S. Johnson, pastor at Greensburg, Pa., writes that E. N. Duty of Charleroi has just closed an exchange meeting for him, in which twenty-seven persons responded to the invitation. "Spiritual uplift and real helpfulness" are reported to have been the greatest gain from the series. Mr. Johnson has words of highest praise for the Charleroi pastor's preaching.

W. C. Prewitt Comes to Bowling Green, Ohio.

The report from W. C. Prewitt of his first day in his new pastorate at Bowling Green, O., gives promise of a fruitful ministry. March 5 was the opening day of his work there. Large audiences, a Bible-school of 400, one confession of faith, three receiving the hand of fellowship, are items of this report. Since Z. E. Bates resigned a few months ago, M. J. Maxwell has been supplying the pulpit with success. Mr. Prewitt speaks highly of the influence of Mr. Bates, former pastor at Bowling Green.

National Benevolent Association Notes

The National Benevolent Association is looking forward with very keen interest to April 23, Easter Sunday. Its treasury has been badly shattered by the long siege of winter. It has had a big family and its homes are still full. The Easter offering from the Bible schools is the only source from which reinforcements must come with which to defend its great family of about six hundred from destruction and poverty.

J. H. Mohorter, Secretary of the National Benevolent Association, who asks the attention of the Brotherhood to the cause of benevolence on Easter Sunday.

The association has issued a very attractive Easter program. It was prepared by the veteran, J. H. Rosecrans. It will be sent free to any one who will use it for the benefit of the widow and orphan.

Two more members have joined the association's great family of annuitants. One gift was for one hundred dollars. It was received from a good woman who has four bonds. She has formed the habit of investing with the Lord. The other was for a thousand dollars and represents an addition to the ranks, being from a new contributor.

The association has been the fortunate recipients of two small bequests recently. These gifts from friends that have gone, come in our hour of need. While enjoying the blessings of their heavenly home, they are contributing toward a home for their less fortunate fellows. Philip Loos, a resident of the home for the aged in Jacksonville, Illinois, has just gone home after a long, useful life. He was a brother of the lamented President Charles Louis Loos. He came to this country with his brother from Alsace, France, at the age of nineteen years. He was for many years an active member of the church at Steubenville, Ohio. He spent the last four or five years in our Home for the Aged, the grateful ward of the church. He was a choice spirit.

Mr. Mohorter, general secretary, has gone to Long Beach, California, to assist in organizing and opening a home for children. Mr. L. J. Massie is supplying much of the funds for the starting of the home. The churches of Southern California are all behind the enterprise.

Easter, April 23, is the Bread and Butter day for the association. Send for full supplies.

Geo. A. Jewett Observes Unusual Anniversary.

February 18, 1866, was the date of George A. Jewett's coming to Central church, Des Moines. The fiftieth anniversary of this event was given due celebration by the church, and Mr. Jewett writes thus of his enlisting in the work of Central a half century ago. We quote from the Christian Worker, Des Moines, of which he is editor: "On Feb. 18, 1866, in company with the 'little mother,' we went down the aisle and were given the hand of welcome by Jas. E. Gaston, then pastor of the church in Des Moines. The writer had come to Des Moines just six months before, August 18, 1865, but did not unite with the church until the coming of the mother. In looking over the roll of members of Central Church, we find but six who were members at that time, who have their membership in Central now. On the church roll my number was 158, showing that the number of persons who had united with the church in Des Moines up to that time was 157. Surely those were the days of small things, as these included not only those residing in Des Moines but in the country round about. We came to Des Moines with a letter from the Baptist church at Pella, where we had been attending school, and where on the second day of February, 1853, we were immersed in the Des Moines river between Pella and Knoxville."

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—The School of Methods held at Hastings, Neb., last month, was one of the finest schools ever held, it is reported. There were over one hundred registered delegates, and fifty-one graduates.

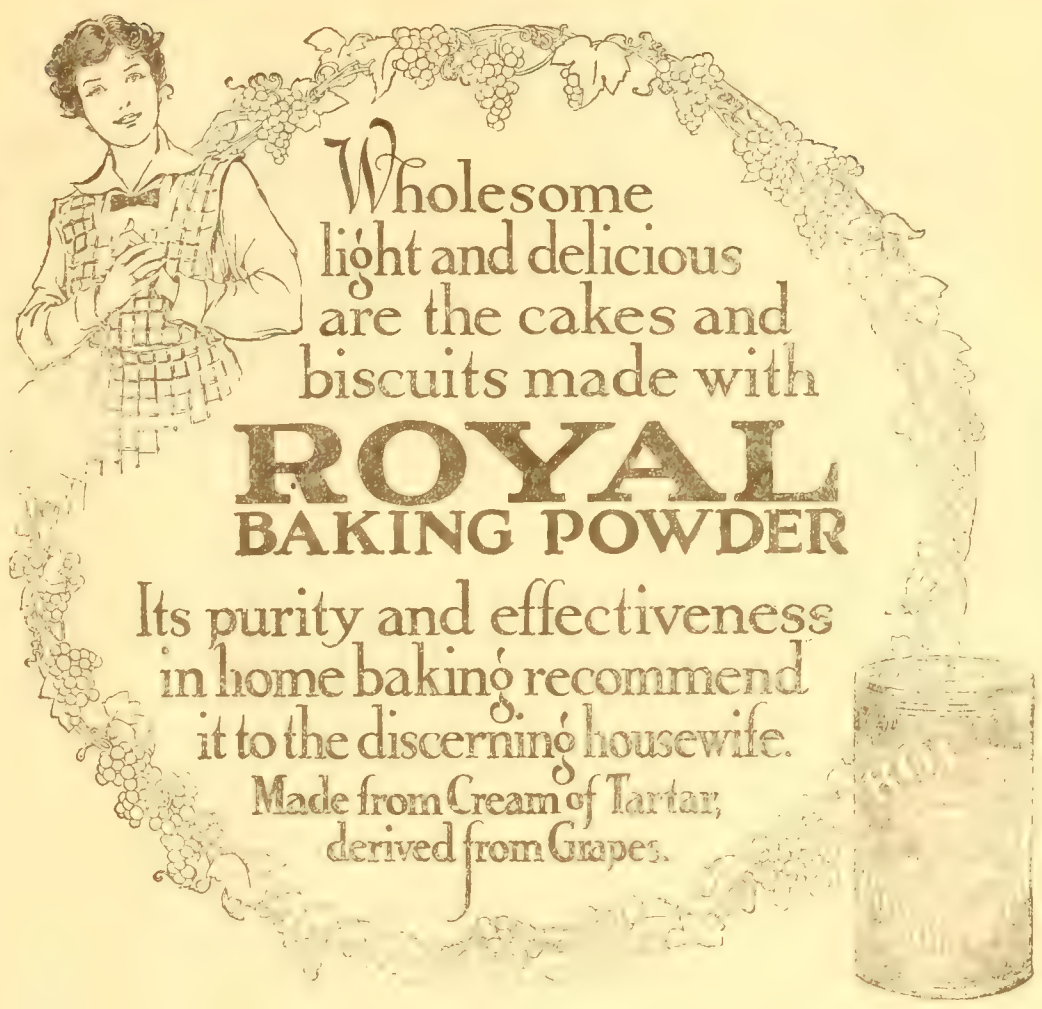
—First church, Pasadena, is giving its people a series of health lectures. Here are some recent topics discussed: "Dangers of an Abnormal Food Supply." "Colds, Catarrh, La Grippe." "Pneumonia and Tuberculosis." "Diet and Combination of Foods." "Shattered Nerves and their Restoration." "Special Menus for Special Classes."

—S. W. Hutton, the efficient Bible-school superintendent of the Southwestern District, has just returned from an extended trip through Arkansas in the interest of his work. Mr. Hutton is full of energy as well as of ideas of Bible-school work. He is an excellent singer, along with his numerous other good qualities.

—The large men's class of the Bible-school at Princeton, Ind., is now occupying a new room just completed in connection with the enlargement of the church auditorium. Interest in both the church and Bible-school has increased greatly since the coming of the new pastor, Mr. Roush.

—The morning sermons for March, at Evanston, Ill., where O. F. Jordan ministers, are: 5, "The World Outlook of the Christian:" 12, "The Wars of a Christian:" 19, "Twentieth Anniversary Sermon—What Makes a Church Strong;" 26, "The Peace of a Christian."

—Graham Frank, pastor at Liberty, Mo., is preaching a special series of sermons to young people. A recent topic was, "Misleading Mottoes."



—Mineral Wells, Tex., church was apportioned $20 for foreign missions, and R. A. Highsmith sends in report of $60 raised.

—W. B. Tate, formerly pastor of Central church, Streator, Ill., is confined to his home in that city by an attack of appendicitis and his physician fears that an operation is inevitable. He had recently been conducting a revival in the southern part of the state, but was compelled to give up the work on account of the illness.

—The Harrisonville, Mo., church burned recently, with an estimated loss of $10,000.

—"Why Men Leave Jesus" was the subject of S. E. Fisher's sermon at University Place church, Champaign, Ill., two weeks ago.

—A. N. Lindsey, pastor at Clinton, Mo., and M. C. Hutchinson, pastor at Fulton, exchanged pulpits recently. Mr. Lindsey is an aggressive candidate for governor of his state.

—The Christian Endeavor Society of First church, Hutchinson, Kan., has organized an expert Endeavor Society to meet once a month for the purpose of taking the regular expert Endeavorer's course. They have planned to complete the work in four meetings. The Society has also organized a Bible-school class, composed of Endeavorers, which each Sunday studies the lesson of the coming week. The members of the class are in this way prepared to serve as substitute teachers.

—Twelve young people from Drake university recently held gospel team services at Pleasantville, Ia. W. B. Zimmerman reports fine meetings and one life decision for the ministry.

The Atlanta, Ga., Christian Endeavor Union recently took up the work of the Daily Vacation Bible-school in that city, pledging themselves to furnish volunteer teachers for these schools during the next summer.

—Prof. Frank V. Irish, of Columbus, O., recently filled the pulpit at Nelsonville.

At a recent meeting of the churches of Christ at First church, Los Angeles, resolutions were adopted, specifying among other objects, the effort to bring at least 1,000 into the 84 churches in Southern California, by Easter, in a campaign of devotion and decision.

A membership contest between women and girls and men and boys in East Dallas, Tex., school is bringing unusual results: 552 women and girls were present on a recent Sunday and 514 men and boys, total 1,066; 214 men present in J. G. Slayter's class.

—An Oklahoma newspaper speaks thus of Byron Hester, pastor at Pyror: "Mr. Hester is a local character, but an uncommon one. He lives at Pryor, where he preaches, writes poetry, composes music and entertains. When speeches are wanted, whether they be for good roads, better schools or any other public spirited movement, Mr. Hester is sent for and he never disappoints."

As a result of the recent union tabernacle meeting at Fremont, Neb., First church, will remodel its building, doubling the seating capacity, and giving more Bible-school room. F. H. Gillette is the new pastor there.

Homer W. Carpenter, pastor of the church at Shelbyville, Ky., and State President of the Christian Endeavor work, will deliver several addresses at the Alabama State Christian Endeavor Convention to be held in April at Birmingham.

J. J. Tisdall, who resigned his pastorate at Wilson Avenue church, Columbus, O., to accept the pastorate of Norwood Avenue church, Toledo, has announced that he will resign from the local board of education about April 1. He will remove his family to his new home shortly after that date. Mr. Tisdall was to deliver his last sermon at Wilson Avenue church on Sunday evening, March 12. Several ministers are being considered as his Columbus successor.

—The Bible-school at Aubrey, Texas, held a tree planting on February 26, in connection with a plan to beautify the church and Bible-school grounds. This is a splendid idea, and aroused enthusiasm and interest among the people of the Aubrey school. R. R. Tribble is the pastor.

—East Side church, Toledo, O., has purchased 100 Bibles for use in the Bible-school. The pastor, George Neil, reports attendance as follows for the last Sundays of March: 232, 252, 263. The last Sunday mentioned there were 77 per cent of the school present and 3 classes had 100 per cent present.

—The official board of the church at Ashland, O., has appropriated money for the purchase of a Workers' Library for the church school.

—As a result of a well planned and faithfully executed campaign nine were added to the church at Sandusky, O., on decision day, which was March 5. R. C. Lemon is the pastor.

—Central Bible-school, Dayton, Ohio, has a larger number of names on the roll of the Montgomery County Teacher-Trainging Association than any other school. The roll is a long one, too.

—G. F. Bradford, pastor at Marshall, Tex., reports that the Bible-school there is mak-

Ross, asked the members to bring for the question box being conducted, answers to these two questions: "What would I do if I were mayor of Springfield?" and "What would I do if I were sheriff of Sangamon county?"

—The Brotherhood of the Greeley, Colo., church was addressed recently by Prof. J. R Bell, of the State Teachers' College on "Christian Efficiency."

—The motto of the Century Class, which is taught by Finis Idleman at Central Bible-school, New York, is "100 Per Cent Alive." Mr. Idleman is giving a series of talks on "Four Views of Christ," based upon the stories of Christ's life given in the four Gospels.

—R. E. Saegler, Lookout Secretary of the Berean Bible-class, of the Palestine, Tex., church, reports that this class sends out "miss you" cards to every absent member, and thus keeps up the class attendance most efficiently. Bonner Frizzell is the progressive teacher of the class.

—Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, of Linwood Blvd. church, Kansas City, in an address before the University Club of that city, made an onslaught upon Henry Ford's anti-preparedness propaganda. Dr. Jenkins does not believe the present war will be the last great conflict.

—N. O. Rogers, pastor at King Hill church, St. Joseph, in a recent sermon laid bare the unrighteousness of that city, speaking upon the topic, "The Four Evils of St. Joseph."

—E. M. Waits, pastor at Magnolia Avenue church, Ft. Worth, Tex., has launched a campaign in his church to raise a fund of $1,500 to be spent in mission and benevolent work, and in Bible-school training. This was a follow-up result of a recent church institute conducted by the following: Clinton Lockhart of Texas Christian University, Otis Hawkins and H. D. Smith, of Dallas; Mrs. Terry King, superintendent of women's work in Texas; F. W. Hawkins, superintendent of Bible-school work; Colby D. Hall of Texas Christian University; L. D. Anderson and S. W. Hutton.

—At a mission rally held at Bloomington, Ill., the speakers were R. A. Doan, M. B. Madden and John R. Golden. Among those attending the meetings from nearby towns were: H. H. Jenner, Long Point; H. E. Monser, Lincoln, and R. H. Newton, Atlanta.

—C. G. Kindred, of Englewood church, Chicago, took a special car filled with his church people to attend the dedication services at Chicago Heights. The Chicago Heights work has been supported largely by Englewood until recently, when the work became self-supporting.

—C. M. Yocum, pastor at Main street church, Rushville, Ind., has the distinction of being the youngest minister of the city in years, and the oldest in point of service. This congregation has a membership of 1,450 and has made an increase of 400 during the five years of Mr. Yocum's ministry.

—J. W. Underwood, pastor at Central church, Anderson, Ind., as a feature of the recent revival, ordained the following young men into the ministry: Harper McCune, of East Lynn church; Urban Ogden, of Arrow Avenue church and Ephraim Lowe, of Markleville church.

—The Christian Endeavor Society of the Marysville, Mo., church is co-operating with other young people's societies of the town in promoting a movement for a community recreation center.

—Two men mentioned for the pulpit at First church, Chattanooga, Tenn., are P. Y. Pendleton, of Canton, O., and Claude E. Hill, of Valparaiso, Ind.

—In response to a request from the Bloomington, Ill., Commercial Club. S. H. Zendt. with other ministers, preached a sermon on "Prosperity" late last month.

—George Darsie, pastor at First church, Portland, Ore., has reconsidered his decision to leave the work at Portland, and has now announced his definite decision to make a change at once.

Eureka College News Notes

Two honors have recently come to President H. O. Pritchard, of Eureka college. At a recent meeting of the Yale University Corporation's Prudential Committee, President Pritchard was elected Alumnus Lecturer in the Yale School of Religion for next year. President Pritchard has also been honored by the Bondurant Lectureship of the University of Illinois, being elected to deliver a series of six lectures the last week in March on "The Fundamentals of the Christian Religion."

I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., recently closed a very successful series of evangelistic services for the local church, being assisted by its pastor, V. W. Blair. During the last week of his service here, Mr. Spencer delivered a series of informal talks to the ministerial students of the college on the "Problems of the Ministry." Mrs. Spencer was also of much service to the meeting through her work among the women of the community.

The annual Recognition Day Exercises of the senior class were held Thursday, March 2. There are fifteen candidates for the A. B. and B. S. degrees this year. The address was delivered by I. J. Spencer, and the response was made by Harry Fonger, president of the senior class.

The Eureka College Glee Club was royally entertained by five Illinois Disciple churches on its annual tour the last week of February. Concerts were given at Cuba, Beardstown, Pittsfield, Virginia and Chandlerville. The "college boys" were greeted everywhere with large audiences. Prof. E A. Bredin, director of the School of Music, conducted the trip.

The annual Tri-Angular Debates between Eureka College and Millikin and Wesleyan Universities, was held this month. The question for debate was that of national preparedness.

Prof. Joseph E. Smith, of the Department of History of Eureka college, was recently married to Miss Claudia Page of Chicago. A reception was given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Smith at Lida's Wood, by the faculty and students.

Lewis Hurt of Eureka, who is on a furlough from Liberia, Africa, gave a talk in chapel recently concerning his work in the foreign field.

An invitational high school basket ball tournament was held in the new gymnasium recently. There were eight competing schools, including the College Academy.

The March Offering--A Good Start

There is fine interest in the March offering. The mail, which is large, breathes an optimistic spirit. Several new Living-Link churches are reported.

During the first four days following the March offering, 310 churches responded with offerings, a gain over the corresponding four days last year of 128. These churches, as churches, sent $5,624, a gain of $2,600. Remember, this is the showing for only four days.

There is a lively interest in the apportionment and many churches are coming up to the mark. The offerings of the churches as churches show a gain of $8,007 since October 1. There has been a gain also of 330 contributing churches. This is fine!

Now let us keep this rate of gain up all through March and the remainder of the missionary year, or until September 30.

Please speak to your church treasurer about sending the offering promptly. If all has not been collected in, please forward what is on hand and gather up the fragments later. We hear frequently of churches who took the offering last year, but whose treasurers failed to send it—diverting it to the current expense fund.

Let every man and every church be prompt to do their duty and we will all rejoice together over a great victory. Send to William J. Lockhart Loses Father.

William J. Lockhart, general evangelist with headquarters at Des Moines, reports the accidental death of his father, Geo. W. Lockhart, who for many years made his home at Kingman, Kan., but who for three years has lived near Des Moines. The injury which caused his death was the result of a fall from a wagon, Mr. Lockhart receiving a blow on the head. The funeral was held at Kingman, the services being in charge of R. C. Leonard, local pastor. W. J. Lockhart, the son, pronounced a touching eulogy over the remains of his father. The deceased is highly praised by the Kingman papers. "His first and constant interest was the church. He was a charter member of the Kingman church and served during all the years as an officer, and for many years as treasurer." Mr. Lockhart was greatly interested in the evangelistic service of his son.

Will Exhibit Campbell Relics.

One of the features of the Twentieth Anniversary celebration of Evanston church, Chicago, on the evening of March 22, will be the exhibit of a number of relics pertaining to the lives of Thomas and Alexander Campbell. William Campbell, only surviving son of Alexander Campbell, attends this church regularly and has a large part of the books and personal belongings of his father. The church wil serve a free dinner to its members and friends that night and there will be music and special addresses. O. F. Jordan is the present pastor. The net gain in membership in this church in the last five years is about fifty per cent.

ON THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

HERE'S WHAT HE SAYS ABOUT THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

"No study is more important than the study of the Bible and the truths which it teaches, and there is no more effective agency for such study than the Sunday School. It is certainly one of the greatest factors in our lives in the building of character and the development of moral fiber. The Sunday School lesson of to-day is the code of morals of to-morrow."

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Where Hope Has Failed

WITH HOW MANY PHANTOM ASSURANCES HAS THE HUMAN SOUL CHEATED ITSELF IN ITS LONGING AFTER IMMORTALITY! NO DREAMS ARE MORE HAUNTING OR MORE FLEETING THAN THOSE WHEREWITH MEN HAVE TRIED TO COMFORT THEIR LONGING HEARTS AS THEY CONTEMPLATED THE FUTURE.

Mention has already been made of the Semitic lack of clearly defined ideas on this theme. Yet even the Hebrews, unprovided as they were with any valid hopes of future life, could not quite gain their own consent to picture the dead as instantly blotted out of being. Rather they thought of them as going down into Sheol, the insatiable, but only gradually fading out into the pallid and inert existence of the shades.

From that increasingly inert condition, which withered at last into nothingness, the soul might be roused to brief attention by some notable arrival in the twilight, as when the mighty king of Babylon was brought, discrowned and humbled, to Sheol. It was even held that by some tremendous spell they might be summoned back to the upper air, but only for a fleeting hour. All this was too nerveless a conception to count as more than a fragment of belief, flung to eager questioners over the mystery of death.

Nor did the ideas of the Greeks in their earlier and purer form find embodiment in any satisfying views of the future. Religion with them was not a formal system imposed from without, but it sprang as a social impulse from within. There was no organized authority which could construct standards of faith or dictate the proprieties of religious etiquette. Only from chance utterances in the great classics can one gain vague hints of a somewhat shadowy world beyond death.

Thus, after Odysseus slew the suitors, Cyllenian Hermes summoned their shades, holding in his hand the wand that is golden and fair, wherewith he closes to sleep the eyes of whomsoever he will. Then he started them forth murmuring as they went, and he the helper went on leading them along the dark ways, past the streams of Oceanus, past the White Rock, along by the gates of the Sun, past the parish of dreams, till they came to the asphodel moor, where the spirits have their abode, the phantoms of way-worn men. Once only in Homer is there reference to the Elysian Fields, "where is no snow, and no wintry storm, nor ever the torrent of rains, but ever the light-breathing zephyrs Oceanus sends from the west with cooling for men."

One wonders if this may not have suggested to Tennyson his picture of the mystical island-valley of Avalon:

"Where falls not hail, nor rain, nor any snow,
Nor ever wind blows loudly; but it lies
Deep-meadowed, happy, fair with orchard lawns,
And bowery hollows crowned with summer sea."

But neither in Homer nor the myth of Arthur were these blessed islands for the common race, but only here and there some great one of the earth, kin of the gods. There is no comfort in these dreams.

And if choice spirits such as Socrates and Plato pierced further into the gloom, and intimated to their followers some expectation of a more satisfying eventuality to the problem of life, their voices were but as winds upon the heights. The soul of that fine civilization remained untouched by any hope for the future. Robert Browning makes clear the wistful regret of even the best minds in Greece over this dreary outlook. He puts into the mouth of Cleon, "the poet of the sprinkled isles," the plaintive protest against the coming of death at the very acme of his enjoyment and success:

"I, the thinking, feeling, acting man, the man who loved his life so over-much,
Shall sleep in my urn.—It is so horrible I dare at times
Imagine to my need some future state revealed to us by Zeus.
But no. Zeus has not thus revealed it. And alas
He must have done so were it possible."

Turning from these vague illusions of the past, one is confronted with three suggestions from those who deny the probability of personal survival, yet would like to preserve as much as possible of the consolation it yields. The first is that though death ends the adventure of existence, it affords opportunity for a survival in the influence of a useful career. Denying Shakespeare's familiar words about the evil that men do, it is rather the fact that good has survival value that evil does not possess. Here then is the sure ground of life's extension. We live on in the characters of others whom we have aided to the upward path. This is the pleasing hope eloquently voiced by George Eliot:

"So shall I join the choir invisible of those immortal dead
Who live in souls made better by their presence,
And whose music is the gladness of the world."

Perhaps this ought to satisfy. It is a very noble longing. Is there something selfish in the wish for personal survival? Ought one really to be content with this continuing of life, not in conscious activity and attainment, but in the growth of life as a whole, made possible in some small manner by his own efforts while yet a dweller beneath the sun?

Again there is the theory that the individual, gaining the measure of completeness possible in the days of the flesh, goes back to God, the primal fount and source of life, to swell in however limited a way the totality of being. Thus from age to age the divine life completes itself through the added increment of the best the generations have produced. The individual ceases to be as such, but survives in the total complex of being.

But this conception of an all-absorbing God, who satisfies his cravings for completeness by the regaining of the best of the universe he himself has made, differs only in the level on which it is conceived from those outgrown traditions of monster deities whose worship was performed by providing them with sacrificial victims, animals or men, of their own making. Not this way does the open road to satisfaction lie.

And once more, there is the doctrine that men survive and find their immortality in a gradually expanding world, which goes forward from good to better and to best by

Faith and Modern Science

BY HENRY CHURCHILL KING

Editor's Note: Evolution and modern science are not inconsistent with the Christian religion, but are helps to faith, according to President Henry Churchill King, D.D., of Oberlin College, who spoke before the recent Panama Congress on "Christian Work in Latin America." Dr. King declared that there are Christian missionaries who are hindering the progress of Christianity by saying that any person who adopts the conclusions of science and historical criticism is not Christian.

He spoke with great earnestness of the importance of interpreting religion to modern men in terms of modern thought. The Congress had been discussing the alienation of the educated classes from the Church, and Dr. King said with candor that the reason for this alienation was the fact that the Church has not yet learned to preach to the educated classes in Latin America. There is nothing in modern science that need stand in the way of a man's accepting Jesus Christ.

The general theme for the day's discussion was the question of education. A wide and thorough survey of educational conditions in Latin America was made—conditions of education among little children, among boys and girls of high school age, among college students. The popular attitude toward education, the point to which public education has been developed, the attitude of educators toward religion, and the effect of the prevailing educational ideals upon the character of the people—these questions were considered with great care in a voluminous report presented by a commission of schools representing both Latin and Saxon America. The commission also made a report on the condition of evangelical schools in Latin America pointing out their strength and weaknesses and suggesting ways of improvement.

The most signal revelations of their investigation were those concerning the amazing degree of illiteracy in these countries, the anti-religious effect of much of the teaching furnished by the higher educational institutions and the inadequate equipment and manning of the Christian schools.

After a day of discussion President King summarized his impressions in an address a part of which follows: C. C. M.

FOR myself at least, and I have no doubt for many of you, six particularly significant facts stand out from our survey. First, the enormous illiteracy in Latin America—from 40 to 80 per cent, whole sections of the population quite unreached. Second, yet in many places there is a well organized system of education from elementary to university of high grade. Third, all observers bear witness to the marked leadership on the part of the highly educated men in Latin American countries, a leadership out of all proportion to their numbers. Fourth, there is unanimous testimony that these highly educated leaders are very generally abjuring religion as out of date. Fifth, the reports bear witness to the very inadequate training of the Christian community and especially of Christian leaders, both teachers and preachers. Sixth, there is evidently also dire need of industrial or agricultural training at certain points for the economic lifting of the people—need that is sure to be felt more and more as we press our work among the native Indian population.

FOUR GREAT DEMANDS.

Corresponding to these particularly significant facts are, point for point, certain great demands. First, the enormous illiteracy makes it plain that our help is needed; missionary elementary schools are obviously called for and are likely to be for years to come. Second, the existence of a well organized system of education means that we must be able to put the missionary schools side by side with the best that the government can give and have the schools stand the comparison. Third, the marked leadership of the highly educated certainly means that we must, in some way, reach these educated leaders. Fourth, the fact that they very generally abjure religion as out of date demands that we make to them a modern approach, giving them a different conception of religion and a different conception of the relation of religion to the modern intellectual world.

I promised to return to one point, that if we are really to reach these educational leaders we must use the modern approach. Will you bear a very faithful word upon that subject? I came back sick at heart from the Orient partly because I found in India, China, and Japan that there were many excellent and godly missionaries who were standing square across the path of the educated Indians,

President Henry Churchill King, of Oberlin College.

Japanese and Chinese. They were saying, virtually, "You can not have anything to do with evolution and historical criticism and be a Christian."

RELIGION AND THE MODERN WORLD.

Well, a great German said years ago, "The wounds of knowledge can be healed only by knowledge," and you must make an approach to these men with a little different conception of religion than they have been used to,—a different conception of the relation of religion to the modern and intellectual world. I do not know anything in the modern intellectual world that forbids a man to be in the deepest and most true sense of the word a follower of Jesus Christ. I do not know a thing that need stand across his way, but we must make that clear to these men.

It must be clear that there are always two problems in asking concerning anything. How did it come to be? that is a question of process. What is it now? that is a question of meaning. These two questions are quite different. Science puts the first question first. When you have answered the question of process, the question of meaning, the ideal meaning, the ideal interpretation, is utterly untouched by all science can do. As Paulsen says by way of illustration, you can look at a page of type and possibly tell how it came to be there without at all answering the question as to what it means.

I sometimes think of the way Courtney, then a member of the British parliament, when we were face to face with evolution in its relation to religion, put the thing: If evolution is true, I was a bit of protoplasm. If evolution is true, I was a mollusk. If evolution is true, I was an anthropoid ape. But, whether in the providence of God or by chance, after having been an ape I have now become a man. When I was an ape, I thought as an ape, but when I became a man I put away apish things.

A HIGHER EDUCATION NEEDED.

Fifth, to meet the inadequate training of the Christian communities and leaders we must obviously make decided gains at this point, and this calls for higher education of the first order, thoroughly permeated by the Christian spirit. Sixth, in view of dire economic need at many points, the missionary schools must do something to meet that need as situations demand.

The entire survey has made it clear in the third place, I think, to us all that at present we are meeting these demands in an utterly inadequate fashion. It is equally clear that it is impossible to meet these demands without co-operation on the largest scale. Human beings have been co-operating for ends of health in the last fifteen years to an extent undreamed of before. Shall we be able to co-operate for the abolition of the mosquito and the fly and the rat, and not be able to co-operate for the great ends of the Kingdom of God? How absolutely necessary such co-operation is, is to be seen at once, as soon as one thinks of the necessity that missionary educational institutions must, above all, do honest work, with all that that involves in staff and equipment.

It has been estimated that a "minimum efficient college" in North America for 100 students would require a $300,000 endowment and $200,000 for buildings and equipment. Think, too, of the increasing government comparison that all our educational institutions must more and more face. Think of the endowment and equipment required for such industrial schools as Hampton or Tuskegee, and then be sure that the only possible solution of missionary educational problems is a common educational policy and superintendence, that means union secondary schools, union normal schools, union theological seminaries, union industrial schools and union universities.

OPPORTUNITIES IN LATIN AMERICA.

In the fifth place the survey suggests four special opportunities open to missionary education in Latin America.

First, an education that shall combine in unusual degree both the strength of the Latin and the strength of the Saxon, both discipline and freedom.

Second, an educational system that shall solve more effectively than has yet been solved, perhaps, the paradox of the vocational and cultural.

Third, true union theological seminaries of high order that shall help at least to a national evangelical church or still better to a continental Christianity.

Fourth, the establishment of three great Christian universities in Latin America that shall stand side by side with the great national universities to help them to still better work and to a still finer spirit. Such universities would require millions, undoubtedly, but it is a reasonable expectation that men who have drawn their wealth so largely from these countries should be glad to invest large portions of it in institutions that may send out leaders of the highest quality for the leavening of the life of the Latin American countries.

Women in the Twentieth Century

A Summary of the Report of the Commission on Women's Work at Panama.

BY IDA W. HARRISON

(Chairman of the Commission.)

THE one time we are told Jesus was deeply moved in his spirit was when his critics came to him and asked of him a sign from heaven. They were already familiar with the signs from heaven that were daily enrolled before them. What they lacked was the open heart and diligent mind to read the meaning of the wonderful times in which they lived and his comment was: "Ye hypocrites, you can already read these signs from Heaven, but you cannot discern the signs of the times."

The reproach of Jesus to these people of old might be uttered afresh to every generation since. It is always easier to accept the lore of the Fathers and the traditions of the past than to understand and interpret the signs of our own times. Our God is a God of things as they are and there is no place in his work for easy acceptance of things of the past and for blindness to the conditions of the days in which we live.

No generation since the days when our Lord was on the earth has witnessed swifter changes and greater needs for adjustment to new conditions than the difficult and complex times in which we live. The Commission on Women's Work has attempted to pitch its report in the key of our own days, to do its work and thinking in twentieth century terms.

MODERN INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS.

The meeting last night emphasized the home as the citadel of Latin life. We must not forget that women and children are thrust out of the home under modern conditions. The public schools and state universities are taking the place of education in the home and of the select private schools. From six years of age to twenty or more, the child passes from kindergarten to university, from one highly specialized teacher to another. The old question "What manner of child shall this be" must be answered by the State as well as by the parents of the child today. How important, then, that women should be in touch with those who control education.

Women are thrust out of the home by modern industrial conditions. Olive Schreiner says: "Fully three-fourths of the ancient and honorable occupations of women have shrunk away forever and the remaining one-fourth still tends to shrink." These modern changes have brought perils especially to young women. The Commission advises co-operation with the many large women's organizations in order to develop a social conscience that will impel women to study conditions brought about by the education and industrialism of today, and to create in them a sense of responsibility for sefeguarding the womanhood and childhood of the nation. Allusion has been made to the necessity of literature for women and children. Biographies of women who have been the incarnation of the types of endeavor are recommended—Florence Nightingale, the patron saint of the noble army of nurses; Elizabeth Fry, in prison reform; Clara Barton, pioneer and founder of Red Cross work; Susan B. Anthony, advocate of Woman's Suffrage; Jane Addams, in settlement work; and many other noble women of our day.

WOMEN AND MISSIONS.

Emphasis is laid on the qualification and preparation of missionaries. We need women of faith, courage, adaptability, social gifts, thorough training and marked spirituality. We crave the finest and highest type of North American womanhood to go to this great and promising field. Their method should be to teach the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and let it do its work, rather than to attack the Roman Catholic Church. The words of Melinda Rankin should be an example to us. She said: "It has been a fixed principle with me not to attack the Roman Catholic Church, but to present the truth and let that do its work. If you wish to enlighten a room you carry a light and set it down in it, and the darkness will disperse of itself."

A definite educational policy is recommended, which will make adequate provision for all ages, from the girl of tender years to the woman in the university—for kindergarten, primary, secondary, vocational and college training, —not forgetting special training for Latin women as teachers, social and evangelistic workers.

The necessity for higher Christian education for Latin women has been emphasized by much that has been said at this Congress. No one Board is able to furnish the facilities and equipment for such education. It is recommended, then, that in large centers of population, where there are sufficient primary and secondary schools to provide a constituency, that the various mission boards co-operate to establish Women's Union Colleges.

Evangelistic work should include the old lines of Bible women's work, district nursing, visitation in the homes, the following up of students of mission schools, and other methods of personal approach. In addition to this, wherever the way is open, women evangelists should seek to cultivate women and children by teaching and preaching, and to carry the Gospel message, not only to our missions but to the great unevangelized fields of Latin America. What Miss Coop has said this morning in regard to her work among the Indians on the Isthmus is an example of what women can do in this line.

THE PRESENT NEED.

As far as possible, Latin American women should be employed in the social, evangelistic, and educational work of the mission. If the women of this great domain are to be reached and helped in any large way, it must be mainly done by their own countrywomen.

In view of all that has been said and many things yet unsaid, we feel that there must be large increase in all the lines of social service, education, and evangelization. The numbers of missionaries and teachers must be increased. The plants now in operation must be enlarged and more fully equipped and the great unoccupied fields in this continent of opportunity must be entered and evangelized.

A Swede was about to start as a missionary to India, when some of his friends tried to dissuade him, saying: "It is so hot there you can't live. Why, it is one hundred and twenty degrees in the shade." "Vell," said the man of faith, in great contempt, "ve don't have to stay in the shade, do ve?" It is just possible the Lord will make it hotter for folks who habitually hunt the shade than for those who get out into the sunlight where they can see to work.—Robert E. Speer.

I had a young man in my congregation who believed that he was refusing and rejecting salvation because of some unsolved problems. One day he determined to accept Christ as a Savior and afterwards settle his intellectual difficulties. But, as soon as he had made this decision, he found that his doubt had vanished. He thought that his blindness was intellectual; but his heart turned Godward, the veil was done away; and many a soul has had a like experience. A will to believe clears the mental vision. We see clearly when we are ready to see.—A. T. Pierson.

An atheist once asked Bishop Boyd Carpenter if he believed that Jonah was swallowed by a whale, and received the answer: "When I go to heaven, I will ask him." "But suppose he isn't there," the other persisted. "Then you ask him," was the quick retort.

Dr. Lyman Abbott on Prohibition

A RECENT publicity sheet sent out by the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association made much of a statement in regard to Dr. Lyman Abbott's position on the prohibition question, quoting Dr. Abbott as being against prohibition and justifying his position by the Bible and by the practices of Christ during his ministry. This statement prompted the editor of the Gibson City, (Ill.) Courier, to write to Dr. Abbott to verify the quotation, and a letter was received by that publication from his daughter, stating that the quotation was correct, but that it had been taken out of its proper context and misleadingly used. Dr. Abbott's secretary also wrote as follows, reports the "Courier":

"I beg to enclose an 'Open Letter' which appeared in the issue of The Outlook for October twentieth, which was written by Dr. Abbott on the occasion of the recent Prohibition campaign in the State of Ohio. This will give you Dr. Abbott's views on the subject. You may be sure that nothing that Dr. Abbott has ever said on the subject of temperance was ever intended by him to be used in favor of the saloon, and, of course, any sentences or paragraphs taken from the writings or addresses of any public man should not be considered without their context, as representing his opinions on any subject. You may be interested to know that the town where Dr. Abbott has lived for forty years—Cornwall-on-Hudson, N. Y.,—has been a no-license town for many years, very largely due to the fact that Dr. Abbott has been an active worker in the campaign against the saloon, whenever the matter has come up there for decision."

DR. ABBOTT'S TRUE POSITION.

The "Open Letter" referred to is as follows:

"Dear Sir:—I have received your letter telling me of the work of the Ohio Temperance Union, with which you are connected, and which is 'promoting a propaganda in favor of genuine temperance against prohibition in Ohio, where the question of State-wide prohibition is at issue.' You ask me for a letter which you can use in this campaign. I think I can best answer your request by an open letter, which Ohio papers are welcome to republish, and which will give my opinion to all citizens in Ohio who care to know what it is. To a previous correspondent I have already written specifically that I am not in favor of State-wide prohibition, except where a State-wide public sentiment for prohibition already exists. To that public sentiment I address myself in this letter.

"In common with most Americans, I have believed in the regulation, not the prohibition, of the liquor traffic. But the action of the liquor dealers has made regulation impossible. There have been, and are, some saloons which obey the law, but they are the exception. The great majority covertly disregard or openly defy all attempts in the community to impose special regulations upon them. The law forbids sales to minors; and the saloon not only sells to minors, but not infrequently entices minors to drink, that it may establish in them the habit and develop in them customers. The law forbids sales to habitual drunkards; and the saloon continues to sell to habitual drunkards as long as they or their friends will pay for the drinks. The law forbids sales at certain hours; and the saloon sells at all hours if there are customers to buy. The law forbids sales on Sundays; and the saloon closes the front door and opens the side door. The law forbids sales except with meals; and fake meals are furnished to make the sale legal. The law forbids sales except by hotels; and the saloon adds bedrooms, calls itself a hotel, and becomes a house of prostitution.

"This is not true of all saloons. Now and then may be found one, especially in our larger cities, which is what your circular says Dr. Parkhurst has called it: the poor man's clubhouse, his restaurant, and even his infirmary. But these are the exceptions.

"The American people are characteristically conservative and slow in coming to a conclusion. But they are coming to the conclusion, though slowly, that the American saloon is not only a local nuisance but a National calamity and are resolving to abolish it.

"The question is not, Is beer a useful article of food?

"It is not, Is moderate drinking wrong?

"It is not, Does the Bible prohibit or permit moderate drinking?

"These questions the people would prefer to leave each individual free to determine for himself.

THE PROHIBITORY MOVEMENT.

"But they are not willing to leave each individual to determine for himself whether the laws enacted by the community shall be obeyed. That question the community will decide, and it will suffer any inconvenience, any deprivation, which may be necessary to secure such obedience. This is the meaning of the present prohibitory movement.

"Your letterhead gives the title of your Society, 'The Ohio Temperance Union' and your circular affirms your wish to substitute temperance for prohibition. If twenty-five years ago the brewers, the wine-growers, and the wholesale liquor dealers of the United States had united with other law-abiding citizens to compel the retail dealers to comply with such regulations of the liquor traffic as the State might enact, and to create within the liquor trade such a regard for law and such a spirit of temperance as would banish the spirit of lawlessness, which has made the average saloon not only a local nuisance but also a National calamity, the prohibitory movement never would have attained its present proportions.

"But if the people are compelled to choose between an unregulated and lawless liquor traffic and the prohibition of the liquor traffic, I do not doubt that they will choose prohibition. If we cannot reform the saloons, we shall abolish them. And if we can find no other way to abolish them, we shall abolish the distillery, the brewery, the winery, and the importation of liquor from abroad.

Our Readers' Opinions

THE MINISTER AND THE BELLUMISTS.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

I have just read E. B. Barnes' "The Minister and the Bellumist Propaganda." Also I have noted Mr. Medbury's efforts against "Preparedness," and your occasional editorials. I have to plead guilty. I am among those who have preached "peace sermons" and am now silent in the presence of this agitation for preparedness. But my silence does not come from being afraid to speak. I should not like to be charged with being unpatriotic, nor would I like to have it said that I was lacking in Christian ideals. I am bewildered. I am in a strait betwixt two. The tide of patriotism runs strong in me. I believe in universal peace; and that it will come. But the present situation—the present emergency; Christian idealists cannot change that.

At the outbreaking of the Spanish-American War a newspaper sent representatives around to interview the ministers as to whether war was ever justifiable, and the war with Spain in particular. I answered the reporter about as follows: "If a Christian gets into a controversy with a Christian, there is but one way to settle it—arbitrate; if a savage gets into a controversy with a savage, there is but one way to settle it—fight; but if a Christian gets into a controversy with a savage, he may have to fight." I cannot make the application here lest I should seem unneutral, and the President has admonished us to be neutral. I think, however, the reader will make the application. If the United States, with all its efforts at peace, should be assailed by a war-mad nation, would it not be wise for us to be prepared to defend ourselves? That seems to me to be beyond question. With nothing but a "scrap of paper" between us and a nation that has, with devilish ingenuity, prepared for war for years, what are we to do? I despise war; nothing has so wrought upon me as this world-catastrophe; I think of it, brood over its horrors, almost day and night. Two years ago its very possibility was unthinkable. Indeed, in one of my "peace sermons" I declared with all possible emphasis and earnestness that there never would be another great war. I believed it. Alas, I did not reckon with the War Lords. Please cut the "s" off of "Lords." I cannot be neutral, try ever so hard. In fact, I do not think there is any virtue in being neutral. In my opinion, it is no time to be neutral. Christianity, patriotism, humanity, should cry aloud in condemnation of those who started this horrible world-slaughter.

What rouses me is that we are entering upon a scheme of defense that in the end will cost billions which had never been dreamed of but for those who have proven themselves a world-menace. We must defend ourselves against these. I cannot see it any other way. Mr. Barnes says of many of his brethren: "They are timid and even reluctant to express an opinion." Well, here is my opinion, and I believe I represent a large, possibly a greater majority, of my brethren in the ministry: We are certainly not blind to the "perils of militarism." We are in the midst of conditions that we are powerless to change.

I do not like the imputation that "the preacher who believes in war policies and war preparations cannot at the same time countenance the cause of Christ." I repeat that I abhor war. And I repeat again that I am bewildered. Nor is that strange, since bewildering times have come upon us. No man knows what tomorrow may bring upon us. I think it is wise, and not un-Christian, to be prepared for any eventuality. Please do not class me as a militarist, and please do not charge me with unfaithfulness to Christian ideals. I am in a strait betwixt loyalty to the Prince of Peace, and what seems in these chaotic times a wise, sane and conservative defense program.

"OUR NEUTRALITY."

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

I have been intending writing you for some days to express my appreciation of The Christian Century. I have read the copies you sent with interest.

"The Increasing Years," in the issue of Dec. 23, is an indulgence in the thoughtful and the reminiscent, but chilled me some. To stand way down on the western slope of life, with vision obscured by the mists of the unseen and the unknown, with faith alone to buoy one for the voyage, sometimes leaves us lost in wonder. The article is good and it is necessary that such be written, read and thought about.

Edgar DeWitt Jones' article, "The Soul's Need of Silence," is of the meditative; the mystic, in the recesses of his study, philosophizing on the eventualities of life and the necessity of knowledge and belief in God. I believe though he has his dates mixed. The 46th psalm must have been written over three hundred years before the destruction of Sennacherib's army, and could not have been in commemoration of that event.

"Christmas Logic," by J. T. Stocking, I thought excellent; but the best of all was your editorial, "Henry Ford and His Adventure." In that, you sounded the shoals and depths of thoughts which the world must come to before very much progress is made.

You rebel against our complacency, against our refusal to take any steps forward; against our stupidity in always turning back, back, and back to find precedents by which to do things in an era of progress. You speak truly when you assert belief that our nation could have done much toward stopping the war, by "speaking a human word to the war-crazed nations." Truly did you write, "Our attitude was technically proper, but humanly dastardly."

I wish you could voice your ideas to the world on that very point. I wish you would in the interests of Christianity, civilization and humanity push that idea to the front and keep it there.

We as individuals or as a nation are worth nothing to the world if in a spirit of selfishness and complacency we look upon atrocities which make the world wonder with not a word of protest or murmur of disapproval. The most inconsistent thing we have done in the whole business was in assuming an attitude of neutrality, with a request from the head of the nation that we smother our sympathies and restrain expressions of opinion, and then setting apart a day of prayer in which we were to ask God to do for us that which we would not even attempt and concerning which, nationally, we refused to have an opinion! That was the most shameful piece of diplomacy ever attempted to be worked on Heaven. Many individual prayers were no doubt earnest and sincere but as a national invocation the whole thing was unfortunate.

Our nation could today go to the van of progress and establish the peace of the world; could do things which would make the world see the futility of war and the wickedness of it, and which would make our "preparedness" program look contemptible in comparison.

J. E. Jones.

PREACHING TRUTH AND THE STANDPATTERS.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

I have long desired to express to you my appreciation of the "Century" but out of a false modesty, no doubt, I have hesitated. The fact that I have maintained my subscription the past six years when the price could have been used most conveniently otherwise is, I think, evidence of my estimation of its value.

The manifest Christian spirit, sincerity of purpose and courage to voice the truth, when such has been so unpopular, has been a source of strength and inspiration to me. As the older generation has been crucifying you, we younger ones will build you a monument, and may God keep us from persecuting our own prophets.

Dare the Christ come again? Would we not crucify him as he was crucified before? What church among us would not be subject to the denunciations of Matthew 23?

I thank you and my Christ-like teachers and friends for making me think, but dare I think if my thinking differs from the "traditions of the fathers?"

I am prompted to write by a recent "Reader's Opinion" in the "Century," under the caption, "Sincerity and Disciples' Ministry." My advice, though unsolicited and incompetent, is: Preach the Truth as revealed to you, for though you lose your job or life thus also shall you find life. I speak only from a short (four years') experience as a student-preacher, but this I found: although my every charge had been preached to death with doctrine and was torn asunder into two or three factions—the natural fruit of such preaching—a good majority of the active membership endorse a different sort, as do also a large per cent of the inactive members, and men outside the church are seeking for such truth. Many of these latter would become active members but for the fact that a number of "standpatters" are sufficiently intrenched on the board and have a sufficient grip on the purse strings to endanger one's job. This majority can not be long kept silent, but at present they hesitate to oppose the old elder or deacon or deaconess, who has paid for the organ, built the church perhaps, and contributes most to the preacher's salary, provided he is "orthodox." Their hope is that he or she, sometimes both, may soon pass away. And when they go may God bless them and give them a mansion sufficiently removed from the others that their peace may not be disturbed by the singing of the joyful and active spirits of those whom they would not fellowship here and the many who remained outside because they could not submit to their "orthodoxy."

Floyd Mercer.

P. S.—During this vacation we and the Baptists are talking union. Prospects are good for a real union with the name "Church of Christ." If it is completed I will send you a report. F. M.

THE BARNES ARTICLE.

EDITOR THE CHRISTAIN CENTURY:

I must tell you how much I enjoyed the splendid article on "The Minister and the Bellumist Propaganda," in the March 2 issue of the "Century." It is great!

I have contemplated an article on the subject, but will now wait until yours cools off.

Such utterances in our journals cannot but stimulate courage upon the part of our ministry.

THE NAME.

"The name of Presbyterian, Congregationalist, Methodist and Baptist, however much we may love it and however loyal we are to it now, is to give place to that name which is above every name. The day will come when those dashing waves of time and eternity shall strip off every name but one. Not our name, but the name of our Lord and Saviour, our Prophet, Priest and King, will abide, and amid the light of earth and the increasing glory of eternity, that name alone shall be read—Jesus Christ."—Dr. R. S. McArthur, noted Baptist.

CHRIST AS A YOKEFELLOW.

A fatal mistake in life is to drag its loads in a single collar. No one was ever intended to bear his burden alone. Christ has no single collars; he only deals in yokes. A yoke is a collar for two, and the Lord himself pleads to be one of the two. He wants to share the labor of any galling burden, whether it be when we come to the exhausting ascent or to the equally exacting decline. The secret of life's peace is to drop the single collar and to accept the Master's yoke.—J. H. Jowett.

A PERSONAL APPLICATION.

A well-known business man in Lawrence, Mass., once had a customer who contracted a debt that ran along unpaid for a year or more, and even several letters failed to bring about a settlement.

One day, while glancing over the religious notices in a local paper, the business man saw something that gave him a new idea. He went to his desk and wrote the following note to the debtor:

"My Dear Sir. I see in the local press that you are to deliver an address on Friday evening before the Y. M. C. A. on 'The Sinner's Balanced Account.' I inclose yours, as yet unbalanced, and trust that I may have the pleasure of attending your lecture."

A check came by the next mail.—Youth's Companion.

RELATIONSHIPS OF UNION CHURCHES

PROBABLY the most outstanding theoretical objection to union churches is the fact that they are likely to sustain no vital relation to any large Christian body which can provide them with the assistance of denominational fellowship.

We are prepared to admit that this is a valid objection provided such a condition actually exists. Congregations need the stimulus of fellowship in some larger body of believers. They need a well organized channel for their missionary offering and other benevolences. They need the opportunities of conventional association.

But there is no reason why union churches may not enjoy these privileges as well as others. There are many such churches that possess the fellowship of the Disciples of Christ, forward their missionary offerings through the boards of this brotherhood, and send delegates to its convention. The same thing is true of other denominations.

Where the church is made up of sections of two different religious communions there is no reason why it should not preserve its relationship with both, dividing its missionary offerings and joining in the other enterprises of the two communions. This we know is done in many such instances.

Further than this, we believe that such union churches ought to create a bond of union among themselves if for no other than reasons based upon sentiment. The union movement is coming far more rapidly than any of us know. Our correspondence has borne surprising witness to the wide area over which this problem of conservation of scattered or inefficient congregations is being studied. A very large number of experiments are being tried, and in most cases with successful results.

We have no desire to see a new denomination of union churches formed, but we believe that it is possible by mutual recognition and helpfulness for these churches to live a much more effective life.

MR. MORRISON'S LETTERS

IT IS a matter of regret to us that the letters which Mr. Morrison has undoubtedly written and forwarded to this office have come slowly and irregularly. This was as he forewarned us after his arrival at Panama, knowing as he did the slow methods of mail service from South American ports to the United States.

The reports of the Panama Congress are now finding their way into the press of the States. Secretary Inman has sent out copies of the commission reports made to the Congress, and they show with what thoroughness the studies were made previous to the gathering, and with what promptness the official papers on which the important discussions of the meeting were based are now being given to the public.

The deputation sent on into South America to hold the regional conferences in the leading cities of the great southern continent is now busy at that huge task, and we shall soon expect to hear from them. We can promise our readers that no reports will come more directly or bring more authoritative word than those of our editor.

LATER: Since the above was put in type an interesting article has been received from Mr. Morrison which will appear next week.

"UNTO THE LEAST OF THESE"

THE DAY approaches on which the offerings are to be made by the churches of the Disciples for the work of the National Benevolent Association.

It is a satisfaction to all Disciples that this cause, so long neglected by us, has come to be an important factor in our thought.

The Roman Catholic Church long ago set a wholesome example to the Christian world in its care for the poor and the unfortunate.

Protestantism has not been slow to take up the good work in the spirit of the Master, who made solicitude for the unprovided the test of character.

The National Benevolent Association has orphans' homes at St. Louis, Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Atlanta and Omaha, and homes for the aged in Jacksonville, Ill., East Aurora, N. Y., and Dallas, Tex. In addition, there is a newly equipped hospital at Kansas City, also a hospital at Valparaiso, Ind.

Offerings for the support of these institutions are made in all the churches on Easter Sunday. It is a great and worthy cause.

THE COMING CONGRESS

THE Disciples' Congress which convenes in this city April 25-27 at the Sherman Hotel, will be not only a gathering of social value, but as well of intellectual stimulus.

Read over again the statement made last week by Secretary Lumley relating to the program and the arrangements, and see if you can afford to remain away.

The Congress has from its beginning performed a very important function in the progress of thought among the Disciples. It has afforded a free forum for the discussion of ideas, untrammeled by limitations of organization, restrictions of prejudice or shortness of time. It has been understood that the Congress was not intended to be a body for the formulation of doctrine, and for that reason no motions or resolutions, save those relating directly to the simple business of the time, are either entertained or voted on.

The Congress has done more to stimulate and encourage careful thinking and frank yet moderate speech than any other gathering in our history. For this very reason it has wakened the fear and opposition of the lovers of the undisturbed, while it has gratified the men who wish to think and speak with freedom on the living issues of the hour.

The coming Congress promises to be in no manner of less interest than those which have preceded it.

A WEEK OF PRAYER

THE Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, with the approval of the Evangelical Alliance, has prepared an admirable series of topics for a week of prayer, April 16-23, the week that is usually known as Holy Week immediately preceding Easter. These topics are as follows: Sunday, April 16, The King of Kings and his Kingdom in its Growth and Glory. The Redeemed City. Monday, April 17, Thanksgiving and Cleansing. Create in us clean hearts, O God. Tuesday, April 18. Authority and Courage. Be strong and of good courage. Wednesday, April 19. Loyalty and Unity. One body and one spirit. Thursday, April 20. Heart Searching and Consecration. Making ready the guest chamber for the Lord. Friday, April 21. Sacrifice and Service. The Cross and its glory. Saturday, April 22. The Kingdom and its Triumph. The Gates of hell shall not prevail. Sunday, April 23. The Resurrection.

Pastors may obtain a leaflet containing these outlines with subjoined comments and biblical texts by applying to the Federal Council, 105 E. 22nd St., N. Y. Such a week of prayer would fit in with any plan of special services leading up to the Easter time.

THE HAWAIIAN PERIL

THE PEOPLE of Hawaii are among the most docile in the world. They are not a hardy race, and they have rapidly imitated the virtues and the vices of other people who have settled in their beautiful islands.

Into those regions where it is the boast of the natives that the climate is one long unvarying summer time, and that there are no serpents in any of the islands, the evils of liquor have been introduced with dire results to the population. There are upwards of one hundred and thirty liquor establishments on the islands, and the annual liquor bill amounts to three and a half millions of dollars.

A large brewery in Honolulu operated by white men does a flourishing business. There are several distilleries including one or two saki stills controlled and run by Japanese. Cargoes of whisky, rum, gin and other intoxicants are being shipped into the islands.

The liquor traffic is the cause of suffering and death. The Hawaiian race is in peril of extinction. Out of an original population of two hundred thousand only twenty-four thousand pure natives remain.

An earnest effort is being made to secure a prohibition law for the islands. Under the old kings the people successfully fought the liquor traffic and enacted laws for the prohibition of the trade in strong drink, the first laws of the kind enacted in any country. At the time of the annexation of the islands the natives petitioned Congress for a prohibition law, but the matter was referred back to the territorial government, and the traffic was allowed to come in.

Once more Congress is being petitioned for a law abolishing this crime against the people of the islands. The liquor traffic is the Hawaiian peril. Protection to that people demands the enactment of such a law.

WHERE HOPE HAS FAILED.

the conscious and absorbed devotion of the seekers after God. The world of moral ideals completes itself slowly through the sacrifices of the saints and the heroism of the brave. The one far off, divine event is the gaining of perfection by the process as a whole, and in that consummation every true soul in all the ages shares in the measure of his service. He does not survive, but he has builded his life into the mighty structure.

But if we are to trust our scientific guides, it is but a question of centuries or millenniums until this earth shall be dead and lifeless as the moon. In what manner then can that increasing volume of intelligence and virtue survive when this dreary tragedy overtakes our planet, as it has befallen others? Neither this way lies hope, it would seem. There must be some other path, or else our quest is in vain.

Union Churches

If the union churches which are taking form in so many parts of the country were the result of some deliberate propaganda there would be less prospect for their permanence, or of the ultimate value of the movement. But they are rather the outcome of genuine needs on the part of the communities, and of an earnest desire to conserve as far as possible the forces of the kingdom. It is this spontaneous feature which makes them worthy of the serious attention of religious leaders today. They are certain to play an increasingly forceful part in the Christian work of tomorrow. The "Century" solicits other stories of union experiments.

Union in Idaho.

Last summer I assisted in organizing the few Protestants of a community mainly Catholic. About forty people of several faiths, largely Lutheran, signed the following covenant:

"We, whose names are hereto appended, citizens of Uniontown and vicinity, believing that religious service and worship are necessary to the highest good of the community, do pledge to each other our support in maintaining a church life, calling upon God to guide and inspire us."

They organized by choosing a Superintendent of Religious Education, a Treasurer, a Secretary and a Superintendent of Meeting Place. I am preaching for them once in two weeks. These people are supporting a small but good Bible-school, and are getting along harmoniously.

On a recent visit there a young mother and father asked me to baptize their babe. The mother was raised a Presbyterian, the father a Lutheran. I explained why I could not do that, but told them that if they wished to dedicate their child to God through a public recognition of their responsibility, I would assist them. They said they would do so. In accordance with their wishes I prepared a ritual in which each parent pledged his best efforts to rear the child for God, in which the Sunday-school through the superintendent pledged its help, and which I concluded with a blessing in the name of Jesus Christ.

"No Doctrinal Test" in Colorado Union.

I note your request for information concerning community churches. Wellington, Colorado, had three churches, Methodist, Baptist and Congregationalist—all with fairly good buildings. One by one they gave up for lack of support. Last fall I was called to assist in the organization of a community church. We secured the general co-operation of all the congregations as well as members of other churches, not organized. Wellington now has a strong community church, using the largest of the church buildings and filling it at nearly every service. They also have a large Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor Society. Their pastor, who is well provided for, is a United Presbyterian minister—his name is R. H. Barr.

I have calls from other places to assist in similar organizations and will respond as soon as I can. A fundamental principle of these organizations is that they have no doctrinal test of fellowship. I teach them that it is not necessary to believe alike in order to work together and worship together.

Members of these organizations retain their memberships in the churches of their choice. Converts of these organizations are advised to unite with the church of their choice, if they choose to do so: if not, they are received in such manner as their own conscience dictates. I urge the unqualified right of private interpretation. I shall be glad to answer any questions relative to this work.

AENEAS AND DORCAS.

Lesson for April 9.

Golden Text: In all things showing thyself an ensample of good works. Titus 2:7.

Lesson, Acts 9:32-43; (compare also Proverbs 31:10-31). Memorize verses 39, 40.

(32) And it came to pass as Peter went throughout all parts, he came down also to the saints that dwelt at Lydda. (33) And there he found a certain man named Aeneas, who had kept his bed eight years; for he was palsied. (34) And Peter said unto him, Aeneas, Jesus Christ healeth thee: arise and make thy bed. And straightway he arose. (35) And all that dwelt at Lydda and in Sharon saw him, and they turned to the Lord.

(36) Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did. (37) And it came to pass in those days, that she fell sick, and died: and when they had washed her, they laid her in an upper chamber. (38) And as Lydda was nigh unto Joppa, the disciples, hearing that Peter was there, sent two men unto him, entreating him, Delay not to come on unto us. (39) And Peter arose and went with them. And when he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber: and all the widows stood by him weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them. (40) But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed; and turning to the body, he said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes; and when she saw Peter, she sat up. (41) And he gave her his hand, and raised her up; and calling the saints and widows, he presented her alive. (42) And it became known throughout all Joppa: and many believed on the Lord. (43) And it came to pass, that he abode many days in Joppa with one Simon a tanner.

VERSE BY VERSE.

32. Peter went through all parts. His activities were not restricted to the city. He went everywhere.—The saints. Literally, "the holy ones." We apply the term to those manifesting great piety; but here it means the same as Christian.—Lydda. The Lod of the Old Testament and about a day's journey from Jerusalem.

33. Aeneas. The name is Greek. All we know of him is stated in the text. Eight years. A characteristic physician's narrative. —Palsied. The term among early writers is used in a wide sense and includes paralysis, catalepsy, and tetanus.

34. Jesus Christ healeth thee. Peter gives Jesus the credit for the healing, as in Acts 4:10.—Arise and make thy bed. For eight years others had made his bed. For the first time in that period he was able to make his own bed.—And straightway he arose. He obeyed promptly, which always brings good results. Obedience is the one thing needed in our day.

35. Sharon. "The plain." It was the coast land from Joppa to Caesarea. Just about thirty miles in length.

36. Tabitha. Tabitha is Aramaic and means "gazelle," a favorite type of beauty. —Dorcas is the Greek translation of "Tabitha."—Full of good works. She was helpful in the community. Her life commended itself to the people as being worth while.

37. In those days. During the time Peter was at Lydda.—Upper chamber. This was a room set apart for some special purpose, such as meetings, prayer, etc. In this case it was a chamber for the dead.

38. Delay not to come unto us. It is not stated in the text as to how much the disciples intended Peter should do when he arrived at Joppa.

39. All the widows. They may have been the associates of Dorcas or those she helped while living in Joppa. Coats. Tunic. Garment. The ampler outer garment.

40. Peter put them all out. The scene may have suggested to Peter the raising of Jairus' daughter by Jesus. He naturally followed, in the main, the method of the great physician upon this occasion.

41. Presented her alive. The saints and widows never expected to see her alive. Their joy on entering the room is in striking contrast with the sorrow of their exit.

42. Became known. The people told each other of the work of Peter. The gospel is most effective when transmitted by human personality.—Mary believed on the Lord. It was a good testimony to the work of Peter that the people of the city could see their Lord. This is not always true, for often the worker and not Jesus is seen.

43. Many days in Joppa. Joppa was a large city and this may have been the reason for the length of Peter's sojourn.—Simon a tanner. It was unlawful for a Jew to touch a dead animal, hence the tanners were "unclean" and were compelled to live on the edge of the town.

Lives That Count

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

THE days are here when men and women must count in order to be counted in the work of life. There remain, however, a very large number of men and women in all walks of life as well as in our churches who do not count. They are respectable people, even good people, but they do not take an office, they do not teach in the Bible-school, they do not help in any of the organizations of the church. They do not give themselves in any way to the work of the church, and do not always attend as faithfully as could be expected. They simply don't count. We do not miss them when "the time of their departure is at hand."

The story of our lesson is a beautiful example of a life lived for others in some useful way. We have many such incidents in life if we could take the time to notice them. One has just occurred. A little boy comes running down the street on an errand for some one. The cry of a little girl attracted my attention; just then the two met. The little boy who was the girl's senior by four or five years, stopped and listened to the little girl's story. It was some time before he could find out just what was the matter. The conversation would have been interesting had one been close enough to have heard it; but the attitudes of the children made one feel the tenderness that must have been in the words. After looking at a piece of paper the manly little fellow learned that the girl had been sent on an errand and had lost her way. He took the little girl by the hand and the last one could see of them was two little feet hurrying up the street alongside their youthful guide. This is one story gathered out of many similar ones in modern life.

Not every boy and girl can do the clever, the perfect, the costly, the heroic, but all of us can do the helpful thing, and do it for the sake of Jesus and the good of our fellows. This will be a good work and many of such to our credit will make our life "full of good works." In order that it may be a good work, however, it must have good thought, a good motive, and a good aim. Read in this connection Paul's charming description of the prompting motive of all good works, in the thirteenth chapter of first Corinthians. Then take the motto of the business world, "Do it now," and go out to help the people with whom you live. Don't wait until you are as old as Dorcas, or have plenty of money to give away. You may not be able to make garments, but you are able to render some helpful service to your day and generation.

Two pictures of life come to me out of recent experiences. I was called to officiate at the funeral of two people in the same place and with much the same crowd at both services. This was the point of interest. At the one, the people were recounting the good deeds of the departed, and how much the community had lost. Many expressions of personal loss were narrated by the company. The other occasion was very different; while it was a larger gathering, the conversations did not linger about the dead. They were all of general interest, composed for the most part of incidents from the daily routine of life. The deceased at the first funeral was an open-hearted, unselfish person; the other was a selfish and self-centered individual, and the crowd was very unconsciously recording its appreciation of the two lives.

The power of self-sacrifice is that it conquers the heart. When you have tried all other weapons, try this. It is the sharpest sword in the arsenal of heaven. —J. M. Stifler.

"I understand the text, all right," remarked Aunt Ann Peebles, after the sermon was over; "but the preacher's explanation of it puzzled me a good deal." —Chicago Tribune.

Blessed are they who have the gift of making friends, for it is one of God's best gifts. It involves many things, but above all, the power of going out of one's self, and seeing and appreciating whatever is noble and loving in another.—Thomas Hughes.

Lord, be patient still; suffer us yet a while longer: with our broken purposes of good, with our idle endeavors against evil, suffer us a while longer to endure, and (if it may be) help us to do better.—R. L. Stevenson.

Only as a nation is steadied, guided and inspired by Christian principles will it fulfill its destiny; otherwise it will pass the way of other nations which have perished from the earth. . . . The greatest peril of the nation is secularism.—John R. Mott.

Disciples Table Talk

Texas Christian University Has New Head.

L. D. Anderson, pastor of First church, Dallas, Texas, has been elected president of Texas Christian University, and has been released by his congregation to assume this new task. Mr. Anderson was graduated from Kentucky University, Lexington, in 1900 and received a degree from Texas, Christian University in 1905. He was pastor of First church, Dallas, for four years. Before that he was pastor at Palestine, Tex., for nine years and was pastor at Ennis for three years before going to Palestine. He succeeds Dr. F. D. Kershner as president of the university, Dr. Kershner having resigned early in this school year to take the editorship of the Christian-Evangelist.

First Church, Ft. Worth, Tex., Dedicated.

The new $100,000 home of First church, Ft. Worth, Tex., was dedicated early this month. L. D. Anderson, pastor of the church, led in the arduous task of building the edifice and large credit is given him for the final success of the effort. After the dedication a week of services was held in the new building, and one evening was celebrated as Texas Christian University night. A feature of this was the presentation of Mr. Anderson, pastor of the church, as president-elect of T. C. U. Colby D. Hall and Clinton Lockhart gave the addresses of the evening. At the first session of the Bible-school held in the new building there was an attendance of 1,296 present.

Cultivating the Men at Ionia, Mich.

R. B. Chapman, pastor at Ionia, Mich., reports a special series of Sunday evening meetings. The brotherhood has taken entire charge for the last four Sunday evenings—with the exception of a short sermon by the pastor. A ten minute talk was given by a member of the brotherhood at each service. The topics chosen were: "The Men and Millions Movement," "The Man of Today," "Live Wires," and "The Panama Conference." The church was completely filled on each occasion. The good effect was not only evident in the increased attendance but also in the fact that the men have been put to work, writes Mr. Chapman. Last Sunday evening the pastor began a series of "Lodge Nights," having invited five of the leading fraternal organizations to attend services on a specified date for each. The orders invited and the subjects for each are: March 12—Masons: "The Temple of Character." March 19—K. of P. "The Knight of Now." March 26—Moose: "The True Fraternalism." April 2—I. O. O. F.: "The Genius of Brotherhood." April 9—Elks: "The Safe Nation." At the morning services during Lent, Mr. Chapman is giving a series of talks on "The Grand Divisions of the Saviour's Life," following Stalker's outline.

Pontiac, Ill., Church Receives Gift.

Ernest H. Reed, pastor, reports that his church at Pontiac, Ill., has just had the good fortune of hearing that it has been the beneficiary in the will of the late Samuel Earp, a citizen of Pontiac, to the extent of $3,000. The amount is to be invested in first mortgages and the interest applied to the current expenses of the congregation. At a recent morning service, resolutions of appreciation were adopted, a copy of which will be sent to the family of Mr. Earp, and a copy spread upon the records of the church. Mr. Earp's first wife was a Disciple, he himself being a Baptist, but always friendly to the Christian church.

Conservative Eastern Work Yields Before Aggressive Efforts.

T. E. Winter, pastor at Third church, Philadelphia, faced a difficult task when he left Missouri about two years ago to take a pulpit in the "conservative East." But that he has made good is seen from the report of his past year's work in this field. The annual meeting showed by its reports a splendid year's progress. There were 108 accessions at regular services during the year, 82 by baptism. Lost by letters and otherwise 23, leaving a net gain of 85. A Boy Scout Troop, a Young Women's Mission Circle, and a Y. P. S. C. E., were formed during the year, and all are doing good work. The church treasurer reported a balance in the treasury and all bills paid. The church and its auxiliary organizations raised during the year for current expenses, $6,028.12; for missions and benevolences, $1,411.59; and for the building fund, $1,627.80. The present church membership is 654, and the Bible-school enrollment is 797, including Home Department and Cradle Roll. Since January 1, 1916, there have been about 40 added to the church at regular services.

Kansas City Men's Classes in Attendance Campaign.

The men's classes of the Disciples churches of Kansas City, Mo., stood second in the number of men enrolled at last report. The Baptists stood first. This is a campaign which has as its goal, "15,000 by the time the Billy Sunday meetings open in April." Here is the standing of the various churches when last reported: Baptist, 1,330; Disciples, 1,412; Congregational, 227; Evangelical, 113; Friends, 60; Methodist Episcopal, 1,504; Methodist Episcopal, South 756; Methodist Protestant, 22; Presbyterian, U. S. A., 883; Presbyterian, U. S., 237; Re-

The Easter Call the Call of Christ

The call for a generous Easter is not simply the call of a few individuals or a society. It is the call for help from the sister in Christ who has suddenly been bereft of husband and home. She is the sole support of her family of little ones. She cannot leave them behind her and she cannot take them with her to work. She turns in her helplessness to her brethren in the Christian faith because she remembers that their Master and hers exhorted his followers to bear one another's burdens as an evidence of their love to him.

It is the call of the orphan child. He is a stranger in this big world. He has lost his protector and guide. He is surrounded with dangers. He has no one to bathe his wounds, to kiss away his hurts, to comfort his heart, to guide his feet in the paths of virtue, to teach his heart to love God. He has no home. He has no mother. Where shall he go in this hour of his sorest need if not to the church of the compassionate Christ? The Easter call is his call to us to follow his example in taking these little ones in our arms and in bestowing our blessing upon them.

The Easter call is the call of the aged follower of Christ who has reached the end of his journey alone. He is infirm. He has no substance for the needed comfort of tired body while he awaits the Master's call. He shivers with the cold. He is hungry. The storms beat mercilessly upon his old, gray head. All of this has come to him possibly because of his fidelity to Jesus. His appeal is the appeal of the Christ himself. He, not they, holds out pleading hands for help. He says, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye did it unto me."

What will your answer be on April 23? Will it be a great Easter offering? Will it be, therefore, food, clothing, shelter and love to these for whom Christ died? The National Benevolent Association, 2955 North Euclid Ave., St. Louis, awaits your answer.

Great Gains in Foreign Missions

The returns for the March Offering are encouraging. Only a start, however, has been made. It will require all of March and April to reveal the real situation.

Comparing the receipts of the first fifteen days of March with the corresponding fifteen days of 1915, shows that the churches as churches have made a gain in their offerings of $5,213. This is splendid!

The gain in the number of contributing churches for the fifteen days is 249. We are sure the friends will rejoice over this gain also. It is very gratifying.

The Endeavor Societies show a gain in their offerings for the fifteen days of $414.

The total gain for the missionary year up to and including March 15, is even more gratifying. The churches have gained in their gifts $10,620. The increase in the number of contributing churches is 451. The Christian Endeavor Societies gained $1,869 in their gifts. The total gain on the year, including all gifts, $9,937.

There was a gain every day for the first fifteen days of March with only one exception.

And during the first fifteen days of March eight new Living-link churches were reported.

The churches and friends everywhere are making a good start. Now for a united and enthusiastic "drive" all along the line to reach the $500,000 mark! It can be done. It must be done.

Let there be no more marking time in any church. Onward, onward! Please send your offerings promptly to F. M. Rains, Secretary, Cincinnati, O.

March 2 at the Board Meeting of Trustees of Phillips University, unanimously voted the trusteeship on the board made vacant by the death of E. V. Zollars. In addition to his arduous duties as State Secretary, he will accept this new responsibility.

New Sharon, Pa., Pastor Leads in Forward Steps.

R. J. Bennett's work at Sharon, Pa., is reported on the up-grade by one of his church leaders. The Bible-school rooms have to be opened almost every Sunday to accommodate the people coming to hear the preacher. Special lecture-sermons and sermons to Juniors are features of his programs. A fine choir and orchestra have been built up since his coming last December. Both the church and Bible-school are in a campaign to double the membership, attendance, offerings and efficiency within five years. An "Each-One-Win-One" effort is being made. The first Sunday of April will be observed as Visitors' Sunday. Mr. Bennett is a graduate of Bethany college, spent a year in Indiana State University and received his Master's degree and his degree in divinity from Yale. His graduating thesis at Yale Divinity School was "The Proposed Union of the Baptists and Disciples." Mr. Bennett has held pastorates in Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania and Connecticut. For two years he taught in Keuka college, New York.

Lincoln, Neb., Brotherhood Hears State Notable.

Frank M. Coffey, Commissioner of Labor of Nebraska, spoke recently to the men of the Berean Brotherhood, First church, Lincoln, Neb., on "Labor Problem.s" Mr. Coffey is a new kind of state labor commissioner in Nebraska. He is not a politician, and was appointed by a governor who is of another political party. He is a laboring man himself, a printer, who, by his unaided efforts, has acquired an education. He has been admitted to the bar of the state, and knows more than any other person in the state about the Nebraska workmen's compensation act and its practical application.

W. A. Shullenberger Accepts Call to Des Moines, Central.

Since Finis Idleman left Central church, Des Moines, for the work at Central, New York, the Des Moines leaders have been eagerly searching for his successor. A few weeks ago W. A. Shullenberger, of Mexico, Mo., visited the church and a call was at once extended him. The report comes of his acceptance, to begin service in the new field immediately after April 1.

New Plans at Irving Park, Chicago.

W. G. Winn, pastor at Irving Park church, Chicago, is leading his people into some new methods of work which have proved quite successful. Every Sunday morning, as a part of the opening exercises at the church service, Mr. Winn preaches a sermon to the children, who are thus held for morning worship until after communion service. The Wednesday evening meeting now takes the form of a Bible-class, enrolling twenty-five or thirty persons; a study is being made of the outlines of Bible history. A new plan is the giving during the early part of the evening services of "sacred victrola concerts," in which only the works of the masters are used; talks are given also on the great composers. An Easter efficiency excursion is being promoted with success, a thousand cards having been distributed in connection with the campaign. For next winter a school of religious education is being planned.

Chicago Young Men's Class Dedicates New Room.

A church school noted for its adult classes is Jackson Blvd. school, Chicago, of which Burt Segur is superintendent, and Austin Hunter pastor. One of the livest organizations in the school is the young men's class taught by Mr. Wollom. On March 19 this class dedicated a fine, new room of its own, seating about 125 persons; this room was cut out of the gallery. The Jackson Blvd., school is now promoting a campaign of enlargement and improvement looking toward Easter. With an average attendance now of over 600, the school has set its aim at 800 average by Easter. Other points considered in the special campaign are: Officers and teachers present at the conferences; percentage of enrollment present in classes; personal service work through the week. A remarkably successful feature of the work at this school is the Wednesday evening group conferences. There are four department conferences in session, also groups of class presidents, of membership committee chairmen, etc. About sixty persons usually attend the conferences.

Missions at Bethany Park, Ind.

Lord's Day, August 6, at Bethany Assembly will be Christian Missions Day. R A. Doan, secretary of the Foreign Society, will bring a message at the morning hour. Mr. Doan spent one year in China and Japan, and speaks from knowledge thus gained. F. W. Burnham, president of the American Society, will speak at night.

Another Wednesday Evening Plan is Reported.

W. N. Johnson, pastor at Orrville, O., for the past year, has been reading the stories of successful Wednesday evening plans reported in these columns, and sends in still another interesting story. This congregation is making an especial effort to make the church the social center for the young people, and to that end maintains open house each Wednesday evening, with different organizations responsible for the program and entertainment. A feature of this social plan is to bring in each month a live man to give an address. As soon as tables and a bookcase can be furnished, the Bible-school rooms will be opened for a reading room, to which the young people can come at least one night each week. The last Sunday of March has been set as Liquidation Day in the church and Bible-school. An effort will be made on this day to raise sufficient funds to pay off all indebtedness. A banner attendance at church and school will be striven for.

Plymouth, Ill., Church Builds Gymnasium and Community House.

One of the largest and most effective programs outlined by any church in Illinois is that which the Plymouth Ill., church has outlined under the efficient leadership of W. A. Taylor. When Mr. Taylor took charge of this work last October (he only gives one-fourth time to the church) he found it disorganized and the membership wholly discouraged. He began at once to plan definite things for the church. The first thing attempted was to build up the Bible-school, which is now four times as large as at that time and much more efficient. He soon saw the need of providing for the social life of the young people, and Mr. and Mrs. William F. Aleshire opened their spacious home for this purpose. This need become so apparent that at a meeting of the young people last month it was decided to build a Gymnasium and Community House in order to supply the proper social life and entertainment for the young people. Ground was broken for the erection of this building a few days ago, and the work will be pushed as rapidly as possible to completion. This is not a strong church numerically or financially, and the new building will represent sacrifice for the sake of better life. Mr. Taylor is an expert rural and village church man. This is the fourth church within thirty miles of each other that he has saved and built up in the last few years. Geo. W. Wise, of Camp Point, sends these facts about this very unusual village achivement.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—Allen T. Shaw, pastor at Mt. Sterling, Ill., delivered a lecture at Meredosia, Ill., under the Parent-Teachers' Association. Mr. Shaw is being called on for several commencement addresses this year, and will visit Missouri in the course of his journeyings. He would like to hold a vacation meeting in some town of Michigan, or northern Indiana or Illinois, during the month of August. Mr. Shaw leads his own music.

—With the aim of raising funds for the erection of a new church building at Enid, Okla., to take the place of the one recently destroyed by fire, a rally week was observed early in the month, Z. A. Harris, of Blackwell, speaking at most of the services.

—Central church, Dallas, Tex., was badly damaged by fire on March 10. The loss is estimated at $13,000. There is an insurance of $22,000 on the building. Harry D. Smith announces that services will not be interfered with by the damage.

What is Happening to Chicago Disciple Churches

By Orvis Fairlee Jordan.

The study of city churches is of the deepest importance to the future of Christianity. It is well known that Protestantism is on the wane in many cities. Chicago, the second city in America, and the fourth in the world, has suffered an actual loss in Sunday-school attendance in recent years, though the city is growing a hundred thousand in population per annum. Many denominational leaders, reporting for organizations that spend from fifty to a hundred and fifty thousand dollars annually on city mission work, say their organizations are "marking time."

The statistics for the Disciples of Christ in Chicago are no more reliable than the pastors and church clerks make them. Not every church reports every year. The figures given below are taken from the two year-books of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society of the years 1910 and 1915 respectively.

In that period one church died and three new ones were born. In point of number of organizations, there has been an increase. The following are the statistics as to membership:

	Year. 1910	1915	Percent gain.
Armitage Ave.	20	...	.100
Armour Ave.	50	90	.80
Ashland Ave.	194	313	.61
Austin.	150	300	.100
Chicago Heights.	125	230	.84
Douglas Park.	84	127	.51
Englewood.	610	678	.11
Edgewater.		60	....
Evanston.	104	152	.47
Harvey.	165	169	.02
Hyde Park.	175	250	.43
Irving Park.	153	236	.54
Jackson Blvd.	720	900	.25
Maywood.	40	28	.30
Memorial.	425	438	.03
Metropolitan.	250	375	.50
Morgan Park.		30	....
Monroe St.	201	130	.35
Russian Mission.		30	....
Sheffield Ave.	190	205	.08
South Chicago.	72	30	.59
West End.	87	47	.46
West Pullman.	70	60	.14
	4485	4878	.09

These who know the environment of the churches represented in these tables know that the churches that are surrounded by the smaller number of immigrants have tended to have the best growth. The building of a good plant has in some cases brought very high percentage of increase. The residential suburbs are the places where the progress is easiest and surest.

The training of the minister is a marked factor in the development of the city church. Those who have watched the ministry in these churches for the past five years will testify that the churches suffering loss have usually been those with ministers having less training, and those that have made the gain have usually been those with the better training. The self-trained man sometimes succeeds in a marked way in the pastorate, as elsewhere, but his chances are poorer in the city than in town or country.

Only one of these churches does not have its own minister, though in some cases the minister has secular employment as well. Probably the time has come in this city group for the organization of new Sunday-schools, mothered for a time by older schools, but later to be given the attention of pastors, by the city missionary society. The various denominations make their growth by planting such schools on the outskirts of the city following the lines of transportation.

In spite of contrary reports, the members of Chicago churches are a united group. Any clerical person who has ever tried to divide the group has discovered in the end how real this unity is. Like all other religious bodies, the Disciples have been facing the modern changes in theological definition, but they may be trusted to carry the big convictions which have been strengthened by the years to an ever-increasing number of seekers after religious truth.

—Evangelist Clyde L. Fife is being considered by many of the church people of Sacramento, Cal., for a union tabernacle meeting there this summer or fall. Mr. Fife, with his brothers and sister, emphasizes the Gospel message with a wide variety of song and music.

—T. W. Grafton, pastor at Third church, Indianapolis, made some strong statements in his pulpit recently concerning corruption in public offices. "Public officials who take their oath of office swearing to uphold the laws which they are entrusted to enforce, and who have no intention of doing so, are guilty of taking the name of God in vain," Mr. Grafton declared.

—The Disciples church joined with First Baptist church at Waterloo, Ia., in a very successful revival series. L. C. Moore leads the work at the former church.

—The convention of the churches of North California will be held at Garfield Park, Santa Cruz, July 10-16.

—The St. Louis City Missionary Society has again called B. A. Abbott to its presidency.

—The Cleveland Men and Millions campaign realized a total of $100,000 for this splendid work.

—J. A. Barnett, of Moline, Ill., has been speaking at a number of noonday meetings at the Rock Island railroad shops, at Silvis, Ill.

—Prospects are bright for the most successful assembly in the history of Bethany Park, under the aggressive leadership of W. E. M. Hackleman.

—J. H. Mohorter, national leader in Disciple benevolences, rightly asks the attention of the churches from now until after the Easter offering.

—J. B. Hunley of Ivanhoe Park Church, Kansas City, Mo., recently exchanged pulpits with A. W. Kokendoffer, pastor at Sedalia, Mo.

—A revival was recently held at the Kansas Reformatory, at Hutchinson, and over a hundred men converted. M. Lee Sorey, the Disciples' church, was one of the leaders in this work.

—Central church, Indianapolis, was host to the annual state intercollegiate oratorical contest, in which seven colleges were represented.

—Arthur Long, pastor at Coffeyville, Kan., recently preached a sermon to the children of his church on the theme, "Why is Love Like a Lump of Coal?"

—Charles Campbell Fite, heir to W. A. Fite, pastor at Ashland, Ky., arrived on March 8. "He wears the name of Campbell for Thomas and Alexander Campbell," Mr. Fite writes.

—The adult classes at Springfield, O., school are conducting a campaign for new members of three months, and are making use of the "Attendance Builders" published by the Disciples' Publication Society.

—The Men and Millions Team opened its campaign in Des Moines on March 19. Among the workers are: Dr. R. J. Dye, H. P. Shaw and W. E. Gordon, missionaries; Henry Derthick, F. W. Burnham, R. A. Doan, J. H. Booth, W. R. Warren and H. O. Pritchard.

—Iowa Disciples will meet in annual convention at Osceola, the first week in May, where W. C. Cole ministers.

—G. L. Snively dedicated the new building at Jefferson, Ia., where D. E. Milard is pastor. Over $13,000 was raised in cash and pledges, although but about $11,000 was needed.

—Peru, Ind., church, under the leadership of the pastor. T. J. Brock, will build a new church home.

—J. M. Vawter is organizing his men at Jeffersonville, Ind. A hundred have already been enlisted.

—At the recent convention of student volunteers held at Bloomington, Ind., the entire student body from the College of Missions, Indianapolis, was in attendance.

—R. A. Miller, of the Men and Millions Movement, addressed a great Laymen's Missionary conference at Indianapolis, recently held.

—The regular Union Ministers' Meeting of Chicago was dated for March 27 at 10:30, at First Methodist church, corner Clark and Washington. The speakers: Charles K. Carpenter, of First Methodist church, Oak Park, Ill.; John Timothy Stone, of Fourth Presbyterian church, Chicago, and Paul Rader, of Moody Institute, Chicago.

—Bethany Assembly meets July 26, and closes Aug. 18. One of the unique features of the program will be a series of lectures by ten Hoosier preachers. These lectures will be given by E. W. Cole, Huntington; E. R. Edwards, Logansport; W. R. Warren, Indianapolis; C. M. Yocum, Rushville; F. E. Smith, Muncie; D. H. Shields, Kokomo; B. F. Daily, Indianapolis; A. L. Ward, Lebanon; F. E. Jaynes, Wabash, and Prof. C. E. Underwood, Indianapolis. Each speaker will select his own subject without reference to that of any other speaker.

—Michigan churches will assemble in state convention July 11-14, at Lansing.

—Franklin St., church, Grand Rapids, Mich., has adopted a slogan of "At least one new member at every meeting."

—Beardstown, Ill., church, G. W. Morton, pastor, is making an effort to double attendance at church services, Bible-school and Christian Endeavor meetings by Easter.

—In harmony with the plans of "Clean-Up Week" at Paris, Ill., First church, led by H. H. Peters, spent several hundred dollars in improving and cleaning up its property.

—John L. Brandt, of First church, St. Louis, Mo., is being personally guarded by members of his church, since he has become involved in controversy over vice conditions in the Missouri city. Dr. Brandt is chairman of the Legislative Committee of the Evangelical Alliance.

—Funds subscribed for the new First church at St. Joseph, Mo., have reached $37,000. As soon as $50,000 is reached, the architect will begin his work on the new $100,000 structure.

—Fifteen thousand dollars was raised in twenty minutes by Traverce Harrison, pastor at Bellefontaine, O., in a service held at Washingtonville to defray the indebtedness on the new building there.

—H. O. Breeden, of Fresno, Cal., church, has been chosen president of the Federation of Churches of California. The Federation consists of all the churches of the state, of all denominations. Dr. Breeden's predecessor was Bishop Edwin Hughes, of San Francisco.

Ten Big Reasons Why

are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

ices for the Congress. Of course, Mr. Inman's leadership reflected honor upon his brethren constantly. At the closing session a statement of appreciation was made by Chairman Speer on account of the generosity of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in loaning Mr. Inman for the past year to the work of the Congress. Bishop Oldham, of New York, moved that the Congress acknowledge this service of the women of the Disciples' fellowship by a vote, which was heartily given. What Mr. Inman's future relationship to the C. W. B. M. will be has not yet been determined. In looking forward to the new and larger leadership to which he was elected by the Congress, he spoke with feeling about the possibility of being separated from his own board which he has served for over ten years. It is probable that the Committee on Cooperation in Latin America will ask the Woman's Board to allocate him to this new work, thus maintaining his status as a missionary of that board.

DISCIPLES IN THE CONGRESS.

President Charles T. Paul, of the College of Missions, had a prominent part in the preparation of the report of the Committee on Message and Method, and shared with Bishop Brown the presentation of the report to the Congress. He also made one of the chief evening addresses, speaking on the subject, "The Principles and Spirit of Jesus Essential to Meet the Social Needs of Our Time." It was a masterly address, far-visioned, comprehensive, and effectively delivered. President Paul brought to his subject an acquaintance with Latin American literature that gave a peculiarly Latin flavor to his address. When it came to the problems calling for scholarly counsel, no man's was sought or accepted more readily than his.

PRESIDENT MCLEAN AND MRS. HARRISON.

President A. McLean, of the Foreign Society, led the Hour of Intercession at the close of a morning session. This was the most impressive part of the day-time program. On successive days, such men as Bishop Oldham, Dr. Henry Churchill King, Dr. William Adams Brown, Dr. Paul de Schweinitz, Dr. L. C. Barnes and others led this service. President McLean brought a great contribution to the spiritual life of the Congress by his Scriptural interpretation of the principle of intercessory prayer. He was also a member of the Business Committee, of which Dr. Mott was chairman, which had in charge the entire program.

Mrs. Lide Wilbers Harrison, of Lexington, Kentucky, was vice-chairman, and an important contributor to the report of the Commission on Woman's Work, and it fell to her to close the discussion with a summary of both the report and the discussion. This she did in an effective speech that was among the most worthy of all those presented during the discussion of woman's place in missionary work. Dr. Irene T. Myers, of Transylvania College, was also a member of this commission and took part in the debate in a thoughtful speech.

A full list of the Disciples present—most of whom took part in the Congress in one form or another—follows: Mr. and Mrs. Inman, President and Mrs. Paul, President McLean, Mrs. Harrison, Dr. Myers, Secretary and Mrs. George W. Muckley, of the Church Extension Board; Rev. T. F. Reavis, of Buenos Aires, Rev. Merrit B. Wood and Rev. V. C. Carpenter, of Porto Rico; Miss Emma Ireland and Miss Jessie L. T. Brown, of Piedras Negras, Mexico; Miss Mary Irene Orvis, of San Antonio, Texas, and the writer.

I shall have to leave to subsequent letters any discussion of the conditions of Latin America as revealed by the Congress. As a member of the deputation, representing the Congress, I start tomorrow morning on a trip around South America, and it will probably be more interesting to my readers if I report on conditions as the deputation finds them with its own eyes, rather than give a second-hand description received from the Congress. By the time this is read, we will no doubt have held a Regional Conference for Peru and Bolivia at Lima, and will be on our way to Santiago in Chile. It is a long journey we have already taken, but the long, long trail is yet before us.

The Havana Regional Conference

By W. L. Darner.

IN THE counsel of the many there is safety and breadth of vision and in union there is strength. This well characterizes the workings of the Regional Conference on Christian Work in Cuba held in Havana last month.

Thirty-two delegates and visitors from the United States and Canada who were in the great Panama Conference on Christian Work in Latin America and had received a general impression of the vastness of the missionary field under consideration, and the great opportunities there given with its challenge to enter and possess the land, were present in the Havana Conference to give counsel and vision to its proceedings.

Our people were well represented by our own President A. McLean, S. G. Inman, to whom in a large measure was due the success of the Panama meeting; G. W. Muckley, Secretary of the Church Extension Board; Mrs. G. W. Muckley and N. B. Wood and V. C. Carpenter, missionaries of the C. W. B. M. in Porto Rico.

SIX COMMISSIONS.

The sessions were marked by a deep desire to know the true conditions and then to act in the light of the findings. Six commissions had been appointed and reported to the conference. Each report with its discussion occupied one session. The commissions were: 1. Survey and Occupation of the Field. 2. Evangelism, Self-Propagation and Personal Work. 3. Literature. 4. Education. 5. Church Life and Self-Support. 6. Co-operation and Unity.

The Commission on Survey reported nine boards at work with 145 stations and 190 out stations and 12,000 members. There is some overlapping, yet large sections are as yet practically untouched. The larger towns and cities are occupied. Little work has been done among the country people or in the many large sugar mills.

In the report of the Commission on Evangelism we were pleased to hear sounded the note of unity; not that there be organic union, but some plan of co-operation in united effort by which the masses may hear the claims of Christianity. A Quaker called attention to the fact that they and the Episcopalians were working together in the Conference in perfect harmony and if that be true why not all co-operate in actual service?

The largest contribution by the Commission on Literature was to create a real desire on the part of the Christian forces working in Cuba for some union movement to supply a union paper and possibly Sunday-school literature in Spanish to be used by all alike.

The Commission on Church Life and Self-Support suggested that forty years or more may elapse before the native churches will be self-supporting, but that this goal must be held before the people constantly. The causes given for requiring such a long time were: 1. Poverty of the members. 2. Lack of education in giving. 3. The Catholic custom. They charge the people big fees for baptism, confirmation, marriage, private mass, etc., consequently, the people are not accustomed to giving as a means of grace.

THE NOTE OF UNITY SOUNDED.

The Commission on Education emphasized the need of model schools. They must set the standards for the public schools. Again the spirit of co-operation was manifest when a missionary secretary said they had large sums to spend in Cuba for education when the different churches working in Cuba could agree on some plan of co-operation in education and not duplicate plants in some places and leave other provinces without any Evangelical school.

A NEW SPIRIT EVIDENT.

The high water mark of the conference was reached in the report of the Commission on Co-operation and Unity. There was little of the old-time spirit present; very little was said of denominationalism but much of Christianity; yet it was understood and expressed that co-operation must be voluntary and if any fail to enter the rest should not become angry. "The former policy," said a missionary of long experience, "has been 'hands off'; now we need to get together." Another, "The main essential is not Baptists or Methodists, but Christians." Again, "The supreme aim is to put Christ into the hearts and lives of every Cuban." The chairman, a Presbyterian, spoke by request, emphasizing the need of producing Christian fruit as a means of minimizing differences and stated that in the work the divisive name should not be emphasized. He said he for one was willing to drop the name Presbyterian—if the others would do the same. A Methodist, who was chairman of the commission, in a few happy remarks consented to do likewise. We cannot hope for full co-operation in Cuba yet; however, the atmosphere is beginning to clear and a great advance has been made.

But we have faith to believe something definite will come from this conference. Steps were taken looking to a fuller survey of the field in the hope of a more co-operative and economical occupation, evangelically and educationally. To this end a Committee of Conference in Cuba was constituted and appointed. An interesting report which was unanimously adopted sums up the work of the Havana Regional Conference. This will be published next week.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE PRICE OF FREEDOM

A RECENT editorial utterance has brought to us a large amount of correspondence regarding the duty of ministers who find themselves hedged round by conservative views and who wish to be true to their consciences in a time of doctrinal unrest.

It is assumed by some of our correspondents that the Disciples of Christ are particularly troubled by this problem. We have a large and growing number of ministers who are living in the modern world of scientific knowledge and progressive thinking. They have been trained in the public schools, colleges and universities, and like all intelligent people of this generation they have accepted the perfectly obvious conclusions with regard to the physical world and the progressive phases of its life. In other words, evolution is the foundation of all of their thinking regarding physical science, political institutions, social ideals and literary movements.

They are also students of the Bible in the light of the historical spirit. Biblical criticism has opened to them a new world of value in the Holy Scripture. They know that only the belated spirit of obscurantism longer opposes itself to the use of the results of the critical method in biblical study.

Yet they find themselves among people to whom the words evolution and criticism have been invested with sinister meanings by an ignorant or unscrupulous religious press. Such terms are the cause of genuine alarm and serious opposition. What is a minister to do who feels his responsibility both to truth and to his people?

It must not be forgotten that this is not a problem of the Disciples alone. Practically every religious body is passing through the same process of adjustment. In another generation these matters will be as generally accepted and as commonplace to the public in general as they are now to the world of scholarship. But meantime friction is unavoidable. If anyone supposes that the Disciples are unique in this respect, he has only to glance through the denominational press of other communions to realize his mistake.

But suppose it were only among our own people that these particular problems were met. Every religious organization has its own difficulties and is constantly in process of adjustment to new truth. That is the minister's business. He is always the mediator of new values to a somewhat hesitant and suspicious following. His duty is plain. He is not to be untrue to his convictions. If it came to the choice between loyalty to truth and the possibility of continuing his ministry, he knows what he would do.

But it is very rarely that the issue presents itself in that bald form. The wise minister makes it his study to adjust the larger truth to his people with tact and discretion. The man who would preach evolution and higher criticism to an unprepared people would probably lose his position and ought to lose it. He is sinning against the very light he is trying to bring in, against the company of devout scholars who are facing tactfully and successfully the same problem, and against the people whose religious welfare is of greater importance than any theory of physical science or method of literary inquiry.

There are scores of ministers among the Disciples who preach to congregations who would be alarmed at any suspicion that their preachers were departing in the slightest regard from the traditional landmarks of the past, and yet these ministers without labeling their views are informing their messages with all the values of scientific and biblical truth, and are gradually leading their people into the enjoyment of a vital Christian faith by that very means.

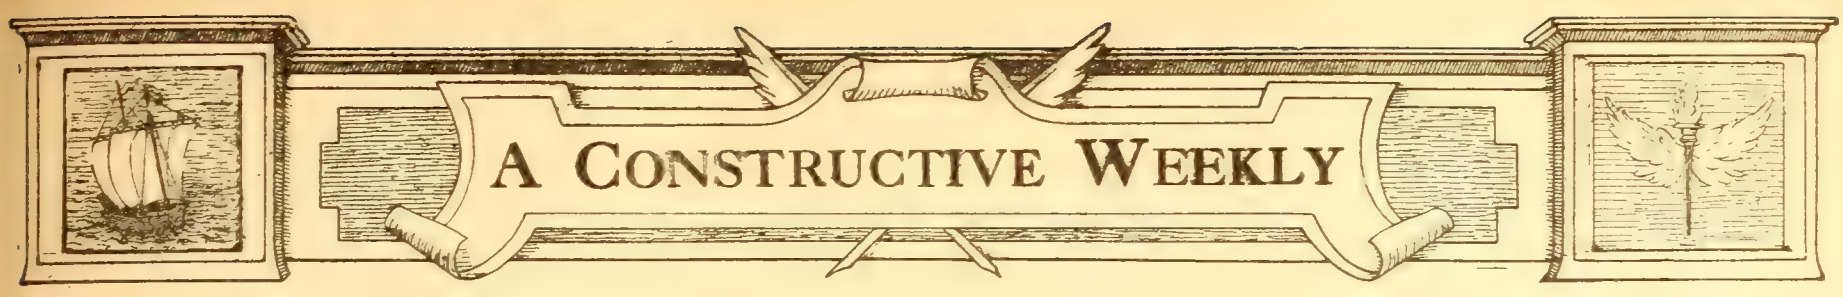
We insist upon the fact that no man is really loyal to the truth as he sees it until he perceives that truth is not an abstract thing, but is only worthful as it is organized into life. And if he fails in that delicate and sensitive task of interpretation and adjustment, he has failed in the most vital task committed to him.

No man who is honest with himself will cease to study and to think, no matter how reactionary may be his environment. No man who is loyal to himself and his calling will preach a traditional gospel when it has ceased to satisfy his sense of religious value. On the other hand he would be equally in error were he to adopt methods of speech alarming to his people in the fancied effort to speak the present truth. He knows that he cannot lead people who have ceased to follow. More than this, he does not propose to leave his church in the face of these real difficulties. If he were to seek another communion he would find that he had only exchanged one set of problems for another, and have lost in the meantime the investment of influence and experience which is his most valuable asset.

Therefore he faces his task with the deliberate conviction that he must be true to his message and at the same time true to his people. And there are few instances on record where the adjustment between these seemingly incompatible obligations is incapable of attainment by the man who with patience, discretion and the spirit of God sets himself to the task.

THE PASSING OF A VETERAN

ON FEBRUARY 13, at the Old Peoples Home in Jacksonville, Ill., Phillip Loos passed away, a veteran of the European wars and of the Christian life.



He was born in Alsace-Lorraine, the mooted borderland between France and Germany. He was a brother of the late C. L. Loos, once President of Kentucky University.

The pastor of the Jacksonville Church, Rev. M. L. Pontius, writes: "He entered The Old People's Home July 1, 1912. He was a sincere Christian, a most exemplary and beautiful character. A blessing must come to our brotherhood because of the care given to this aged saint of God in his declining years."

This is the sort of work which several institutions under the direction of the National Benevolent Association are performing in behalf of men and women worthy of honor by all Disciples. We have reason to be proud of the ministry of good will performed by the Association, for which offerings are to be made in all the churches at the Easter time.

THE ROMAN CATHOLICS IN LATIN AMERICA

IT IS NO secret that the plan to conduct a Congress at Panama in the interest of Christian work throughout Latin America awakened the keen antagonism of the Roman Catholic authorities in that region, and even extended to the High Church party of the Protestant Episcopal church.

The Roman Catholics took no part in the Congress, and permitted none of their people to attend. It appears that this attitude has awakened the surprised resentment of open minded men both inside and out of the Roman Catholic Church in those regions.

An interesting example of this sentiment is afforded by an editorial in "The Daily Star and Herald" of Panama, reviewing in most approving words the work of the Congress, and deprecating the attitude of Roman Catholicism toward it. It points out the remarkable fact that there was a total of 304 delegates and visitors representing 21 nations, and of this number 145 were from the countries it was proposed to benefit. Every Central and South American state was represented, and besides the attendance from the United States and Canada, there were representatives from England, Spain, and Italy. These facts are, of course, given more fully in Mr. Morrison's articles.

The editorial expresses surprise that the Roman Catholic Church should have taken its unwarranted and suspicious attitude toward this gathering. It wonders whether the church believes that it is really doing all that should be done religiously for the populations of Latin America. It contrasts the energy and zeal of the pioneers of that church in missionary work with the grudging attitude now displayed toward the same enterprise on the part of others, and raises the question whether the Roman Catholic Church is becoming afraid of comparison with the missionary work of Protestantism.

"MILLION DOLLAR MISSIONS"

THE above is the caption of a leading editorial which appeared in the Des Moines Capitol, under date of March 15. These strong words indicate in some measure the appreciation of the Des Moines community of the campaign recently conducted there by the Men and Millions leaders:

"The extent to which missionary work is assuming its rightful place in the economic problems of the day is illustrated in what is known as the 'Men and Millions' movement of the Disciples of Christ. The leaders want one thousand men and six million dollars. They are spreading their propaganda before the churches of their denomination in Des Moines and Iowa.

"The slogan is a happy one because it emphasizes the need of trained men. For that reason a part of the money will be used to endow schools which have facilities for educating workers.

"The object is to evangelize the world on a million dollar basis. It is typical of the change that is going on in the minds of the people. Heretofore we have been content to perform our business obligations first and let the benevolences go until the last. Advanced civilization has taught us that we have been wrong.

"This is an age in which all things are done on a big scale. The church has been plodding along, content to use nineteenth century methods to perform twentieth century work. When the church comes out and asks for millions instead of thousands and succeeds in getting them, it is a sign that an awakening has occurred."

WHO IS ON TRIAL?

THERE is much talk in the magazines of the failure of Christianity. The present reversion to barbarism in Europe has opened a wide field for caustic comment on the part of people who have enjoyed the advantages of Christian civilization, but prefer to take the attitude of superiority regarding it. It is the day of the agnostic and the dissenter.

Yet it would seem that reflection ought to bring a more sympathetic view of the situation. It is true that Christianity has been in the world for nearly two thousand years, but two thousand years is a very short time in the total ranges of history. We are beginning to understand how young our world actually is, and how long it takes for an ideal like that of Christianity to permeate the social order.

We have spoken easily of our Christian civilization. Of course we had in mind our material prosperity and our mastery of the conveniences of life, slightly influenced by the teachings of Jesus. We thought this order of living would stand the test of experience, and that we have passed forever from the swaddling bands of barbarism and ignorance.

It appears that we were mistaken. Much slower are the processes of growth than was supposed. Christianity is not on trial in the present crisis. It has had but little chance. It is humanity itself that is on trial, and the issue proves how shallow is its culture and how superficial its Christianity.

The Church of God must settle itself to a much longer and more serious campaign of education and discipline in the light of this trying experience. The forces of righteousness must take their new positions and dig themselves in for a long and serious struggle.

Union Churches

THE CHURCH AT TOPPENISH, WASHINGTON.

The following is a synopsis of the agreement entered into by the Congregationalists and the Disciples in the formation of "The Christian-Congregational Church of Toppenish, Washington." The Christian church was the owner of a church building, and the Congregational church was about to erect a church on a lot they had purchased. They felt that harmonious co-operation would be of advantage, and the two churches united as the Christian-Congregational church. A board of five deacons elected by the vote of the united church, became the business executive head of the organization, and the spiritual leadership was intrusted to the minister and the board of six elders chosen from the two groups. Satisfactory arrangements were made regarding the church property, and the church has been in active enjoyment of this plan for the past two years. The following letter gives a hint of the present situation:

"It is the most satisfactory arrangement I know of. The work is in a prosperous condition under the pastorate of Rev. Arthur House. The chief hindrances to such a work are ignorance and prejudice. The communions are ignorant of each other's character and methods of work. My fellowship with the Congregational people has been a very pleasant one, and there is no logical reason why the two bodies should not work and worship together, especially in mission fields.

In Enterprize, Ore.

Disciples, Methodists and Presbyterians federated here three years ago, and are getting along nicely. I am just beginning my third year with them. We have about three hundred members, Bible-school, two hundred and twenty-five; Junior Endeavor, ninety; Senior, sixty.

All departments of the work out of debt. Minister gets check first of every month. Are talking new and enlarged church.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Professor Rauschenbusch Visits Chicago.

Professor Rauschenbusch is a quiet speaker, but his appearance in any circle is like the introduction of a stick of dynamite. His thought processes are revolutionary and intensely stimulating. He dares much, as when he indicted his German friends for their drinking habits. He spoke at the Sunday Evening Club in Chicago, to a large audience March 19 on "The Social Principles of Jesus."

Lutherans Building in Chicago.

Seven new Lutheran buildings will be constructed in Chicago this year, most of them to be large and imposing in size. The General Synod Lutherans have been especially well-organized and aware of the city movements. Their churches operate in English and are taking over the children of foreign-speaking Lutherans.

The Sensation in City Churches.

Sensational methods have been somewhat in abeyance in city churches in recent years, but as war conditions seem to be reviving many forgotten modes of religious thought and work, it is interesting to note that the sensational is coming to the fore again. A Baptist church in Chicago, where Rev. Johnston Myers preaches, has installed a wireless outfit at the church and has the text telegraphed in from the outside, after which the preaching begins. The South Park Methodist churches gave away a thousand loaves of bread on a recent Sunday evening when Dan Batey spoke there.

President Wilson Interested in Old Preachers.

President Wilson received a deputation of Methodist preachers recently, and conversed with great interest with Rev. J. T. Bradner Smith, editor of the Veteran Preacher, which is the exponent of the cause of ministerial pensions. The President has given the Methodists warm commendation in their efforts to raise fifteen millions for their aged ministers.

Preacher Wants New World.

Rev. Charles A. Eaton, of New York, has been saying we would have a new world after the European war. He has urged that America develop a type of "preparedness" for the opportunities arising in the spiritual condition of the world after the great war. This has so impressed his congregation that they have relieved him of all pastoral responsibility for a time while he has leisure to work out his ideas of a program for the church.

Sunday-schools in Chicago Grow.

Recent statistics from the Sunday-schools of greater Chicago show growth again, after the wave of reaction of a year or two ago. There are 955 Sunday-schools in the territory and they report 6,527 scholars added to the membership of the church. The increase in the total enrolment was over seven thousand pupils. The Cook County Sunday-school Association has just completed a financial canvass of their territory. Chicago is the leading Sunday-school city of the world in point of numbers.

Passing of Historic Church.

The tendency with down-town churches is well illustrated by the recent action of Shawmut Congregational church of Boston. This church has voted to disband and to sell its property and use the proceeds for city mission work in Boston. The church has been powerful at one time as is seen by the fact that it has given a total of $100,000 to the city missionary society. It has been served by such eminent men as Doctors W. E. Griffis, W. E. Barton and W. T. McElveen.

Methodist Preacher Changes Denomination.

The Methodist Episcopal church, South, still has a four year limit for the pastorates in that denomination. In consequence Dr. Richard Wilkinson, of Richmond, a very noted member of the Virginia conference, has resigned to enter another denomination and to preach for a smaller church. He insists that a man cannot do his right work in the city on a four year pastorate and has declared that being moved without his consent is an affront to his manhood.

Social Service Leader Ill.

Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, secretary of the Congregational Social Service Commission, has been ill with typhoid but is now rapidly recovering. He is going to Biloxi, Miss., where he will remain until he is able to resume work.

"Billy" Sunday for Vice Segregation?

Billy Sunday has recently closed evangelistic meetings in Syracuse, New York. His copyrighted speech on "Amusements" was in the hands of the newspaper men of the city when it was observed by Rev. Frederick W. Betts the Universalist pastor, that it defended vice segregation. The Rev. Mr. Betts called the attention of the public to the position in a widely circulated criticism. It was learned on investigation that the offensive paragraph was in the proof sheets furnished the newspaper men, and had been used in other cities, but had not been spoken of in Syracuse. The incident will probably help Billy Sunday on to a more modern conception of our social problems, which is a much needed improvement in his preaching.

Lenten Period Given Special Observance.

Chicago evangelical churches are observing Lent with more unanimity than usual this year. The Federation Council of Churches has arranged to ask each church to hold a series of evangelistic meetings with its own forces sometime before Easter. April 2 was set to be observed as Go-to-Church Sunday. Noon meetings will be held in down-town theaters and in other ways the evangelical churches will make the period one of intense activity and eager interest.

Rev. B. Fay Mills in Chicago.

Rev. B. Fay Mills, who a year ago renounced Unitarianism and other "liberal" ways of thought and joined the Presbyterian church, has been evangelizing with great success for the group of churches in Rogers Park, Chicago. He was to begin another series of meetings for the south town churches of Evanston, March 28. Great audiences are waiting on his ministry, and many conversions are being reported.

Protestant Episcopalians Protest

The growing Catholic movement in the Protestant Episcopal church, and its more aggressive attitude recently, has brought the outspoken Protestants of the communion into a fellowship which met in Philadelphia recently. They have set forth a statement of belief which omits the apostolic succession and the sacerdotal character of the Christian ministry. As against the sacerdotal character of the ministry, the organization strongly asserts the priesthood of believers. The Protestant element had been challenged to issue this statement, and now that it is published, the theological war is on in the denomination which has been imminent for a long time. The text of the pronouncement is as follows:

"First, we assert, therefore, our allegiance to the following principles:

"1. The sufficiency of one sacrifice of Christ, and his sole mediatorship with God.

"2. The sacred right of an individual soul to an immediate approach to God in Christ.

"3. The supremacy of the enlightened conscience in the individual life as the final court of appeal.

"4. The supremacy of Holy Scripture as the test and warrant of Christian doctrine.

"Secondly. We affirm our loyalty to the following truths, which are clearly indicated in the formularies of the Church:

"1. The sacraments as the two alone ordained by Christ himself.

"2. The presence of Christ in the life of humanity, realized in experience, and most tenderly realized, by faith, in the feast of his own appointment.

"3. The continuity of the ministry by an historic method as a fact of signal value of authority, and independent of any theories that may be imposed upon it.

"Thirdly. In the face of the present demand, openly expressed by bishops and others, that our church declare herself that there may be no mistake in her position, we affirm:

"1. The Church has declared herself on these points, historically, specifically, and unequivocally.

"2. This Church's unique conception of comprehensiveness cannot be nullified by the effort to include what she has definitely excluded.

"3. This Church has made confident declaration of her position as a result of her belief in the guidance of the Holy Spirit and as a consequence of the characteristic use of sound learning."

PETER AND CORNELIUS.

Lesson for April 16.

Golden Texts: There is no distinction between Jew and Greek; for the same Lord is Lord of all, and is rich unto all that call upon him. Romans 10:12.

Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness, is acceptable to him. Acts 10:34, 35.

Lesson Acts 10: 1-48. Verses 1-16 printed. Memorize verses 13-15, 44, 45.

(1) Now there was a certain man in Cæsarea, Cornelius by name, a centurion of the band called the Italian band, (2) a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, who gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always. (3) He saw in a vision openly, as it were about the ninth hour of the day, an angel of God coming in unto him, and saying to him, Cornelius. (4) And he, fastening his eyes upon him, and being affrighted, said, What is it, Lord? And he said unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are gone up for a memorial before God. (5) And now send men to Joppa, and fetch one Simon, who is surnamed Peter: (6) he lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea side. (7) And when the angel that spake unto him was departed, he called two of his household-servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited on him continually; (8) and having rehearsed all things unto them, he sent them to Joppa.

(9) Now on the morrow, as they were on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, Peter went up upon the housetop to pray, about the sixth hour: (10) and he became hungry, and desired to eat: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance: (11) and he beholdeth the heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending, as it were a great sheet, let down by four corners upon the earth: (12) wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts and creeping things of the earth and birds of the heaven. (13) And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill and eat. (13) But Peter said, Not so, Lord, for I have never eaten anything that is common and unclean. (15) And a voice came unto him again the second time, What God hath cleansed, make not thou common. (16) And this was done thrice: and straightway the vessel was received up into heaven.

Verse by Verse.

1. The band. A cohort of Roman soldiers. —Italian. Soldiers recruited from Italy rather than natives of the country.

2. A devout man. The special type of devotion belonging to a Gentile worshiper.—One that feared God. He accepted the belief in the "One True God."—With all his house. His own family and possibly some of his special servants.

3. A vision. A manifestation of God so that it was clearly perceptible to the inner sense of a pious man.—Ninth hour. The hour of prayer. Three in the afternoon.—An angel. Angels are messengers who come in all sorts of ways and times.

4. Fastening his eyes upon him. The expression denotes fixed attention.—Are gone up. Like the smoke of sacrifice.—For a memorial. They were a reminder of Cornelius. Served to call him to mind.

5. Send men to Joppa. Peter was in Joppa and Cornelius was in Caesarea.—Who is surnamed Peter. Was not to be confused with Simon, the tanner.

6. Simon a tanner. It may have been that Simon lived by the sea because of his business. Plenty of water being necessary.

7. Household servants. Domestic servants, probably slaves.—Devout soldier. One who was religious.

8. Rehearsed. He told the story of the vision to the servants he was about to send to Joppa for Peter.

9. They. The servants and the soldier. —The sixth hour. Noon, the second hour of prayer. It was the Jewish custom of worship to go to the house-top three times a day.

10. He became hungry. He probably had not broken his fast.—Would have eaten. The word is rendered taste oftener than eat in the New Testament.—A trance. An extraordinary emotion, or elevation of spirit. The word is the same as our word ecstasy.

11. Beholdeth the heaven opened. Rapt contemplation while the vison lasted.—A certain vessel. A receptacle resembling a great sheet. Originally, fine linen; but later a sail-cloth or sail. Common in the life of a fisherman.

12. All manner of four-footed beasts. Clean and unclean according to the law, without exception. Variety is the point of the wise and not numbers.

13. Kill and eat. Religious sentiment at this point was high among the Jews. It was a sin to eat unclean animals. To kill and eat without regard to clean or unclean was repulsive to Peter.

14. Not so. The force of the words is more nearly expressed by our words "by no means."—Common. Unholy. The opposite to that selected and declared fit for food.—Unclean. For the meaning of this word consult Lev. 11th chapter.

15. Make not thou common. Do not profane it by regarding and calling it common. "To the pure all things are pure."

16. This was done thrice. To make the lesson more impressive. The vision disappeared and Peter awoke with a new way of looking at the creation of God.

TEST QUESTIONS.

1. Name the good things recorded about Cornelius.
2. What was the law regarding "clean and unclean animals?"
3. What is a trance?
4. What did Cornelius receive from the angel?
5. What lesson did Peter learn from the vision?
6. Why did Peter let them be baptized?
7. What kind of a city was Caesarea?
8. Why is Simon always referred to as "Simon, the tanner?"
9. What were the housetops of eastern houses used for?
10. Why does Peter explain his presence?
11. How does this influence the church?
12. Is there any need of Peter's vision today?
13. What hours are the 3rd, 6th, and 9th?
14. Why did Cornelius fall at the feet of Peter?
15. What should truth learned lead to?

Racial and Religious Prejudice

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

An English clergyman once said, "When I mention religion, I mean the Christian religion, and not only the Christian religion, but the Protestant religion, and not only the Protestant religion, but the church of England." This easy-going cleric expressed what is in the minds of the majority of people when the word "religion" is used. They mean their particular church. This is the measure of Peter's religious conception before the vision. He climbed upon the roof a narrow Jew, he came down a missionary to the Gentiles. Had not this house-top experience come to Peter he would have stopped growing as a religious leader. Like a good many men he addressed his congregations as men and brethren, but the emphasis was on the brethren and not on the men. He was strong, narrow and combative, as most narrow people are, before the new light breaks in upon them. He was anxious about the kingdom, but he wanted it to be filled with his kind of people. He was, therefore, unwilling to soil it with any unclean Gentile. While at prayer a great awakening came, his view of life changed and now he is willing to baptize an Italian convert whom a few hours before he would have ruled out of the kingdom as an uncircumcised heathen. While the mote is in our brother's eye it will be very difficult to get it out, while the beam is in our eye. There are many of our very best church men who have never gone through the experience that Peter enjoyed on the housetop. Men who could be nothing more than sectarians because the end of religion for them is the church. It is an end in itself rather than the organization to point men to Jesus. These men center all the good things in their institution and freely sign all others to outer darkness. Once, we are told, Spain stamped her coins the Pillars of Hercules, and took as her motto, Ne Plus Ultra —no more beyond. But when the bold spirit of Columbus passed beyond these pillars, and discovered the new world, Spain omitted the "No" and left Plus Ultra—more beyond. And that's the only motto for those who believe that God himself is moving the world and men up the long slope of history and progress. No matter how far we have come, no matter how much we have known of God and the spirit of Jesus there is still much more ahead.

Peter learned that there is no such thing as a "common man." There is no distinction between the Jew and Greek, for the same Lord is Lord of all. The world is slow learning this lesson. Multitudes of men and women in all walks of life have this lesson to learn for they are just as prejudiced as Peter. They are unwilling to give the right hand of fellowship to large portions of the people of this world. We call them foreigners even though they have been born on American soil, unmindful of the fact that our parents, many of them, came across the great water just a very few years before.

We need the vision Peter had to prepare us to meet these people helpfully. We must know them in order to be able to help them in the new environment. The ends of the earth are coming to America. Floods of immigration are bringing us great hordes of disheartened people from northern and southern Europe, Asia, and of the islands of the sea. We must meet these people with love, not prejudice. What we teach the immigrant by precept or example, he will become. He will bequeath our virtues or our vices, not only to the next generation which will spring with virgin strength from his loins; but through thousands of invisible channels he will send these blessings, or cursings to the ends of the earth. The issue of the kingdom of God as well as our nation depends upon receiving them in the light of Peter's vision.

Prove and know within your hearts that all things lovely and righteous are possible for those who believe in their possibility, and who determine that, for their part they will make every day's work contribute to them.—Ruskin.

One of Dr. Campbell Morgan's recent stories related to a poverty-stricken fishwife who was found on Christmas Day eating a Christmas dinner which consisted of a piece of bread and a toasted herring. Her visitor said something to her of the poverty of the fare, and the old woman, with face aglow, replied: "Poor fare? Dear heart, don't you see the Lord has laid tribute on sea and land to feed me this blessed Christmas Day?"

Disciples Table Talk

Claude E. Hill Goes to First Church, Chattanooga.

The congregation at First church, Chattanooga, Tenn., unanimously ratified the selection of Claude E. Hill by the pastoral committee for the work at First. Mr. Hill is national superintendent of Christian Endeavor for the Disciples and has served the Valparaiso church for several years as a most able leader. He will undertake his new work late in April. Ira M. Boswell, now of Georgetown, Ky., was formerly pastor at the Chattanooga church.

Disciple Pastor as Secretary to Sherwood Eddy.

Kirby Page, a graduate of Drake University, class of 1915, has recently become associated with Mr. George Sherwood Eddy, as private secretary. Mr. Page was the pastor of the church at Monteith, Iowa, for three years, and more recently has been pastor of the Morgan Park Christian church in Chicago, where he has been in attendance at the University of Chicago. His temporary headquarters are at 124 East 28th Street, New York City, but it is likely that he will go either into the war zone with Mr. Eddy for work among the troops and in the prisons, or to China, within a few months. Mr. Sherwood Eddy, Secretary for Asia of the International Young Men's Christian Association, is a world figure in Christian work, and is perhaps the leading evangelist in mission lands.

"Sunday Night League" at Third Church, Indianapolis.

Men who are members of Third church, Indianapolis, have taken over the Sunday evening meetings for April with the intention of popularizing the programs and attracting larger audiences. In their blunt, business way they have declared that the Sunday evening service in the churches was a "defunct institution." They believe a reorganization and the application of business methods is necessary. The new organization styles itself the "Sunday Night League." The young men's Bible-class, which is incorporated under laws of Indiana as the "Christian Men Builders," recently conducted an evening meeting as "factory night." T. W. Grafton, the pastor, joined heartily in the movement. Special announcements were distributed among the factories and other places of employment. Many of the members of the class are employed in factories and were actively in charge of the program. Fred I. Willis, former president of the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce, spoke briefly on "Religion and the Ordinary Man," and there was a short address by the pastor on "The Influence of the Shop."

Transylvania College Becomes Living Link.

The Transylvania College and the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., are now a Living-Link in the Foreign Society. They have just taken the pledges among the students and professors and their offering reached $638.42. A fine religious spirit has been shown in the enterprise.

New Kansas City Hospital Now Open.

The new hospital of the Disciples at Kansas City is now open for the reception of patients. A school will soon be opened for the training of nurses, and any young women of the church desiring this kind of training are asked to write Mrs. E. C. Koch, care of the hospital.

More Prohibition Contests.

The American Temperance Board feels that great good may be done for the cause of Prohibition by contests of various kinds. An Essay Contest has just closed and the awards will be announced in due time. A large number of papers were received at his office, reports L. E. Sellers, National Secretary. An oratorical contest of greater importance and scope is now arranged for our colleges. The plans are being carried out under the direction of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association of which Maxwell Hall is a Field Secretary. This association is a mighty factor in stirring up the temperance sentiment in nearly all the colleges and universities of the country. The funds for this College Contest now going on have been kindly provided by R. H. Stockton, of St. Louis. Mr. Stockton is a friend of temperance. He offers twenty-five dollars to each of the following colleges, and it is hoped that not only will all have the contest, but that great enthusiasm may be aroused in all the student bodies. The schools are: Bethany, Hiram, Milligan, Transylvania, Butler and Eureka Colleges and Christian, Drake, Cotner, and Texas Universities. The winning orator in each contest will receive twenty-five dollars prize money and will represent his school in the State Oratorical Contest of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association. The prize orations will become the property of the American Temperance Board.

A Gift for Phillips University.

Harry H. Rogers, one of the splendid business men of the Tulsa church, gave Phillips University $5000, to help meet the annual conditional gift of the Phillips estate. Mr. Rogers was elected as Trustee and Member of the Board of Control. He is an attorney by profession, and is active in many lines of church work.

Iowa Church is Reaching Men.

During the last four months there have been about 300 additions to the membership at Glenwood, Ia., writes H. Edgar Hall, pastor. Scores of men in all walks of life are included in the list. The church building has been enlarged to accommodate the crowds, and is to be painted and carpeted anew. The best method used to hold the men is the organization of gospel teams. These are winning conversions throughout the community. The first Sunday Mr. Hall preached at Glenwood there were 45 present in the Sunday-school. Last Sunday there were 221 without any special effort. The pastor writes that he would welcome any exchange of ideas on boys' or men's organization.

Chicago Church Statistics.

In Mr. Jordan's article on Chicago churches printed last week, the tables were made to appear senseless by typographical errors, which omitted the minus sign from the "membership gain" of six of the churches. Armitage Avenue had 20 members in 1910 and has none today, thus Mr. Jordan reported a "per cent gain" of—100 per cent. The report last week read a gain of "100 per cent." In the same way, Maywood should have shown a gain of—30 per cent; Monroe Street, —35 per cent; South Chicago, —59 per cent; West End,—46 per cent; West Pullman, —14 per cent. There was indicated in the table a net gain of .09 per cent in all churches, which was correct.

March Offering Gains.

Secretary Rains reports that there is a continual gain in the March Offering for Foreign Missions. The churches as churches gained $9,567 the first 22 days of March. The total gain on the 22 days of the month is $13,828. The Christian Endeavor Societies gained $430 of this amount. The total gains from the churches as churches on the year is $14,974. The offerings from the churches should be forwarded promptly to F. M. Rains, Secretary, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Fellowship Class at Springfield, Ill., Adds Athletic Features.

In these columns was recently reported the remarkable work being done among the young people of Springfield, Ill., through the newly organized Fellowship Class, which is the fruit of the mind and experience of Frank W. Allen, pastor there. The latest news note from this class is that an experienced Y. M. C. A. man has been employed to give free gymnastic and athletic training to the boys and young men of the church. First church has a large play room in the basement, and is well equipped for all sorts of indoor athletics. This feature of the Fellowship Movement, however, is subsidiary to the larger purpose of the organization, which is the enlistment of youth for the church and for good citizenship. The young people's society of First church has been increased in numbers from fifteen to over two hundred. Any pastor who has the problem of his young people still unsolved would do well to write Mr. Allen for information concerning this promising movement.

Bloomington, Ill., Pastor Discusses "The Battle Cry of Peace"

In his address at First church, Bloomington, Ill., on "The Movies—Are They a Menace?" Edgar DeWitt Jones took occasion, before a crowded auditorium, to give his opinion of "The Battle Cry of Peace," recently shown in Bloomington. Mr. Jones' discussion of the motion pictures was, as a whole, constructive but pointed in criticism of certain obvious weaknesses of the average film of today. With reference to the use of the motion pictures as a vehicle for the shaping of public sentiment, he paid his respects to "The Battle Cry of Peace," as follows: "In company with many other of Bloomington's citizens I saw Friday evening the much advertised 'Battle Cry of Peace.' I was greatly disappointed. To me it was must unconvincing. I think I can sum up my impressions of it under four headings: 1. The pictures are manifestly unfair. In an effort to show the need of a greatly augmented army and navy our small but efficient army is grossly maligned, the pitiful attempt of our soldiers to defend New York is a reflection upon the personnel of our army. They were made to act like a crowd of untrained boobies. 2. The pictures in places are laughably absurd. For example: The invading army line up groups of men along the side of a street to be shot for supposedly firing from a residence on the troops. Despite the fact that each one of the enemy is armed with a rifle, a machine gun is brought up and several volleys fired at the group. One wonders if this is not a new use for the machine gun. Still more surprisingly, later on, one of the men mown down by the machine gun is discovered to be alive, a most miraculous occurrence, indeed. 3. The caricaturing of pacifists is a blunder and is wretchedly poor taste. There are good men on both sides of this question, but the type of pacifists shown on 'The Battle Cry of Peace" films is a mollycoddle and sissified make-up sort of character. Any one who knows Hamilton Holt, Norman Angell, William J. Bryan, David Starr Jordan, Henry Ford, and our own David Felmley, knows that they are not that type of character. The playing by the orchestra of 'Sweet Peace, the Gift of God's Love,' while the sissified peace meeting was in session was sacrilegious. 4. The entire film is so evidently a propaganda that it defeats its very purpose. The average man is for fair play and a square deal, and 'The Battle Cry of Peace' is unfair, absurd, irreverent, unpatriotic, and for the greater part piffle."

St. Louis First Church Pastor Leads In Vice Fight.

As chairman of the Legislative Committee of the Ministerial Alliance of St. Louis, which made an investigation of moral conditions in that city recently, John L. Brandt, of First church, makes the following report of the committee's findings: In cafes liquor is sold to women and children under age. Cafes adjoin saloons and do bigger business than the saloons. Degenerate dances are permitted in these cafes. In dance halls dances are conducted until almost dawn Sundays and no introductions are required. Club rooms operate on Sunday and serve great quantities of liquor. Many saloons are open on Sunday and have secret side entrances. Some saloons do more business on Sunday than on week days. Gambling is allowed in saloons, clubs and rooming houses and large sums are lost.

New Members of California Church Pay Old Debt.

Bruce Brown, evangelist, reports that at the close of his recent meetings at Arlington, Cal., when he raised the debt which the church had been carrying for years, the members enlisted during the present revival paid two-thirds of this amount. Many men were reached who had long been sought. S. D. Perkinson ministers at Arlington. Mr. Brown is now at Shorb Ave., Los Angeles, with F. W. Jackson.

Ohio Pastor Addresses Union Meeting.

Galen L. Rose, of Cimarron, Kansas, addressed a union meeting in the Methodist church on the evening of March 12. The audience was the largest that has gathered to hear a local preacher in years. The Cimarron church is entering upon an "Each One Win One" campaign leading up to two weeks of decision services just preceding Easter. The work is in good shape, with interest increasing.

—A brotherhood has been organized at Washington, Ia.

—East End church, Pittsburg, John R. Ewers, minister, will begin the reconstruction of its building, May 1. About $60,000 will be expended in this work. The new plans provide a Bible-school house of three stories and a roomy gymnasium. Institutional work of various kinds will be undertaken with the new equipment.

Why a Great Easter Offering is Needed

1. A Great Beginning. We have made a creditable beginning in this Christlike ministry. The past justifies the public and the Christ in expecting that we will maintain our record. They must not be disappointed.

2. A Great Family. Under the blessing of God we have been permitted to bring together a great family of widows, orphans and the aged, numbering about six hundred. These helpless, homeless wards depend upon us. We dare not, we will not turn them out to perish.

One of the helpless ones ministered to by the National Benevolent Association.

3. A Great Demand. Never in the history of the association was there such a demand for service. The cry of distress of the helpless American victims of the European war is heard constantly outside our doors.

4. Easter Our One Day. Easter in the Bible schools is the one day in all the year devoted to this sweet and tender ministry. If the Easter offering fails, our homes fail, and the widow and the orphan will cry in vain for us to help.

5. An Empty Treasury. These Homes are all full. Our treasury is empty. Our credit is taxed. Others cry for aid. God awaits our answer.

6. The Will of Christ. It is the will of Christ that the hungry should be fed and the naked clothed. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Donations of foodstuff, clothing, etc., may be sent direct to the Home nearest you for which they are adapted.

Do not deny your school the privilege of fellowship in this worthy ministry. An offering for benevolence will bring a blessing to your church and increase its influence for good in the community in which it is located. The association has many calls for service that it can not render because of lack of funds, and an increased Easter offering will help it to render more abundant service than it has been able to render in the past.

Remember always, to make all checks, drafts, and money orders payable to Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, and send all offerings to The National Benevolent Association, 2955 N. Euclid Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

—The men's class at High Street, Akron O., taught by L. N. D. Wells, is in contest with the entire North Hill school. Over 500 were present in this great class on a recent Sunday.

—D. D. Burt, pastor at Mt. Vernon, Ill., died in his home town after an illness of nine weeks. J. F. Rosboro conducted the funeral ceremonies. The remains were taken to Bellefontaine, O., Mr. Burt's former home.

—The brotherhood at Central church, Anderson, Ind., is planning for a series of baseball games this season. The city mayor has been appointed to co-operate with the pastor, J. W. Underwood, in this campaign. Mr. Underwood was captain of his team while in college.

—The congregation at Galveston, Tex., led by the pastor, J. B. Holmes, and the present evangelist, J. H. O. Smith, has taken possession of the old "Artillery Hall," which will now be used by the congregation as regular quarters.

—Governor Capper, of Kansas, made the address and laid the corner stone of the new West Side church, Topeka.

—First church, Denton, Tex., will expend $15,000 remodeling its building.

—New living link churches are: Beaumont, Tex.; Downey Avenue, Indianapolis; Lakewood, Cleveland, O.; Gainesville, Tex. But these are only a few of them.

—Miss Kate V. Johnson has been in the service of the Foreign Society longer than any other living missionary. She is supported in her work in Japan by the San Diego, Cal., church.

—Including personal gifts from members of Arcola, Ill., congregation, that church gave for missions and benevolences last year $1,351. Audiences have been greatly increased recently, and 26 persons have been added to the membership. The pastor, B. H. Bruner, is recovering from a severe illness.

—The congregation at Enid, led by the pastor, A. J. Smith, is in a great church building campaign. The old building was lost by fire January 1.

—Great enthusiasm has been aroused in the Southwest by the news that I. McCash had been called to the presidency of Phillips University, at Enid, Okla.

—The Christian Endeavor Society at Chester, W. Va., has assumed the support of one of the orphan boys at Damoh, Ind., through the Foreign Society. This is a result of Endeavor Day.

—James J. Hill, of railroad fame, offered to give Eugene Bible University, located at Eugene, Ore., $50,000 on condition that the school raise its present endowment to $200,000. The time limit is May 31, and there is about $50,000 yet to be raised. E. C. Sanderson, the president of the school, is making a supreme effort in behalf of this enterprise.

—V. W. Blair, pastor at Eureka, Ill., is preaching a series of sermons on the following themes: "Abounding Builders," "Paul's Building Zeal," "Peter's Spiritual House," "John's Ideal Church," "Jesus, the Supreme Architect." Great interest is being manifested in these "building" addresses.

—There are six schools of Mexicans among the Disciples of Christ in Texas, enrolling 250 pupils.

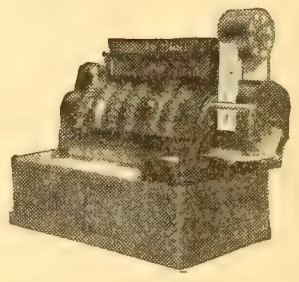
—The Endeavorers at Mansfield, O., are supporting an evangelist in China, also assisting in the orphanage work in Damoh, India.

—Miss Eva Lemert, expert in the work of constructive religious education, will lead First church, Springfield, Ill., in a Bible-school campaign during April and May.

—A significant feature of the campaign of the Men and Millions leaders at Des Moines was the appeal of R. H. Miller to the young women of Drake for service in the mission field. Many volunteers were secured by the appeal.

—Central church, Sherman, Tex., is to spend about $10,000 in equipping its building for Bible-school purposes.

—A. J. Bush and wife, of Dallas, Tex., recently celebrated the fortieth anniversary of their marriage. Mr. Bush is the only minister now living who was preaching in Texas when he arrived in the state as a pioneer preacher of the Gospel forty-one years ago.



—The Christian Visitor, the paper published by Graham Frank for the Liberty, Mo., church has found itself in controversy with the Christian Scientists as a result of a recent editorial regarding that movement.

—The Christian Call, published by First church, Atlanta, Ga., has the following statement of purpose printed on its editorial page each week: "This paper strives to help its readers to abandon prejudices and all those things which tend to bigotry; and to develop in them the open mind, the broad outlook and the habit and passion of service." L. O. Bricker leads at First church.

—The congregation at Fort Worth, Tex., First church, refuses to release its pastor, L. D. Anderson, for service as president of Texas Christian University. The leaders hold that his loss would imperil the elaborate plans made for the promotion of the work at First church.

A Great National Public Utility

That concerns all merchants and all people

THE original Cash Register rang a bell, indicated and recorded the amount of the purchase. It benefited the merchant only.

In a third of a century this old model has developed into a Cash Register that directly benefits every man, woman and child who spends money in a store.

This new Cash Register equally concerns every merchant and clerk, every banker and wholesaler in this land.

It furnishes every customer with a receipt or sales slip.

It prints on this the amount paid or charged.

On this is also printed the date of the sale and who made it.

It forces a duplicate, printed record for the merchant.

It prevents disputes over charges and bills paid.

It saves shopper's time.

It gives the merchant all his profits. It gives him more money for his family.

It promotes more and quicker sales.

It protects each clerk against making errors and against the mistakes of others.

It rewards the diligent clerk by telling his employer which one makes the largest number of sales and which one gets the greatest amount of business.

It assures the banker additional security for the money he loans the merchant.

It gives the wholesaler additional assurance that the merchant will have money to pay his bills.

It furnishes the banker and the wholesaler mechanical evidence that the merchant's statement of his business is correct.

It is a business necessity.

MERCHANTS!! We have new 1916 models that give this perfect service. Write us today or see our agent in your city and learn how you can secure one of these public service machines.

"The Least of These-My Brethren-Unto Me"

The Churches are maintaining through the National Benevolent Association Four Homes for Aged Disciples of Christ.

WHO ARE AIDED: Aged, indigent members of Christian Churches without funds for self-support, with friends able and willing to support them, unable to support themselves by their own efforts.

THE PURPOSE: To save the Church from discredit and Christ from pain by saving his worthy disciples from poverty and public charity.

THE PRESENT NEED: In Jacksonville, Ill., East Aurora, N. Y., Dallas, Texas, and Walla Walla, Wash., a family of ninety-three are confidently dependent upon their brethren for the common comforts of life. Among these are many noted , not only for their piety, but for conspicuous talent and service as well. We have no more worthy in our midst than these. It is an honor to the church that she is caring for them. No service will enrich the church more greatly than this. These four homes are meeting only a part of the need. Many are on the waiting list. Brethren, let us not allow them to wait in vain.

FOR JESUS' SAKE: "I was hungry and ye gave me meat"—for "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did in unto me." These and FIVE HUNDRED CHILDREN depend upon the EASTER OFFERING, APRIL 23. Send to the

are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, Ph..D.

Edgar De Witt Jones, of First Church, Bloomington, Ill., says of this book: "The Moral Leaders of Israel is a most practical and inspiring volume. I like its concise arrangement for groups or classes who are studying the Holy Scriptures. It is really remarkable how much information concerning the prophets and their times is brought within two hundred pages without any semblance of crowding. The appendices are particularly valuable. All in all, I bespeak a wide use for this volume and the one which is to follow."

The Resurrection Idea

THE HOPES CHERISHED BY PRIMITIVE PEOPLE REGARDING THE SURVIVAL OF DEATH NEARLY ALWAYS, OF NECESSITY, TOOK THE FORM OF RECOVERY FROM THE DUST. THERE WAS NO OTHER MANNER IN WHICH THE CONCEPTION OF A FUTURE LIFE COULD TAKE THE FORM OF REALITY IN THE IMAGINATION. THIS VIEW OF THE LIFE TO COME, WHATEVER MAY BE SAID OF IMMORTALITY IN GENERAL, HAS CEASED TO HAVE SIGNIFICANCE FOR THE MODERN WORLD.

To early man the body was the indispensable clothing of the soul. It was impossible to conceive of any form of post-mortem activity in which the body did not have part. For this reason, some nations took very great care to preserve the body intact after death. The Egyptians brought the science of embalming to a high state of perfection. Today, after millenniums of time, the physical forms of men and women are so well preserved that they show the fidelity of their pictured likenesses on the monuments. All classes shared the belief that the welfare of the soul in the future life depended on the preservation and regaining of the body.

Other nations did not go so far, probably because they were unable to copy the highly technical method of sepulture. But they carried out the theory as well as they could. The Hebrews illustrate the common practice in this regard. They made no other disposition of the body than burial. This was the custom long before any thought of survival dawned on their minds. A man was gathered to his fathers, in the ancestral burial place. Any other treatment of the dead was deemed dishonoring. A bitter reproach was hurled by Amos against the Moabites because they had burned the corpse of a king of Edom slain in battle. And though burnings are mentioned in connection with the funerals of the kings of Judah, they were never cremations, but the ceremonial burning of spice-wood in honor of the dead.

When, therefore, the conception of life after death came slowly into the Hebrew consciousness in the third and second centuries before Christ, it necessarily took on the form of a resurrection, a recovery of the flesh from the grave. It may have been inspired as to its form by the fact that the dead appeared in dreams in the familiar appearances of life. But quite apart from this, there was simply no other manner in which the idea could take shape in Hebrew minds. The soul required evermore a body if it was to be alive and efficient. And thus the doctrine of the resurrection, the return of the flesh from the grave, was the essential expression of the growing Hebrew faith in eternal life.

It was in this manner that the Old Testament writers thought of it, when once the light became sufficient for them to give it hospitality. Ezekiel had prophesied of a national resurrection in the classic vision of the valley of bones. Later voices carried over the idea into the realm of individual life, as has been pointed out in an earlier section. Phariseeism took up this natural and easy form of the belief and made it a doctrine. It passed into the Christian community in the same guise. In the teachings of the Master and of Paul it is not otherwise. Did Jesus himself accept the Semitic view of bodily survival or reorganization, or did he merely employ it because there were no other garments in which he could clothe the belief in the life eternal?

Leaving for a moment the further consideration of this point, it is of interest to note the evidences of Paul's struggle with the problem. At the first there seems to have been no difficulty. The resurrection of Jesus was his chief apologetic to the world. He preached it everywhere, and with passion. Then to his surprise, the men of Athens, in no manner unacquainted with nor inhospitable to the idea of immortality, laughed at him when he talked of the resurrection of the body. That notion of the rising of the flesh from the grave was outside the circle of their tolerance. Was that the reason why the apostle crossed to Corinth, determined, as he later wrote to his new disciples, to know nothing else among them save Jesus Christ and him crucified? It would seem that the death of the Lord takes precedence henceforth of any other truth in his regard.

And in that same First Epistle to the Corinthians, in the chapter that has become classic in every ritual for the dead, he struggles to put his luminous and unquenchable faith in the life eternal into some form more convincing than the customary Jewish dialectic afforded. Christ rose from the dead. That conviction is basic. And all who bear his name are to arise. But the fleshly resurrection must not be pressed. Already on the horizon of a severely Jewish conception of eschatology there has appeared a broader vision of the great theme of immortality. It cannot be the same body that comes back. All nature teaches that. But still in the Jewish-Christian vocabulary there is no other method of expressing the mighty truth. It is the conflict of the Jewish psychology and speech with a world conception for which they are no longer adequate. And when at last Paul faces his own personal problem and feels that the issue of a present peril is indecisive, he tells the Philippian friends that if he had his choice, he would depart at once and be with Christ. Here all consideration of the grave and a physical resurrection have ceased to obtrude, and he feels the certainty of death's release into the immediate realization of the life that is life indeed.

And as to the Savior's resurrection? The Gospel records make it very plain that Jesus expected to overcome the sharpness of death and convince his friends that he could not be holden of it. All the utterances of the Lord are filled with a calm and quiet confidence upon this theme. No one who has the slightest respect for the explicit words of the Master can doubt that he believed he was to manifest himself to the disciples after his death. If human testimony can be trusted, these first witnesses of his avouch that fact.

Furthermore, no doubt can be entertained as to the entire and complete assurance of the group of Jesus' friends that he did actually accomplish this promised return. Not one of them believed it possible, and yet with one voice they went forth into the world to bear witness to that truth. From the most depressed and despairing of mankind, they suddenly became the most confident and irrepressible.

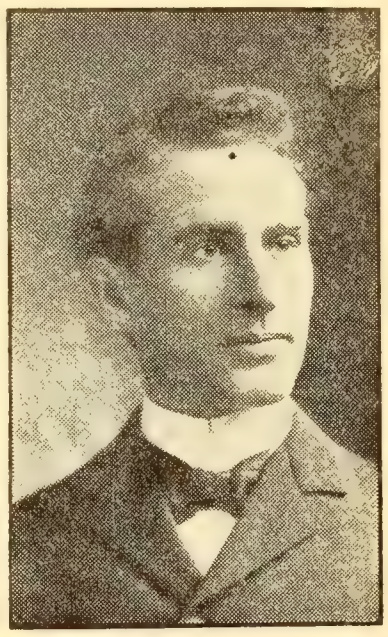
Overchurching Rural Communities

An address delivered at the recent national conference on the Rural Church at Columbus, Ohio, and rewritten for The Christian Century.

BY ALVA W. TAYLOR

THE rational approach to the rural church problem is through a thorough-going survey of the rural church situation and an analysis of the field and the forces at work. Sufficient surveys have thus far been made to indicate certain inescapable facts regarding the duplication of church efforts in the average rural community. Those who survey the whole field are agreed regarding the necessity of making the rural church a community affair; they are also agreed that there are certain fundamental weaknesses in the present situation.



No city church would expect to grow and prosper without a located pastor. Few country churches are found to possess them, and the farmer Christian is in no wise different in his spiritual needs, nor are his churches in any wise different in their organic needs, from those of the city; yet the rural church is too small to support a settled pastor. Again it has been found that the prosperity of the rural church is in direct ratio to the number of its services and the size of its membership; but the average rural church has preaching only once per month by a preacher, who gives it little, if any, pastoral attention, and its membership runs from sixty to eighty souls.

CONDITIONS IN A MISSOURI COUNTY.

So small a church is unable to support a resident pastor or to even support a man who will give some time to pastoral work; thus without a shepherd or an organizer their life is limited to that of worship and whatever organization may be effected by unled local workers. The neighboring town church has four or five times the membership, and is thus able to support a resident pastor, services every Sunday, have oversight, permanent organizations, leadership, a training of the workers, a shepherding of the flock, and through them all a chance to succeed.

Then the impressiveness of its audiences, the formidableness and energy of its organization, the constant attention of its pastor and the very success with which its activities are carried on begets greater success. Because it does things it is able to enlist both men and money. Activity begets greater activity and enlists both patronage and financial support. In the country small congregations beget small congregations, listless activities beget listlessness; occasional services are unable to inspire activity; little to pay for makes small challenge to generosity.

In a church survey made of Boone County, Missouri, the home of the state university, 67 rural churches were found, or one to every 46 rural families in the county. Their average membership is about 80. Only one of them had a resident pastor and he preached for three other churches at greater or lesser distances. On the first of January, this year, not one of them afforded preaching more than once each month and many of them not so often. Almost one-half of them have no Sunday-schools, and of those who have only a few keep their schools alive during the winter months. Few of them have any sort of missionary or young people's organizations. The average pastor's salary is about $200, and the budget for the entire work of the church is less than $250. There is not a single one of these churches that does not have from two to seven others within four miles of its church yard. What is true of this county is true of multitudinous others; overchurching may not be so bad in many others, but it is of like type in practically all other farming counties, and thus the situation may be said to be fairly characteristic.

Now the most primary analysis of this situation in the light of the necessities of church efficiency is convincing. There are simply too many churches for any of them to be efficient.

THE FUTURE OF THE RURAL CHURCH.

This over-churched condition is a survival from the pioneer days. In earlier days the sectarian shibboleths rallied people. When the country was new the pioneer preacher came to establish churches of his peculiar creedal persuasion. The question was not, has this new community a church that preaches Christ, but has it a church of this or that persuasion preaching Christ; thus the various small congregations were founded side by side. In many cases the schools of these communities are taking on a modern spirit; agriculture is catching the teaching of science; the business life of the farm is being organized upon an efficiency basis; all the other pioneer elements of community life are giving way to the better and more modern regime, but the church remains as a survival of the pioneer time. It has the same insularity and lack of missionary spirit and retains the old method of living upon preaching alone.

There is danger lest the growing community spirit pass the church by. Many workers in the agricultural and rural field have already come to regard the country church as a negligible factor in their efforts to communize rural life and found it upon a co-operative basis. The old sectarian shibboleths are failing to rally the younger generation and there is danger lest in the slow decadence of the rural congregation religion itself shall suffer. Christianity would thrive much better in the rural community with one-fourth the present number of churches. The question as to which should die will not be easily settled. None will be willing to become a vicarious sacrifice to the larger religious life of the community and it is possible that in many places they will all die together through each struggling to retain its life; thus in the struggle of churches that have ceased to function there is grave danger to religion in the community.

IS THE CHURCH NEGLIGIBLE?

One way out is suggested by those who have faith that a movement can be inaugurated at the top and the various denominations brought to agree on a reciprocity of interest through an exchange of membership in various fields, i. e., one communion agrees to withdraw from one field and have its communicants unite with a neighboring church while the other communion makes a like transfer in another field. There are many difficulties in the way of this solution; the more dogmatically inclined denominations will refuse to enter such a reciprocal arrangement; the more democratic and congregationally organized communions have no machinery able to accomplish it, and any attempt by conventions or supervisory agencies to accomplish it will be met with vigorous protest from the rank and file; and in most localities there will be a considerable minority that will refuse to accept such an arrangement unless it be made by the local congregations on their own initiative. The best a movement at the top can expect to do is to agitate and educate and to effect an occasional exemplary union.

"SURVIVAL OF THE FIT."

A thorough-going appreciation of the difficulties afforded by sectarian loyalty, independent polity, tradition and indifference to the gravity of the situation leads one to suspect that there will have to be a sort of a "survival of the fit" selective process. The local church that arises to the demands of the situation by adopting a thorough-going community program will gradually draw to its support all those elements in the community life that cannot be interested in the older doctrinal and individualistic program and will also win many from their conventional loyalties to the more virile life of a socialized church.

The new interest is intensely human and the old sectarian shibboleths will loose their clutch; the new program is broad and in harmony with the spirit of the age and while it sacrifices nothing true in the old it revivifies it with vision and a good neighborliness that will bring the church into the spirit of the times in which we live.

The process will be a slow one, no doubt, for institutions change slowly, but the institutions of religion must readapt themselves to the larger spirit and demands of the time or the old type of church will have to give way to a new and more plastic type that can better show forth the fraternity and brotherly-love of Christianity and bring in the kingdom of God.

What is the Matter With the Church?

BY SCOTT ANDERSON

THIS is no infrequent question in these stirring times. It is asked in perfect candor by both friends and foes of this ancient and hallowed institution.

This restless, impatient inquiry arises from the surprising fact that after nineteen centuries of church life, activity and influence, the most destructive war of the ages is upon the world. "Christendom" seems to have lapsed into savagery, great nations that erstwhile claimed to follow the star of Bethlehem are now proudly and madly seeking for themselves a "place in the sun." The church after nearly two thousand years of opportunity and effort has not only failed to prevent what threatens to be the downfall of civilization, but appears impotent in this world crisis, and unable to furnish religious assurance or spiritual guarantee that there may not be in the future a recurrence of this fearful, unprecedented tragedy. During the last decade church attendance has steadily declined, growth has not kept pace with the increase of population, but is reduced to a minimum; general interest has waned, evangelistic campaigns have been increasingly disappointing in their arousing effect on cities and communities, and in their net results to the churches.

The church once crowned kings, determined the boundaries of empires, declared war and peace, censored literature, and her ministers by virtue of their calling sat in parliaments. She has lost all that prestige and power, for which we are glad—since such prerogatives were never rightly hers and turned the church aside from her true mission—just as we are glad when a patient loses the strength which is caused by fever. But, just as the patient will sink and die if the natural vitality does not come and take its place, the church, having lost that usurped power and not having clothed herself with that which rightly belongs to her and comes as a reward of great service, is in a sinking condition and many of her warmest friends and most ardent supporters entertain grave doubts of her survival unless she has a spiritual awakening, adopts a different policy, changes her methods, catches a new vision, and makes herself indispensable to the world's peace, prosperity and progress.

HAS CHRISTIANITY BEEN TRIED?

The world has not lost faith in the Bible, Christianity is not being questioned, Jesus is not on trial, the religious instinct of man has not perished, agnosticism has not triumphed; rather, there is a growing conviction that the religion of the Christ has never been tried extensively, and only individually, and that the crying need of this age is for the application of its spirit and teachings to the social, industrial, political and international life of the whole world; that, while the church is the divinely appointed custodian and champion of this holy religion, it has ever been and is still wounded in the house of its friends—betrayed by the church of history to kings and earthly governments for worldly powers and privileges, and misrepresented by the modern church, largely by false emphasis, and provoked by current mammonism, for the patronage and support of the rich and mighty.

It is believed by many that as ancient cities of wealth and renown were covered up for centuries, only their name and fame being carried down to us by intervening generations, but are now being uncovered, explored and prized by us, just so heaven's balm for earth's wounds and sorrows has been covered up by tradition, misplaced emphasis and willful misrepresentation, and that little more than the glorious name and the sacred forms and ceremonies are in evidence and offered to the world today.

"A BADGE OF RESPECTABILITY."

But to be more explicit: Jesus insisted upon the necessity of conversion; so did the apostles and the early church, and to them it meant a complete change in heart and life, a face-about march under the white banner of heaven, an open acknowledgment of allegiance to Christ—to his teachings and program, having counted the cost of discipleship, which would probably be persecution and death. Mazzini, the Italian revolutionist, was not unlike the founder of Christianity when he said to his compatriots, "Come with me and suffer." Hence the early church was composed of twice-born men and women, who would walk through flood and flame for him for whom they had forsaken all, whose return to earth they eagerly awaited and in the glories of whose triumphant kingdom they expected to share. To be a Christian meant to them to be a new person, to have new relationships, principles, ideals and hopes. With such adherents and champions it is no wonder the primitive church went forth "conquering and to conquer," overcoming Jewish prejudice, Grecian philosophy and pagan religious, until Constantine, the ruling Caesar, trembled for his throne.

But now the stern doctrine of conversion, self-denial, renunciation of worldly ambitions and accepting the task of "turning the world upside down" and right side up—all this is thought to have belonged to the heroic age, but to be out of date and unnecessary now. Entering the kingdom in this generation is to millions merely pinning on a badge of respectability or at most taking out a policy against the evil day. With such there is no thought, intention or practice of self-sacrifice and public service such as commands the respect and admiration of mankind. Many churches are little more than social clubs, and many ministers are to their churches about what an English king is to the British empire; Christianity as represented by them is like denatured alcohol—all the 'kick" and "punch" taken out of it, insipid, harmless, of the "pink tea" quality from which people with red blood and earnest, noble purposes in life turn in disgust.

THE EMPHASIS IS MISPLACED.

The church of the twentieth century does not put the emphasis where it was placed in the first centuries. Even the old Hebrew prophets spoke of Messiah's glorious reign on the earth, when the "sword would be beaten into the plowshare, the spear into the pruning hook" and the "desert would blossom as the rose." "The voice in the wilderness" cried out, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Jesus preached all over Israel "the glad tidings of the kingdom of God." The messengers whom he sent forth brought the same good news to all. Jesus was so forceful, practical and revolutionary that his enemies said of him, "He stirreth up the people," "if you let this man go you are not Caesar's friend." The Jews were not wholly unprepared for this message, for they expected their Messiah to establish a heavenly social order, founded upon brotherhood and justice throughout the whole earth. So "The Kingdom of God" is the emphatic doctrine of the Bible, the heart of Jesus' message and the expectation of the chosen people. And while this was the clarion call of her ministry the church was a saving, irresistible, conquering force in the world.

GIVING STONES FOR BREAD.

This generation is asking for bread and organized religion gives it a stone, is famishing for an egg and is tendered a serpent. The ten commandments, the sermon on the mount and the golden rule are not insisted upon, but it is thought to suffice if they are read out of a Morocco bound Bible, in a heavenly tone, on Sunday and then left severely alone throughout the busy week. The descendants of Dives, the rich young ruler, and Simon Magus are prominent officials in our fashionable churches, dictate their policy, and padlock the lips of their ministers, so that covetousness which is idolatry goes unrebuked, speculation on nature's resources and the exploitation of labor are winked at and even praised as Christian virtues, and the fabulous fortunes thus obtained referred to as "gifts from God to his faithful servants." In the meantime the poor are admonished to "be patient, bear all things, and wear linen robes and golden slippers in the world to come."

When the church awakens from her long sleep and comes to realize that Christ came here to heavenize the earth, just as this nation set out fifteen years ago to Americanize the Philippines—sending them our flag, law, learning and religion—and comes to understand that the church is not an end to be worked for, but an instrument to be worked with in finishing the sublime task of him who said, "The spirit of the Lord is upon me, for he hath anointed me to bring glad tidings to the poor, to comfort the broken hearted, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach deliverence to the captives and to proclaim the year of Jubilee;" when the church learns that Jesus came not only to redeem all men, but all of every man—soul, body, home, society, nation, world—and gets back in line with this divine, majestic purpose, when she quits bringing up the rear and takes her rightful place at the head of the hosts of reform and reconstruction, leading individuals, society and nations toward the goal promised in Holy Writ—the "new earth in which dwelleth righteousness"—then multitudes will tread her courts, she will be as "bright as the sun, fair as the moon, and as powerful as an army with banners," a worthy bride of the Son of God.

Commercializing Religious Education

From an address delivered before the meeting of the Religious Education Association, held in Chicago.

BY WALTER S. ATHEARN

THE time has come for the serious consideration of an all-inclusive and thoroughly articulated system of training religious teachers which will extend from the seminary to the local church. The present chaotic condition of the teacher-training movement in this country is a sufficient reason to justify such an analysis of the situation as will lead to a re-organization of the movement on a new and better basis.

* * *

The Illinois Sunday-school Association claims the honor of employing the first teacher training secretary and producing the first series of teacher-training manuals. These manuals, however, were soon handed over to denominational control and from that day until now the denominations have claimed and exercised the right to issue their own textbooks, to grant their own certificates and to promote their own standards. In 1903 the International Sunday-school Association established a teacher-training department to promote denominational courses through state associations. In 1906 the famous Philadelphia conference agreed to standardize the various denominational courses on the basis of a First Standard Course of fifty lessons, to be followed by an Advanced Standard Course of one hundred lessons. Following this conference the country was flooded with hastily prepared drill books conforming to the 50 and 100 lesson specifications. Hundreds of thousands of copies of these drill books were sold, and thousands of teacher-training certificates were issued, but it soon became evident that the efficiency of the Sunday-school teaching force was not being materially increased by this method. The scathing fire of criticism which was directed at these denominational courses has resulted in an agreement to withdraw the old courses and to substitute for them a new course of 120 lessons. We may now expect the country to be flooded again with a series of teacher-training manuals but slightly better than those which they are expected to displace. It is very evident that the Sunday-school Council, and the present denominational agencies charged with this responsibility, are incompetent by the very natures of their organizations, to standardize and to direct the training of religious teachers for this continent.

COMMERCIALISM AND SECRETARIALISM.

The trend of the past few years has been very rapidly toward the sectarianizing and commercializing of the whole field of religious education. At the present time the teacher-training standards as well as the courses of instruction and textbooks are determined by denominational publishers and salaried educational secretaries more or less directly dependent upon the denominational publishing houses. All attempts to raise the standards or to improve the textbooks are opposed by publishers having vested interests to protect.

The situation is complicated by the almost universal custom of financing denominational missionary and benevolent enterprises with the profits from Sunday-school supplies. Publishers are under constant temptation to exploit childhood in the interests of denominational charities. Educational secretaries employed by denominational boards are often expected to promote the sale of denominational publications. In many cases they are but high-grade salesmen. Uneasy rests the head of a denominational secretary whose educational ideals are higher than that represented by his denominational publications.

Many denominational benevolences are supported by offerings from Sunday-school children. The educational secretary who can secure liberal gifts from the children will be in high favor with the leaders of the associations which are the beneficiaries of his skill as a money raiser. Subordinate secretaries and field men are often judged by the financial returns from the schools in their territories, rather than from their educational program. Under our present system denominational educational secretaries are constantly tempted to devote their energies to erecting tables of comparative statistics securing large offerings for other denominational boards and meriting the favor of the denominational publishing houses. The exploitation of childhood in the interests of publishers' dividends will some day be the subject of a very scathing report of a commission appointed by this or some other association.

There ought to be universal agreement to the proposition that SALARIED EDUCATIONAL SECRETARIES AND PERSONS DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY CONNECTED WITH PUBLISHING HOUSES SHOULD BE REGARDED AS INELIGIBLE TO MEMBERSHIP OF COMMITTEES OR BOARDS CHARGED WITH THE ADOPTING OF LESSON COURSES, TEXTBOOKS OR EDUCATIONAL STANDARDS. An interest in the sale of any kind of bridge building material renders one ineligible to membership in the American Bridge Builders' Association. Our laws will not permit a school book publisher, or a publisher's agent to sit on a school board which adopts books for our public schools, and such men, many of whom are brilliant educators, have too high a standard of ethics to seek membership on standardizing boards for the control of public-school procedure. And yet the ethical standards of denominational publishing agents will permit them to sit on boards that determine standards and adopt books for use in the schools of their denominations! The adoption of the foregoing proposition would re-organize the committees which now adopt standards and texts for teacher-training courses and it would also make necessary the re-organization of the International Lesson Committee. Because of ethical and professional reasons the training of religious teachers demands the complete divorcing of publishing and secretarial interests from the educational agencies of the church.

Worship in Service

By Ira M. Boswell.

BY ITS Easter appeal, the National Benevolent Association of the Christian church is calling to one of the beautiful forms of worship. I love organs and stained glass windows, but I love orphans and stranded saints more. That church has not touched the fringe on the garment of the passing Saviour which spends more on organs than on orphans and more on steeples than on the starving. Many a congregation has gone from the church with praises on its lips for the choir, but with no thought in its heart for the Christ. Many an eloquent sermon has stirred the lips of the people to praise the preacher, but failed to energize the hearts to provide for the needy. The song or the sermon that does not cause the hearers to lift up their hearts toward God and stretch out their hands toward the needy is a miserable failure. Those who are satisfied to build houses for such performances are crushing Christ into a creed and crowding themselves into narrow cells of selfish sectarianism.

It is sweet to worship God in song, but it is sweeter to worship him in service. The peal of the organ may lift our souls up to God, but the appeal of humanity should bring our hearts down to our fellow-man. Jesus of heaven commands us to preach. Jesus of Nazareth commands us to provide. The Son of God leads us to our father. The son of man leads us to our brother. "The word became flesh, and tabernacled among us; and we beheld his glory." We beheld his glory as the Son of God, the Saviour of the world; and his glory as the Son of man, the servant of humanity.

Christianity is of necessity creedal, but it is none the less social. There is no spirituality without service, and all real service is social. If there is anything in your creed that keeps you from serving humanity, or if there is not something in your creed which impels you to serve your fellow-man, your creed needs revising.

The creed of the church is: "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God." This creed is not to be embalmed in words, but energized in life. Unless we have the spirit of Christ, we are none of his. The spirit of Christ is the spirit of service. A church that does not serve is not Christian.

"I hold that Christian grace abounds
Where charity is seen; that when
We climb to heaven, 'tis on the rounds
Of love to men."

Random Shots

By a Sharpe Shooter.

IT HAS been the privilege of this rambler to spend some days among the churches of Oklahoma and Kansas. My visitation began with a very pleasant Sunday in Nevada, Mo., where I had the pleasure of speaking for Levi Marshall. My acquaintance with the Nevada church is of long standing, based upon two evangelistic meetings held at an interval of nine years. The church has reached the high watermark of prosperity and efficiency under the able pastoral care of Mr. Marshall. Great preparations are now being made for a union evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Charles Reign Scoville.

Proceeding southward my next point of interest was Oklahoma City, where J. E. Van Horn presides over the great Central Church enterprise, in which he succeeded J. H. O. Smith. I found our people enthusiastic in their interest, and very hopeful despite the great burden of debt which hangs upon their magnificent temple. Mr. Van Horn seems to be master of the situation, and the people are happy in his leadership.

My visit in El Reno was of very special significance to me, because I was the first settled pastor of the church, and in the year 1892, led in the erection of the first building. Just across the street from the old building which still stands, has now been reared a handsome new brick church. The first house, considered a wonder in its day, cost approximately $2,500. The second has cost $25,000. It was my privilege to speak in the new auditorium to a fair sized audience hastily gathered together in honor of my unexpected visit. I resisted the tendency to reminiscence, as I do not wish any one to think me yet fallen into my anecdotage. The church has become the strongest in the town, and under the ministry of Frank L. Lash, is moving toward yet greater power and efficiency. Charles L. Engle, superintendent of the Bible-school from the very beginning, still serves in that capacity, and presides over one of the best schools in the state.

Returning northward I stopped for a season with my friend and former colleague, Richard W. Gentry, in Winfield, Kan. Time would fail me to give an account of the work Mr. Gentry has done, and bestow the meed of praise of which it is worthy. It is hardly too much to say that he has introduced a new dispensation in the history of this church. He has led his people in a building enterprise which, in view of the financial power of the church, was almost heroic. He has organized and developed his people along social and evangelistic lines, in a way that only real genius would suggest. Mr. Gentry's is an originality which is arresting without being freaky. Better than all, he is a leader in all that pertains to civic righteousness and social betterment in his community. It was my pleasure to speak at a Sunday morning service, after which I took train for Wichita in time for the evening meeting at Central church.

Walter Scott Priest, a Disciple of the Disciples, a Christian gentleman of the old school, with all the commendable features of the new harmoniously blended in the rich variety of his urbane and versatile personality, has been pastor of this great church for nearly seven years. When asked to come and preach a trial sermon, he replied, 'I will preach one five years long.'' The church called him. He is now preaching his second trial sermon of the same length.

The church has a membership of 1,100, and a plant worth $60,000. It sustains three living links: one in the foreign society, one in the C. W. B. M. and one in the home field.

Mr. Priest is intimately identified with the public interests of the city, being official ''Sky Pilot'' for the Rotary Club, a director in the Sedgwick Social Settlement and Charity Work, and unofficial umpire in scrap games of baseball improvised by prominent citizens. His only lament concerns the dearth of wedding and funeral occasions. He had only 84 of the one and 47 of the other the past year. As William Henry Green would say, ''He is just about the marryingest and funeral preachingest minister they is.''

My visit to Wichita was in some respects the most interesting of all to me. It was here I came in the boom days to become a student in Garfield University, attracted by my admiration for President H. W. Everest. It was here I made my first attempts at preaching. It was here I left the position of principal in a ward school, to assume my first pastorate at Abilene, Kansas.

To stand before a great audience in the church and try to declare the unsearchable riches of Christ with all the memories of those early years of boyish dream and purpose, with recollections of all the content of the years of struggle between, was a real experience. And there before me were some who had been there 28 years before, and remembered me. There was Judge Haymaker, the astute and able lawyer, one of our stalwart leaders in the statecraft of the kingdom. There was I. W. Gill, the finest funeral director in the United States, who has idealized a most gruesome profession, and so invested all mortuary details with taste and proprietary as to take away the horror and leave only impressions of subdued and solemn beauty. Mr. Gill has without doubt the completest and most artistic mortuary establishment in the United States.

Poems of a Mystic

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

Light.*

THE man who has within
No guiding light,
Walks, in the blazing noon,
As in the night.

Whom God illumines dwells
In undimmed day;
Through storm and night he treads
A clear, sure way.

The Prayer of the Soul.

HUNGRY of soul for bread to satisfy,
Fed through the years with husks of vanity;
My body faint, drooping my weary head,—
Hungry of soul, I come to Thee for Bread.

Thirsty of soul for living waters pure,
Far from the spring, I scarce my life endure;
My poor throat parched, and gone my power to sing,—
Thirsty of soul, I come to seek Thy Spring.

Darkened in soul, in world of darkness pent,
Gone sun and star from out my firmament,
Groping as blind, all things bring me affright;
Darkened in soul, I come to Thee for Light.

Weary in soul of all the world's hard strife,
Sick of the wrong that ever fills my life,
Sated with self and with my selfish quest,—
Weary in soul, I come to Thee for Rest.

The Universal Guilt.*

I SAW One greeted with a kiss;
A son of night performed the deed;
And then they led away my Lord
To be despised, to suffer, bleed;
And I stood by, nor said a word.
Nor was I by his mute grief stirred.

I saw One wear a crown of thorns;
They placed it rudely on his brow,
And pressed it down; and as he bowed
They cried, ''Messiah—see him now!''
And I stood by, nor moved a limb
To save my Lord, or comfort him.

I saw One hanging on a cross;
As in each hand they drove the nail,
He groaned and cried, ''O God, forgive!''
They laughed and shouted, ''King, all hail!''
And I with them was standing there,
As he breathed out his dying prayer.

The Voice of the Deep.

OUT of the darkness born of the night,
Above the billows which over my bark
Relentlessly sweep,
Comes to my spirit, weak with affright,
Calming its tumult, borne from the darkness,
The voice of the deep.

Out of the darkness born of my night,
Above the sorrows which over my life
Relentlessly sweep,
Comes to my spirit, weak with affright,
Calming its tumult, borne from the darkness,
The Voice of the Deep.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

SECTARIANISM

THE grosser forms of denominational narrowness are dying out, though they die hard. There is a Baptist newspaper published in Louisville which offers now and then tokens of this belated type of reaction.

In a recent issue one finds this amiable sentiment: "We have never entered into a union meeting of the different denominations, and so far as we now know, never expect to do so. With us it is not a question of expediency but of conscience. Therefore we could not participate in such a meeting if we would, and would not if we could."

One has to search the sectarian press for a long time to find a gem equal to this. It is such utterances that reveal the inner spirit, not of great denominations like the Baptist, but of small partisan factions within such denominations, who believe that their own opinions are the last word on Christian truth, and that any association with other Christian people is a compromise.

Such utterances were out of date among the people of God a half century ago. Only the sectaries who still abide in that atmosphere do not know that they have actually passed into oblivion among modern Christians.

TEMPERANCE VICTORIES

BY AN overwhelming majority Winnipeg, Manitoba, has passed a first class prohibition act. All bars, wholesale and retail liquor houses, have two months to close their business. After June first no further licenses will be issued.

The public sentiment of Manitoba is strongly opposed to the whiskey interest, and there is no doubt of the enforcement of the law. The two provinces to the west, Saskatchewan and Alberta, are dry. British Columbia is rapidly going the same way. Ontario to the east is preparing to submit the subject to the electors, with fair prospect of the exclusion of the liquor business.

These and other reports of the progress of temperance are cheering. The Disciples of Christ have a Temperance Board, of which L. E. Sellers of Indianapolis is secretary. It is a cause which commands the loyal interest of all Disciples, and each church must regard itself as a center of temperance information and effort in its own locality.

NEW YORK'S DISGRACE

WHEN announcement was made some weeks ago that a boxing contest was to be held in Madison Garden, New York, it was not regarded as an important item of news, for no one supposed that a prize fight was contemplated, or that the authorities of the metropolis would tolerate such an affront to the moral sentiment of their city and the nation.

It is apparent however that there were no such compunctions of conscience on the part of the mayor of that city or of the governor of the state. The exhibition was held partly under the authorization and protection of an improper law, and partly in violation and defiance of law. Madison Square Garden is not the kind of "boxing club" that the law is meant to authorize.

The crowd that attended the contest proves that there is a class in society that craves this sort of sport, and it includes many who on other accounts are supposed to be respectable citizens.

The storm of protest that has been raised will result in the passing of a stringent law prohibiting all such prize-ring encounters in New York. Nevada, long regarded as the happy hunting ground of fistic license, has purged its name from the disgrace of prize fights. It is hoped that New York will try to reach the moral level of Nevada in this particular.

THE UNPROVIDED

PLEASE turn to the statement made by the National Benevolent Association in reference to the work it is attempting to do in nearly a dozen institutions for the care of orphans, aged men and women and the sick.

This interest has risen late in the progress of the Disciples of Christ. The older churches have made it an outstanding feature of their program for a much longer time. It is a sign of our growing sensitiveness to one of the great interests of Christianity that we have partially awakened at last to realize this obligation.

To know that our Brotherhood is actually carrying on this benevolent work at many different points, and that it is possible for those who contribute to share in the work and the joy of this holy ministry, is a satisfaction few will wish to miss.

The annual offerings for this work are taken in connection with the Easter season. They should form a part of every church program. Only in this way can the work be interpreted to a Brotherhood that is anxious to have a part in every worthy cause.

THE WILL TO WORSHIP

THERE are people who are not interested to attend church because they find themselves uninterested in the preaching. They do not think the sermons sufficiently stimulating to be of value.

They have failed to understand the fact that at best the sermon is but one of the features of the worship, and not even the most important one.

It is one of the faults of Protestantism that it has magnified the sermon out of all proportion to its former and rightful place in the public worship.

The real purpose of the assembly in the house of God upon the Lord's day is worship, in which all are to participate, and from which all are to gain spiritual strength.

Those who make the value of church attendance depend on the quality of the sermons have only half learned the secret of the holy house and the holy day.

No such hour of worship can ever be valueless, no matter how poor the sermon or how meager the accessories of the service.

SUITABLE WARNINGS

VALUABLE work is being done by organizations like the Illinois Vigilance Association in calling the attention of the public, especially young men, to the dangers attendant upon vice. A large number of placards have been posted in conspicuous places in this city and throughout the state by the Illinois organization.

It is beyond question that splendid service has been rendered during the past few years by the wide publicity given to the dangers of sexual infection. The attraction of red-light districts and other evil places of resort is greatly lessened when young men realize the terrible dangers incurred by association with the inmates of such places.

It is natural that a right-minded public should be sensitive to any undue publicity given to themes of this character, but the most effective remedy is information. Young men will be less likely to run the risks which are usually the result of curiosity if they understand the dreadful consequences of infection, to themselves and their future wives and children.

The service rendered by such organizations is of great value.

MEN AND MILLIONS IN DES MOINES

THE MEN and women who are carrying forward the work of providing six millions of dollars for our missionary and educational work, and a thousand young people for the missionary and other fields of Christian activity, have just closed their campaign in Des Moines and adjacent cities.

It was eminently successful from every point of view. A large sum of money was raised, and yet it is not by the money standard that the success of the Men and Millions team is measured. It is rather by the new interest inspired and the activities started through the visitation.

On different occasions the team was divided into smaller sections for brief campaigns in smaller cities like Cedar Rapids and Marshalltown. So far as learned the results have been admirable.

It is a fact observed by all the workers that the younger men and women of the church respond much more quickly and generously to the call for money than do the older and wealthier ones. People who have made their money slowly and cautiously release it with reluctance, and seem less sensitive to the call of the world than those who are touching the active and aggressive life of the present generation.

To just that extent these reluctant and half-persuaded givers miss the joy of the cause and limit its possibilities. But in spite of this fact, which is one of the inevitable features of all such solicitation, the Men and Millions movement goes on splendidly toward success.

THE SPRING CAMPAIGN IN CHICAGO

IT IS difficult for the unsophisticated citizen to understand the currents of politics, especially of Republican politics, in this town.

Mayor Thompson was elected by an overwhelming majority and has had every opportunity to prove himself the friend of law and order. The right-minded citizenship of Chicago was greatly encouraged when the Mayor summarily closed the saloons on Sunday. They have never been reopened, and a fair degree of care is maintained to preserve the one o'clock closing hour on other days.

These have been admirable features of the Mayor's administration, and the lovers of right government wish to give him all credit that is due.

But another issue has been raised more recently. It is apparent that the Mayor is attempting to build up a political machine in opposition to the Deneen-West control of the Republican party. In the progress of this fight he has found it to his own interest to oppose the election of seven or eight of the most valuable councilmen in the city service. At the recent primary the Mayor's faction attempted to eliminate these men, but was completely defeated. The Municipal Voters' League, an organization that has gradually brought about greatly improved conditions in the Council, is now openly opposed to the Mayor and his partisans.

It can hardly be denied that the very large body of citizens who were pleased with the Mayor's election and greatly encouraged by his early enforcement of law, are perplexed by the continued evidence that he does not seem to work cordially with any but his own particular henchmen, and that in the effort to create for himself a political machine that shall promote his interests in the future, he is gradually revealing his own personal weaknesses and his lack of constructive leadership.

Mayor Thompson started his official career under the most brilliant and favorable auspices. No man ever had a more promising opportunity to prove himself a great leader, concerned for the interests that promote the morality and welfare of a great city. It is not too late for Mr. Thompson to regain something of the confidence which he and his friends have gone far to shatter. His future is in the balance.

THE RESURRECTION IDEA.

These are facts of early Christian history. They have passed into the faith of the universal church. They have been verified by the continuity of Jesus' leadership through the centuries. That he is alive, and alive forevermore, is a reality of Christian experience, not a dogma resting on an event of history.

For at the best the physical resurrection of Jesus is only an incident in a life whose every manifestation was proof of its timeless and eternal significance. We do not know the manner of Jesus' manifestation to the disciples. The New Testament narratives tremble and throb with the joy and wonder of the great assurance. In the effort to make us understand they become at times incoherent, now putting stress on the physical presence of the Lord, and now on his unsubstantial, elusive and unearthly behavior. They had no other way of conceiving his survival of death save in terms of bodily resurrection. Was the truth of his triumph over death too vast to be compressed within the cerements of their explanations? Was the doctrine of the resurrection, with all of its limitations, the nearest and best approach they could make to the heart of the mystery? Let us frankly confess that we do not know.

Over the manner in which Jesus gave evidence to the disciples that he was the Master of Death there rests a veil of mystery which none has ever penetrated.

"There was the door to which we found no key,
There was the veil through which we could not see."

Whatever may be the ultimate conclusion of Christian thinking upon this ever-alluring theme, we are well aware that the conception of resurrection as a personal experience seems increasingly unimpressive. Many who hold with undiminished faith to the physical resurrection of Jesus have ceased to regard as usable the words of the Apostles' Creed, "I believe in the resurrection of the body." Christian faith has taken a more satisfying and convincing form, a form which we are yet to consider. But does one disbelieve in the victory of Jesus over death, and through him the victory of all who make his life their own, because he has not been able to find the Jewish idea of the resurrection satisfying?

For ourselves, though this does not describe our personal problem, we say emphatically, "No."

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Proposes Publicity Campaign for Chicago.

The most remarkable series of advertising write-ups published in behalf of the churches was that which was put into a Baltimore paper two years ago. Following the Church Publicity convention in Chicago, the Chicago Herald proposes a similar campaign for this city. This paper refuses all liquor advertising and in other ways makes itself acceptable to church people.

Methodists Make Money

The Book Committee of the Methodist church may not be an impressive title, but when one knows that it represents the publishing interests of this great denomination and that the committee has just given $275,000 from the net profits of 1915 for the aged ministers, it will be seen that the committee is entrusted with great enterprises. The profits were $25,000 less than last year on account of financial conditions.

Church Statistics.

The annual religious statistics arranged by H. K. Carroll, LL. D., are now in print and will repay careful study. The percentages of growth for twenty-five years show the following bodies more than doubled their numbers, with the percentages indicated: Lutheran Synodical Conference, 130; Roman Catholic, 125; Presbyterian (South,) 118; Lutheran General Synod, 116; Disciples of Christ, 113; Southern Baptist, 111. The Protestant Episcopal church gained 95 per cent. All others had a smaller percentage of gain. The reports for the past year show a gain of 654,000 for the United States in all bodies. The bodies represented in the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America absorb about half that gain.

Methodists Disagree Over History.

A conference of Methodist dignitaries was held recently to determine when and where Methodism was first started in America. Maryland and New York vied for the honors. The New York representatives were very few in numbers and refrained from voting, so the matter was "settled" in favor of Maryland. A Methodist paper suggests that a jury supposed to be intelligent has given the case no settlement and now proposes a jury that is ignorant!

"Catch Pals" in the Army.

The Rev. R. J. Patterson of Ireland, whose temperance work gave him the title of "Catch-My-Pal" Patterson, is now at work in the British army. His method has been attended by much success here.

Scrutinize Dr. Campbell's Theology.

Rev. R. J. Campbell is preparing to take deacon's orders soon in the Established Church of England. Certain conservative voices were raised inquiring as to his orthodoxy. It is now announced that the bishop appointed four leading clergymen to assist in examining Dr. Campbell. They have pronounced him orthodox. He will be ordained in company with several other candidates.

Studies Presbyterian Hymn Book.

A Presbyterian has been investigating the authors of the various hymns used in a popular book of his denomination. Out of 291 hymns, he found that 105 were written by Episcopalians, 38 by Congregationalists, 27 by Unitarians, 27 by Baptists and only 25 by Presbyterians. This indicates how little it is possible to arrange a sectarian hymn-book that will be popular.

Catholics to Get Bible in Vernacular.

One of the greatest triumphs for the modernists of the Roman Catholic church in a generation is the recent decree of the pope concerning the reading of the Bible. Pope Benedict has ordered that in all countries hereafter the evangel shall be read in the vernacular after it is read in Latin. Cardinal Farley has authorized a cheap edition of the Douay version of the Bible for circulation in this country.

Religious Revival in Russia.

The war conditions in Russia have brought about a great revival in which the mysticism and deep religious nature of the people is revealed. Archbishop Petrim is conducting services with pomp and impressiveness that is unprecented. He has organized children's choruses with hundreds of voices. Peasants and noblemen alike acknowledge his sway and even the Czar has paid him honor. Recently many thousands remained on their knees in the snow for a long time with the thermometer thirty below while they waited for the archbishop's blessing as he passed from the cathedral to the monastery.

A Church for Night Workers.

The old Midnight Mission conducted by Rev. E. A. Bell is being changed into a night workers' church at the suggestion of Dr. John Timothy Stone, and Rev. Myron E. Adams, recently pastor of the First Baptist church, is being associated with Mr. Bell in the work. Services will be held at hours convenient to those who toil through the night.

A New Peace Movement.

There will be a gathering of a number of prominent men from the various churches at Garden City, L. I., April 25-27. The occasion will be the formation of a world alliance of the churches for the promotion of international friendship. Among those who are expected at this meeting are Bishop Greer, President Faunce, Prof. Harry E. Fosdick, President King, Dr. Mott, Dr. Speer, Dr. S. L. Gulick, and Dr. Frederick L. Lynch. These men will accept the challenge that the church should keep the world at peace and begin to work at the job.

Remember the Landing of the Pilgrims.

The Congregationalists propose to celebrate the four hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims by a big four year campaign with some ambitious goals for denominational progress. The large objectives are: (1) The securing before 1920 of 500,000 new members in our Congregational churches. (2) The recruiting of men for various types of denominational leadership and especially for the ministry and missionary service, and in that connection the education and vitalization of the churches with a view to the depth and efficiency of their own spiritual life and the increase of their missionary interest. (3) The bringing of contributions up to the standards set by the Apportionment. (4) A new and special emphasis on social service. (5) The raising of a large extra fund, presumably for ministerial relief.

International Convention of the Y. M. C. A.

The Thirty-ninth International Convention of the Y. M. C. A., will be held at Cleveland, May 12 to 16. John R. Mott is now the secretary of the organization.

Dr. Inge Offends Dignitaries.

The Dean of St. Paul's in England (Dr. Inge) offends the more strait-laced of his colleagues by unconventional phrases. The Bishop of London has organized the League of Intercession which provides for continual prayers. Dr. Inge does not favor this campaign and calls it "pestering the Almighty." He is also quoted as saying that if he were a betting man he would bet on peace before Christmas. This cheerful prophecy is accompained by the less cheerful one that everybody in England will have from a third to a half less to live on for the rest of their lives after the war. Dr. Inge's remarks have been the occasion of considerable discussion.

Dr. Grenfell in France.

Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell has written his friends about his experiences as an army surgeon in France. He is with the Harvard unit there and in addition to his surgical duties, he is giving addresses under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Owing to the strict censorship on the front, his letter contains little other news.

Protestantism in France and Belgium.

War conditions have not been permitted to break up the Protestant work in France and Belgium, though the lack of funds has been a great interference to effective work. Dr. Henri Anet is in the United States collecting funds for these churches. He states that the deficit in the Belgian Protestant church is $25,000.

The Church of George Washington.

The United States is getting old enough to have some historic feeling. There are three churches in Virginia with which George Washington was once connected and in which he served as vestryman. They are Episcopalian in faith. The churches are Christ church, Alexandria; Falls church, Fairfax county; and Pohick church in Mount Vernon parish. The last named was the "home" church of George Washington. These churches have been brought to public attention by the visits of some staff writers of a religious weekly.

THE RISEN LORD—(EASTER LESSON.)

Lesson for April 23.

Golden Text: Now hath Christ been raised from the dead, the first-fruits of them that are asleep. 1 Cor. 15:20.

Lesson 1 Corinthians 15:1-28: verses 1-11 printed. Memorize verses 3, 4.

(1) Now I make known unto you, brethren, the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye received, wherein also ye stand, (2) by which also ye are saved, if ye hold fast the word which I preached unto you, except ye believed in vain. (3) For I delivered unto you first of all that which also I received: that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; (4) and that he was buried; and that he hath been raised on the third day according to the scriptures; (5) and that he appeared to Cephas; then to the twelve; (6) then he appeared to above five hundred brethren at once, of whom the greater part remain until now, but some are fallen asleep; (7) then he appeared to James; then to all the apostles; (8) and last of all, as to the child untimely born, he appeared to me also. (9) For I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God. (10) But by the grace of God I am what I am: and his grace which was bestowed upon me was not found vain; but I labored more abundantly than they all: yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me. (11) Whether then it be I or they, so we preach, and so ye believed.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. I make known. There is a gentle reproach in the word. He has to begin again and teach them an elementary fact, which they had already accepted.—The gospel. Or, The good tidings. RVm.—Which I preached unto you. While at Corinth; see Acts 18.—Wherein also ye stand. There must be perseverance in the receiver of the truth of God.

2. Ye are saved. You are in the way of salvation.—Except ye believed in vain. A proviso, unless ye believe haphazard. Belief adopted in a hurry is not likely to be very sure.

3. I delivered unto you. I told you. First of all. The thing of most importance as Paul had it in his mind.—That which also I received. The point is that Paul did not invent what he gave them. They received it just as he received it. He may have gathered his information from earlier disciples.—Died for our sins. He died on account of our sins. —According to the scripture. It was in accord with the general teaching of the scripture.

4. That he was buried. The importance of the burial is that it is evidence of the resurrection. Note, that this fact is recorded by all four gospels.—The third day. The Jews counted a part of a day as an entire day.

5. Cephas. Another name for Peter. Luke 24:34.—Then to the Twelve. This phrase is here an official name for the Apostolic body: only ten were present, for Judas was dead and Thomas was away.

6. About five hundred brethren. This occasion is unknown, but it is probably to be identified with Matt. 28:16.—The greater part remain until now. Some of these were living and could be consulted in regard to the matter of the resurrection.—Some are fallen asleep. Some had died in the course of the twenty-five years following the resurrection.

7. James. Nothing is known of this appearance, or as to which James is meant. The brother of Jesus is most likely the one.—Then to all the apostles. The Apostolic body, Thomas being present.

8. Last of all. He was the last one chosen to be an apostle.—He appeared to me also. Paul the writer of this letter.

9. I am the least. Paul had proper humility.—Apostles. He was an apostle, and insisted on his authority.—Not to be called an apostle. Do not measure up to them. They had normal development, he came to the office suddenly and unnaturally.

10. The grace of God. The love of God in the work of transformation in Paul's life.—I am what I am. One of the apostles.—Not found vain. Did not turn out to be worthless. I labored more abundantly than they all. It may be that Paul adds this because he has learned that his apostleship had been questioned by some of the Corinthians.

11. Or they. The other apostles.—Ye believed. He does not mean that they had ceased to believe, but that there was a definite time when they accepted this belief as a result of apostolic preaching.

TEST QUESTIONS.

1. Why did Paul write this chapter?
2. How do the appearances as represented here agree with those in the Gospels?
3. How was Thomas convinced of the resurrection?
4. Who was Cephas?
5. When was Paul at Corinth?
6. Why did Paul write this letter?
7. What is the character of this letter?
8. How does Paul's argument appeal to you?
9. Why do you believe that Jesus arose from the dead?
10. Is the resurrection physical or spiritual?
11. Why do we call this Easter Day?
12. Is it the only resurrection day?
13. What does Easter mean to you?
14. What is the "grace of God?"

There is no action so slight nor so mean but it may be done to a great purpose, and ennobled therefore; nor is any purpose so great but that slight actions may help it, and be so done as to help it much, most especially, that chief of all purposes—the pleasing of God.—J. Ruskin. * * *

Religion is not a haphazard thing. If God be a God of law, then surely here, above all material things, in the highest realm of the spirit, He must, most strictly, work according to law. This is where we ought to learn from science completely. Just as we have learned to face the facts and to care for nothing but the facts, so let us go on to learn and adopt and obey God's laws of the art of character-building. Let us believe that here no effect can be produced without a cause, just as no statue carves itself, or stands complete on its pedestal, in answer to any number of our pious wishes. It must be wrought with care and trouble. It takes time and study and hard thought and much practice.—Rev. C. W. Addison.

The Lesson in Today's Life.

SOME of the Corinthians doubted, others denied, the doctrine of the resurrection. Paul seeks to show that this doctrine is the foundation upon which the whole fabric of Christianity rests. The whole of the chapter should be read in order to get the force and cogency of his argument. Few, if any, events in the history have such a weight of evidence to support them, and certainly Paul makes out a good case against the doubters at Corinth.

It would be a very easy matter for any one to propose difficulties about the resurrection. The same number might be secured about any great manifestation of life. We could have found as many about this world before we came into it.

The resurrection of our Lord settles the fact of ours, and for a full explanation we can confidently wait. This is the glorious truth of our Easter lesson. The how and the where we can leave unsolved, since we have the comfort of the thought that our friends who have fallen asleep in Jesus, are "with the Lord." Ours is a clear hope of life with our Lord after death.

The resurrection of Christ occupies a fundamental place in the Christian world because by it there is disclosed a real and close connection between this world, and the unseen, eternal world. There is no longer need of argument to prove the world beyond, for here is one who lived in it. The resurrection was not Christ's return to this life, to its wants, to its limitations, to its inevitable close; but it was a resurrection to a life forever beyond death. If Jesus arose from the dead, then the world into which he has gone is a real world, in which men can live more fully than they live in this world of limitations. If he arose from the dead then there is a spirit mightier than the strongest material powers, a God who is seeking to bring us out of the bondage of this life into an eternally happy condition.

It was the conviction that our Lord arose from the dead that convinced his disciples that his words were true, and that he was what he claimed to be. He was not mistaken regarding his work, his relation to the Father, or the prospects of himself and his people. This was the sublime answer given by God the Father to the doubts, calumnies and accusations of men.

In the resurrection of Christ we see the norm or type of our life here and our life hereafter. Holiness and immortality are two aspects of the Divine life we receive from Christ. They are inseparable the one from the other. His spirit is the source of both. "If the spirit that raised up the Lord Jesus from the dead dwelleth in you, he that raised up the Lord Jesus Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies through his spirit that dwelleth in you." If we have now the one evidence of his dwelling in us, we shall one day have the other also. The hope that should uplift and purify every part of the Christian's character, becomes a living hope, full of immortality, in all who are now actually drawing their life from Christ, who have their life truly hid with Christ in God, who are in heart and will one with the most high in whom is life eternal.

The most important fact of all is the power of the resurrection in our own life. Can we say with Paul, "That like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the father, even so we also should walk in newness of life?" Here is the power of the resurrection, a new man for a new world. In just such measure as Easter opens a new prospect for man it prepares him for the new life and world to come. The resurrection time is not at Easter alone. There is not a moment of any day, in any year, when we may not rise with Christ into newness of life, and walk in his ways with transfigured faces.

Disciples Table Talk

Special Easter Observerance at East End, Pittsburgh.

East End Church, Pittsburgh, John R. Ewers, pastor, always observes Easter week in some special manner. This year the Men's Class has been requested to conduct the series of meetings. Already the officers are at work. Men, both ministers and laymen who have a message, will be called upon to speak during the five nights. Special emphasis will be laid upon decisions on Easter Day. Last year a similar plan worked out remarkably, and this year, with the class in better condition and with more experience, greater blessings are anticipated. Another feature of the celebration of this week is the observance of the communion on Friday night.

W. A. Shullenberger Welcomed to Central Church, Des Moines.

"Never in the history of the Central church have I known a time when there was such unanimity in regard to the coming of a new pastor. Without exception everybody is for him and this is as it should be." Thus writes the editor of the Christian Worker, Des Moines. He says further: "When Mr. Shullenberger first visited Central we were all convinced of his sincerity, of his love of the cause, and of his faithfulness to the gospel. On his second visit with Mrs. Shullenberger we were all delighted with them both." It is believed by Central church leaders that Mr. Shullenberger will be a most worthy successor to H. O. Breeden, who ministered to the church for 21 years; and to Finis Idleman, pastor for 9 years.

President Pritchard at Champaign, Ill., in Bondurant Bible Lectureship.

Several years ago Thomas E. Bondurant, of DeLand, Ill., donated to the cause of Christian education in Illinois large sums of money; among these bequests was one of twelve thousand dollars, the design and conditions of which gift are stated thus: "The income from this fund shall be used annually and forever as follows: Six-tenths thereof establishing and maintaining a Bible Lectureship at Champaign, Ill., within reach of, and for the benefit of, the students of the University of Illinois, and four-tenths thereof for the purpose of establishing and maintaining such Bible Lectureship at such of the cities of Illinois containing State Normal Schools as may present a favorable opening and opportunity, within reach of, and for the benefit of, students attending such State Normal Schools." The lecturer chosen by the trustees for this year was President H. O. Pritchard, of Eureka. The lectureship was held at University Place church, Champaign-Urbana, Stephen E. Fisher, minister. The general theme of the lectures was, "What Did Jesus Teach?" The topics discussed on the several evenings were as follows: "What Did Jesus Teach About God?" "What Did Jesus Teach About Man?" "What Did Jesus Teach About Sin?" "What Did Jesus Teach About the Kingdom?" "What Did Jesus Teach About Discipleship?" "What Did Jesus Teach About Himself?"

Some Wide-Awake Christian Endeavor Societies.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Union church, Cissna Park, Ill., has become a Life-line society by assuming the support of Rajwar Dayal, of Bilaspur, India. The Endeavorers of First church, Sac City, Iowa, raised $48 in cash and pledges on Endeavor Day for the orphanage work under the Foreign Society, at Damoh, India. For a number of years they have furnished support for one of the orphan boys. Miss Elsie Garriott is president. The Society of First church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in connection with the Endeavor Day program used the stereopticon slides on the Damoh Orphanage furnished by the Foreign Society. It was a splendid occasion and resulted in raising $30 for the Orphanage. This society is planning larger things for the future.

Oklahoma Church is Building Up Its Preacher.

There are not many churches in the brotherhood as wise as the church at Pryor, Okla., which grants its pastor, Byron Hester, two months' leave of absence each year that he may do graduate work. Mr. Hester has just been called for another year at Pryor, but no decision has yet been made. A sign of efficiency at Pryor is the fact that the Intermediate Department of the Bible-school has rented an entire residence as a home for its work. Besides the church building, four other buildings are either partially or entirely used by the church school.

Foreign Missions Still Gaining, Reports F. M. Rains.

For the first twenty-seven days of March the churches as churches sent $24,958 for Foreign Missions, a gain of $9,934 over the corresponding time one year ago, writes Secretary F. M. Rains. This is one of the largest gains from the churches in the history of the Foreign Society. The number of churches responding during the twenty-seven days is 1,341, a gain of 405. The total gain from all sources is $14,243. For the current missionary year, that is from October 1, 1915, to March 27, 1916, the gains from the churches amounted to $15,341. Never has there been recorded so large a gain in the offerings from the churches for the corresponding time in the history of the Foreign Society. The gain in the number of contributing churches is 607. This is also a record breaker. Mr. Rains adds by way of warning: "Let us all remember that it is a long time to September 30, when the year closes. Our interest and labors must not slacken. Every friend must work hard to keep up the gains that have been so well begun. See to it that there is no retreat. Now is the time to strike. If your church is not in line, let it join the advancing column at once. Remember, the goal for the year is $500,000. It can be reached. There is widespread interest in coming up to the mark. All hands to the task! Please send the offering of your church today, if you can. F. M. Rains, Secretary, Cincinnati, O.

Daughter of James Ware Studying in Des Moines.

Miss Alice Ware, daughter of the late James Ware, our missionary at Shanghai, is in school in Des Moines. She is making good progress in her studies and hopes to graduate in June, 1917. Mrs. James Ware continues in her work at Shanghai, China.

Reward for Live Church Letters.

"Live Church Letters" are wanted by Central church, New York. Dr. Finis Idleman, the minister, is conducting a unique campaign to enroll as members in New York all Disciple churchmen from the West and South, who have recently come to the city. A concerted effort is being made to secure names of new arrivals in New York, from the churches of the brotherhood, to save this waste of adult members in New York. Dr. Idleman believes it is as important to conserve the religious life of members during the last twenty years of their lives, as during the first twenty years, and he is providing in New York a life-saving station at Central church for Disciples in the metropolis.

Kentucky Bible-schools in District Conventions.

A Busy Business Man.

S. J. McFarland is superintendent of the East Dallas, Tex., Bible-school, the largest school among the Disciples of Christ in the Southwest, having an enrollment of something over 1,100 in the main school, which does not include the 150 in the Home and Cradle Roll Departments, and an average attendance of 687. Mr. McFarland is active vice-president of the Security National Bank, Dallas, and has extensive interests in other banks, on account of which he is a very busy man, but he finds time to build up and maintain this large school.

DISCIPLES' CONGRESS, CHICAGO.

Among the speakers at the Disciples' Congress to be held at Hotel Sherman April 25-27, are: C. M. Sharpe, F. D. Kershner, F. W. Allen, C. E. Underwood, W. D. Ryan, W. C. Payne, J. M. Alexander, H. E. Stafford, W. C. Morro, O. F. Jordan, A. L. Ward, M. L. Pontius, H. O. Pritchard, and Professor G. B. Smith, of the University of Chicago. The full program will be published next week.

President H. O. Pritchard, one of the speakers scheduled for the Disciples' Congress, to meet in Chicago this month.

Evangelism Without Evangelists

The unusual in reform is to come to Chicago. A great evangelistic movement, marked by the absence of the customary evangelist, is to sweep Chicago the two weeks prior to Easter Sunday, April 9 to 23, according to the plans of the Chicago Church Federation Council.

"This evangelistic movement, of which the most striking feature is the absence of a professional evangelist, is to be the combined efforts of all of the Protestant churches of the city," said William Barrett Millard, executive secretary of the federation, recently "What we want to do is to set the church at its own task. That is why we have not employed a professional evangelist. We believe in them, but we do not want anything hysterical or sensational about this movement.

"We are making an effort to have this a simultaneous campaign all over the city. So far, we have 500 churches enrolled to join in the work, and we expect many more.

"Each church is to carry on its own work, and is to make it as far reaching as possible. We observed April 2 as Go to Church Sunday. There will be special evangelistic services every night, except Saturday for the two weeks. April 3 was set as a day of special prayer and preparation for ministers, and there were special neighborhood prayer-meetings. Besides this, each church will organize training classes for Sunday-school teachers and personal workers.

"You know," Mr. Millard went on to explain, "we are entering into this work with the greatest of confidence. Because this is not an experiment. Indianapolis started this work two years ago. It was the first city to attempt anything on such a big scale.

"The first year, they had 3,000 converts. Last year, with their added experience, they had 7,000 converts. This year they expect at least 10,000.

"If they can do that much in Indianapolis, we can surely accomplish something worth while here. This bids fair to be the biggest event in Chicago's religious history."

Special Campaign at Lima, O., Central.

A. B. Houze has been leading in the work at Central, Lima, O., for nearly four years, and he reports a present membership of 700, worshipping in a modern plant valued at $50,000. The budget system and the every member canvass are features of the work. The Bible-school is highly organized and uses modern courses of study, and has an attendance of about 350. The church is strong for missions and benevolence. At a recent meeting of the official board a novel campaign was indorsed. The following statement will give an idea of the nature of the special effort: "Ten Things I Can Do—Why Not?" "Attend Ten Sunday Morning Services." "Attend Ten Sunday Evening Services." "Bring Ten Visitors." "Win Ten Souls To Christ." "Attend Ten Bible School Sessions." "Secure Ten New Pupils For The Bible-school." "Attend Ten Christian Endeavor Prayer-meetings." "Make Ten Social Calls in Interest of the Church." "Greet Ten Worshipers at Each Service." "Urge Ten Others to Help This Campaign." Home-coming day will be observed on May 21.

C. O. Purdy Goes to Centralia, Mo.

C. O. Purdy has been called to the work at Centralia, Mo., which C. H. Swift is relinquishing. Mr. Purdy is a Drake graduate, and spent two years as Chaplain in the Panama Canal Zone on a salary of $1,800 a year. He is just finishing two years of post-graduate work in Missouri State University and in the Bible college at Columbia.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—S. G. Inman gave an address recently at Central church, New York, on "Christian Pan-Americanism as Demonstrated at Panama." After the close of the Congress at Panama Mr. Inman attended a conference of missions in Porto Rico.

—Frank L. James has resigned as Southeastern Sunday-school Superintendent to become State Secretary of the Arkansas Sunday-school Association.

—W. A. Moore, pastor at First church, Tacoma, Wash., is preaching a series of sermons on "Revelation."

—S. M. Conner, at First church, Portland, Ore., has organized a personal workers' class which meets on Tuesday evenings each week.

—C. W. Jopson, recently resigned from the pastorate at Los Gatos, Cal., has been recalled by the congregation and he is again at work in this field.

C. R. Hudson's class of men at Pomona, Cal., recently had an attendance of 136; on the same Sunday the women's class had 134 present. This school has an enrollment of 1,032. Frank B. Ward is serving as director of religious education.

—The recent series of evangelistic meetings at Orange, Cal., increased the attendance at Bible-school 50 per cent; nine young people volunteered for life service in Christian work.

Evangelism in Minnesota

Crayton S. Brooks and T. E. Fitz have recently closed a four months' campaign in Minnesota; during this time more than 250 people have been added to the churches with which they labored. Those who are familiar with the northern fields will appreciate the success of this campaign. While the work was very largely a missionary effort, no Society supported the meetings financially. These men have personally made a very large contribution to this pioneer work. The first campaign was held in Portland Ave. church, Minneapolis. This church encounters all the difficulties of a downtown work in a great American city. It is the best missionary church in the state, yet conservative in its own work. During the meeting 46 were added to the congregation. The second campaign was conducted at Plainview. This church had very little but a bad reputation, and a preacher who was thoroughly alive. Until Hugh Cooper succeeded in opening the church for services less than a year ago, no services had been conducted for many years. Seventy-five persons were added during the campaign.

The third campaign was held in Minnehaha church, Minneapolis. A. W. Vandervort is the efficient minister here. The meeting resulted in 60 persons being added to the membership and the completion of the every member canvass. This congregation now enjoys the distinction of having more subscribers to the local expense of the church than there are members. The fourth campaign was held in Grand Ave. church, Minneapolis. This campaign resulted in 42 accessions to the membership. This church is located in a middle class residential section and seemed to be the more difficult of the four fields. Minnesota leaders speak highly of the ability and achievements of both the evangelists. Arrangements are already being made for return meetings in 1917.

Notes From Georgia

Georgia Disciples will meet this year at Tybee on May 9 and 10, as the guests of Dr. A. R. Moore and First church, Savannah.

The Dixie Endeavorers will meet in their first All-South convention in Atlanta in July. "The Dixie Endeavorer," the organ of this movement in the Southland, is published at Ensley by the wide awake secretary, Carl Lehman. Mr. Lehman has aroused great interest in this convention throughout twelve southern states. The Atlanta union is presided over by Attorney John W. Grenshaw, a member of West End church.

Sumner T. Martin will receive a cordial welcome from Georgia Disciples when he assumes the duties of pastor of the Rome church and officer-secretary of the state work.

The Laymen's Missionary Convention recently held in Atlanta, was well attended and succeeded in arousing much interest among Georgia men. The Georgia weeklies will give a column each week for missionary facts, copy and plate being furnished by those interested in missions. The convention reached its climax in a decision to take advantage of this opportunity.

Compulsory military training in the public schools is engaging the attention of Georgia cities. In the capital city, the Ministers' Union, the Federation of Trades and other bodies have opposed the movement.

The papers report a fire in Augusta which has so far left three thousand homeless and caused a property loss of eight million dollars; friends fear that our First church property may have suffered.

W. O. Foster.

—L. C. Howe, pastor at Noblesville, Ind., with the other pastors of the city, is arranging a series of union meetings for men.

—Disciples of Benton and Tipton counties, in Indiana, print each week in the county seat papers reports of attendance, etc., in their Bible-schools of the two counties. An increased interest has thus been aroused.

—Of 56 additions to the church at Sheridan, Ind., during the past year, 51 came through the Bible-school.

—Over 500 members have been added to the Findlay, O., Bible-school through the recent revival. C. M. Myers ministers at Findlay.

—The men's class at Bristol, Tenn., has increased its membership from 12 to 108 in two months.

—Finis Idleman, of Central church, New York, has been elected a member of the Administrative Body of the Federal Council of Churches; also of the Church Peace Union.

—H. O. Breeden and wife, of Fresno, First church, are now living on a fruit ranch just out from Fresno; the ranch is the property of a citizen of Fresno, who is away from home temporarily.

—A son of A. C. Smithers, of St. Louis, will enter Columbia university next fall.

—Mrs. M. M. McMichael, of Central church, Des Moines, has been elected by the City Council as "City Mother;" she works in connection with the police department.

—The Endeavorers at Central church, Des Moines, recently observed "Honorary Members' Night."

—Texas Disciples will meet in annual convention at Central church, Waco, May 8-11. F. N. Calvin is pastor at Central.

—W. T. Brooks gave the chief address at the meeting of the North Texas Christian Ministers' Association, held in Central church, Dallas, March 27.

—The Acropolis Club, New York City, was entertained on March 11 by Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Porterfield, at their home. The membership of this club is composed of students of Union Theological Seminary and Columbia and New York Universities who are Disciples. It is now in its sixth year and over forty members enrolled.

—John R. Ewers writes recommending W. E. Byrnes, a blind evangelist, who recently spent some weeks in Pittsburg. Mr. Ewers says that he took pains to look up his record, and finds that he has had good education and is of excellent character. He is eager to preach the Gospel. His language is said to be beautiful. His traveling expenses, his keep and small additional gifts would keep him at work in his chosen profession. Mr. Byrnes may be addressed in care of the Railway Y. M. C. A., Columbus, O.

—Mr. L. F. Stevens has resigned the pastorate of the Boyle Heights church, Los Angeles, to return to Portland, Ore. He expects to devote his time to evangelistic work. George Richey, of Monmouth, Ore., has been chosen to succeed Mr. Stevens.

—G. M. Anderson has resigned as pastor of the church at Whittier, Southern California, for the purpose of making an extended visit to Australia, the country of his nativity.

—F. M. Rogers, State Secretary of Southern California, recently dedicated a new church building at Shorb Ave., Los Angeles Bruce Brown is following the dedication with a revival meeting of promise.

—R. W. Abberly, of Magnolia Ave., church, Los Angeles, is engaged in a series of special meetings with a view of conserving the results of the recent Laymen's Missionary Convention. The meetings will culminate with Easter as Decision Day.

—Russell F. Thrapp is conducting a class in First church, Los Angeles, on the Practical Teachings of Jesus. The class meeting is preceded by a supper served by members of the class. The attendance is good.

—George P. Taubman, of First church, Long Beach, seems to have solved the problem of getting the men to church, the Sunday night service, and the prayer-meeting He has a men's class with an average attendance of 130. The prayer-meetings never fall below 200 in attendance, and often reach 300. His Sunday night audiences, like those of Sunday morning, pack the house to the limit. The church has recently increased his salary $500.

—Frank M. Dowling has resigned the pastorate of the church at Fullerton. The brethren are trying to persuade him that this is a mistake.

—The veteran, John C. Hay, has been doing some prospecting in the Antelope Valley under the direction of the State Board.

—Selma, Cal., church, E. T. Nesbit, pastor, will have a new $15,000 home.

—The church building at Hartford City, Ind., was badly damaged by the recent storms.

—A. B. Jones, of Liberty, Mo., has not fully recovered from his recent surgical operation, and is taking treatment in a Kansas City sanitarium.

—The Hiram Church Glee Club gave a much appreciated concert at the Warren, O., church

—R. J. Bennett, pastor at Sharon, Pa., a city of 20,000, has been asked by both daily papers for a weekly sermon for publication.

—S. J. White, in a meeting at Sebring, O., and Lowell C. McPherson, of New York state, spoke to the students at Phillips Bible Institute, Canton, O., on March 21 and 23.

—D. B. Titus, pastor of the newly organized church at Idaho Falls, Ida., reports a first missionary offering of $35. Over 100 are attending the Bible-school, and twelve elders and deacons were recently ordained with a very impressive ceremony.

—C. M. Fillmore preached a sermon on March 28 written by his father, A. D. Fillmore, fifty years ago; the theme, "The Power of the Gospel."

—C. B. Osgood, superintendent of missions in Minneapolis, has organized a new church at Maynard, with 22 charter members; this move is due to the liberality of one family, that of Nimrod Victor. Mr. Osgood is planning to organize also at Milaca.

—A. Lichtenstein, first vice-president of the Hebrew-Christian Alliance of America, spoke in three of the churches of Christ in Dallas, Tex., on March 24; his theme, "The Jew in the Christ."

—The church at Pittsburg, Kan., Sam. I. Smith, pastor, has begun work on its $40,000 building.

—E. J. Sias, formerly pastor at Lincoln, Neb., and for some time a Midland Circuit lecturer, is suffering from nervous prostration, and has canceled all engagements.

—Prof. W. S. Athearn will give an address at Berkeley, Cal., next week.

—C. R. Stauffer's new class of men at Norwood, O., enrolling nearly 200, is organizing a baseball team for the season.

—Prof. A. C. Gray, of Eureka, is leading in a course of ten studies on "The Social Teachings of Jesus" at the mid-week meetings at the Eureka church.

—One of the results of the recent revival at First church, North Yakima, Wash., was the clearing up of all current obligations; it is proposed to pay off the building debt within the present year. W. F. Turner, pastor of this church, did the preaching in the meetings, at which 59 persons were added to the membership of the church. Mr. Turner is now in a revival with W. L. Fisher and First church, Seattle, Wash.

—E. H. Clifford, of East Creighton Ave., Ft. Wayne, Ind., praises the preaching of O. E. Tomes in the meeting just held at East Creighton Ave. church, by which 23 persons were added to the congregation.

—On the opening Sunday of J. J. Tisdall's ministry at Norwood Ave. church, Toledo, O., the Bible-school attendance was so large that several classes were crowded into the balcony. Mr. Tisdall's opening sermon was on "Witnessing."

—Arthur Stout, pastor at Bowling Green, Mo., reports that the contract has been let for the new $15,000 church home to be erected there, and that already $12,000 of the required $15,000 is in hand.

—The congregation at Moline, Ill., presented their retiring pastor, J. A. Barnett, with a handsome token of appreciation. Mr. Barnett began a meeting on April 2 with the Phoenix, Ariz., church, and after that will return to Illinois for general evangelistic work.

—"A watchful waiting policy in the end loses its charms, both in politics and religion," was the conclusion reached in a sermon preached by Austin Hunter at Jackson Blvd. church, Chicago. The topic was "Halting, How Long?"

NOTES FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

Last week one of our ministers in the state of Kentucky sent $2,500 to the Foreign Society on the annuity plan. He will enjoy an income from it while he lives, and after his death the annuity will continue to go to his wife, in the event she survives him, as long as she lives. This is a wise step for any preacher to take.

W. R. Hunt, Chuchow, China, speaking of his work, says: "The country churches are steadily grasping the idea of self-support. They are more and more eager for the purity and reputation of the churches. We are urging that each country church should now support its own school. In one of my churches established on a farm, there are now some 25 members, and they break bread each Lord's day morning and hold evening evangelistic services.

For the month of January Dr. W. N. Lemmon, in charge of the Mary Chiles' Hospital at Manila, Philippine Islands, reports 1,868 treated, 836 surgical treatments given, and sixty patients in the hospital.

The Union Christian Endeavor Society at Cissna Park, Ill., has become a Life-line Society by assuming the support of the evangelist, Rajwar Dayal, at Bilaspur, India, whose salary is $60 per year.

"Christmas has become a fixed celebration in the Japanese Sunday-schools. About 300 adults attended one of our Christmas entertainments in Koishikawa."—P. A. Davey.

In a recent letter Leslie Wolfe writes: "Chaplain Anderson, now aboard the "Brooklyn," which is at present in Philippine waters, preached for us January 2. Chaplain Anderson was a schoolmate with Brother McCallum and Dr. Kline in Transylvania University."

Our schools in Chuchow, China, have made themselves felt in the city. We have the highest grade boys' school there, and the only girls' school in Chuchow. Thirteen boys graduated in January, 5 of whom will probably continue their studies in the University of Nanking. Some of the others will open schools at our out-stations. Eleven boys have been baptized in recent months. Some of the older boys have taken charge of the weekly preaching at the prisons and do much other religious work. They teach their own Sunday-school classes. F. M. Rains.

SUMMER SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

Winona Lake, Indiana, June 23 to June 30, 1916.

The Summer School of Missions will hold its twelfth session at Winona Lake, Indiana, June 23 to June 30, under the auspices of the Interdenominational Committee of the Central West for Missions. The session promises to be one of unusual help and inspiration. The mission study lecturers, Mrs. D. B. Wells and Mrs. J. F. Fisher, the Bible teacher, Miss Angy Manning Taylor, are well known to Summer School audiences. The books to be studied are Old Spain in New America, by Rev. Robt McLean; World Missions and World Peace, by Caroline Atwater Mason; Our South American Neighbors, by Bishop Homer C. Stuntz, and South American Heroes, by Miss Margarette Daniels. Normal class work for those preparing to teach mission study classes will be in charge of experienced leaders. Informal vesper hours with the missionaries and inspirational evening addresses will close the day. There will be many special attractions for the young women.

The fact that the attendance is increasing from year to year, that many return for each session, is the strongest proof that the Summer School of Missions fills a need among our host of missionary women.

EXTENSION CONFERENCE.

The Interdenominational Committee of the Central West for Missions, is prepared to send a trained leader to any town whose churches will unite interdenominationally for a week of mission and Bible study. The text books for the conference are the Bible and the current mission study books, both home and foreign. Nearly two hundred such conferences have already been held very successfully, it being a feature in some places to hold such conferences yearly. The expense to each church is small. For further information, address,

WHAT IF WE SHOULD FORGET EASTER APRIL 23?

FOUR HUNDRED BOYS AND GIRLS, now the comfortable, happy wards of the Church in six homes of the association would be left without food, without shelter, without love or compelled to find refuge in some Catholic institution.

ONE HUNDRED BABIES MOTHERLESS that now find tender [illegible] in the heart of the Church of Christ would be left to the cold charity of the Christless world. Next to a mother's love, is Christian love. Shall the babies have it?

NINETY-THREE AGED, INDIGENT DISCIPLES OF CHRIST many of them choice saints, would suffer the pain of hunger, cold and nakedness or the keener pain of public charity. To cast them into poorhouses is to send Christ to the poorhouse. What we do to them, we do to him.

SCORES OF WIDOWS unaided in the burden of their widowhood would break and go down to dishonor and ruin.

THE CHURCH WOULD SUFFER by our failure to provide generously for her wards. The Lodge and the Roman Catholic Church would gain and the world would condemn.

The California Christian Home

A new member has just been added to the National Benevolent Association's already large family of institutions. March 15 was the date and Long Beach, Cal., the place of its birth. This new home came into existence in response to an insistent demand from the churches of California for an opportunity to express, in tangible form, their interest in and sympathy for the poor. Almost a year ago, L. J. Massie, of Long Beach, Cal., offered to donate a property worth $10,000 as the first cottage of a group which he hopes to see dedicated to the care of unfortunate and needy children. In response to this generous offer, the Evangelizing Board of the Christian Missionary Society of Southern California, with some twenty-five churches, by formal action, requested the National Benevolent Association to accept Mr. Massie's offer and to take steps at once to establish a home for children in Long Beach.

After a careful canvass of the situation, it became apparent that while there is great need in California for a home for children, especially for the kind of work the association is doing, there is a far more urgent need for a home for the aged. Indeed, the need is so great that our failure to supply it is a reflection upon our cause. In the language of our veteran brother preacher, John Hay, "not to provide for these aged, needy brethren in our midst is little short of a scandal."

At a meeting, therefore, held in the office of State Secretary F. M. Rogers, on March 15, 1916, the decision was reached, Mr. Massie concurring, to open a home for aged, indigent Disciples of Christ. This decision was recorded with the distinct understanding that we should open at once a vigorous campaign in behalf of a home for children.

A temporary organization to serve until the time of the State Convention was formed with W. J. Morrison, Mrs. F. M. Rogers, L. J. Massie, Mrs. Nettie Burke, and Mrs. H. L. Pillsbury, of Long Beach; Mrs. L. M. Hatfield, Melvin Welty, E. J. Curry and Mrs. Olah Hallam of Los Angeles; C. C. Chapman, of Fullerton; W. E. Crabtree, of San Diego; Chas. Boulier, of Pomona; Frank G. Tyrrell, of Pasadena; Geo. W. Brewster, of San Francisco; Ellis Purlee, of Sacramento; and Chas. Beal, of Fresno, Cal.; and R. E. Dunlap, of Phoenix, Ariz., as the Board of Directors. W. J. Morrison, was elected president; Mrs. L. M. Hatfield, vice-president; Mrs. F. M. Rogers, secretary, and L. J. Massie, treasurer. A full complement of committees was appointed with L. J. Massie as Chairman of the House and Grounds Committee; Dr. L. P. Crutcher, Chairman of the Health Committee; Mrs. L. J. Massie, Chairman and Mrs. C. A. Buffam, Secretary of the Wardrobe and Supply Committee; M. F. McNie, Chairman of the Admission Committee. These are all of Long Beach and may be reached at that address. Mrs. L. G. Thompson, is the Los Angeles Chairman of the Wardrobe and Supply Committee.

The property donated by Brother Massie and received and dedicated to Christ by the brethren in California for the care and comfort of "the least of these," his brethren, is one of the most attractive in Long Beach. It is located on the slope of Signal Hall, overlooking the city and the ocean. The property consists of one acre of land with modern improvements. The house is of bungalow style and will accommodate comfortably at least twelve persons with their attendants. There is a good laundry, in a detached building, and a fine, modern barn and chicken house. The house and grounds are screened from public view on the north side by a row of richly productive orange trees and on the south by a row of bountiful bearing lemon trees. The front approach is made under the shade of the over-hanging fronds of stately palms and amid a bewildering profusion of roses, lilies, and geraniums.

This gift of beauty and of service is intended as the beginning only of a larger work. Plans are already on foot for the enlargement of the present building, for acquisition of more land and for the securing of the funds needed to erect suitable building for the care of children. For this purpose, Mr. Phillips, of Long Beach, has made a gift of land, valued at $2,000 and two other brethren have said that they would give $500 each. C. C. Chapman has had in mind for some time a worthy work of benevolence for our people on the Pacific Coast. Our California brethren never do things by halves. It is safe to predict that they will carry their plans for a work of mercy to a glorious consummation.

This home at Long Beach is of far more than local interest. Its opening should awaken universal sympathy and support. Comparatively few of the people of California are native. They are from everywhere. Of our people, now needing aid, we found three in the Hallenbeck Home of Los Angeles, two of them from Colorado; one in the County Home from Missouri; and one in a Roman Catholic institution from Ohio This sister is appealing to one of our ministers to help her find a home among her own people. The indications are that the first persons to be admitted to the new home will be one sister from Indiana and two from Illinois. This home will probably always be filled with aged Disciples of Christ from our churches in the East. Attracted by the friendly climate, many aged people are being drawn to California with the hope of prolonging their days. Overtaken by misfortune they should have the sympathy and compassionate love of the home churches, where they have lived and served for years. Brethren of the country for the sake of old times, for the sake of the Christ and his church, let us all have fellowship in the support of this "Saints' Rest" in California.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Science and Faith

IN THE INQUIRY REGARDING THE PROBABILITY OF THE SURVIVAL AFTER DEATH IT WOULD SEEM THAT SCIENCE OUGHT TO HAVE MUCH TO SAY. YET IT IS A CURIOUS FACT THAT VERY LITTLE HAS BEEN DONE IN THIS FIELD BY THOSE WHO FOLLOW THE PATHS OF EMPIRICAL INVESTIGATION.

It is therefore quite impossible to make any affirmation as to what science as such has to say regarding the future life. The very best that can be done is to note the utterances of certain men whose names are of value in the world of the physical and mental sciences. And it must be remembered that the word of any such man is far from interpreting his colleagues in the broad domain in which he is engaged.

It must be understood that one of the reasons for this very meagre concern of scientific workers with the theme of survival grows in no small degree out of the newness of all labor in these domains. The entire movement which has had for its purpose the newer investigation of the phenomena of life, whether physical or psychic, is much less than a century old. Since the appearance of Darwin's "Origin of Species" the methods of inquiry have completely changed, the principles formerly employed have ceased to have value, and older theories have been discarded.

In this new adventure of the human spirit in the eager inquiry after the facts of life, there has been so much ground to traverse that few scientists have as yet found time or inclination to turn their attention to this investigation of what goes on after death. Some are merely too busy to take up that line. Others are wholly uninterested, deeming the subject beyond scientific reach. And some frankly say that science itself is as yet very young, and must be left to enter this field in its own time and manner.

Very great service has been rendered by a few observers who have made the records of the Societies for Psychical Research a storehouse of useful and suggestive information on many subjects connected with that of personal survival. The world is far more indebted than it yet knows to the untiring labors and the eager enthusiasm of Frederic Myers and his colleagues and successors. That company has included some of the most illustrious names of our generation. And at times there have been intimations that substantial advance was being made. We know today much more about telepathy, thought transference, the subconscious mind, and spiritistic phenomena than did an earlier age. But these are hardly more than the by-products of the more serious quest. And up to date the interpreters of the movement affirm with frankness that no clear and demonstrable proofs of the life to come are forthcoming.

Probably it would be only fair to say that at present the larger number of scientific men are sceptical, believing that all hope of continuance perishes with the brain. They would accept the words of Professor Muensterburg, "No miracle can break the laws of nature, can push a single molecule from its path, or create a sensation in a mind when the body does no work, when the brain no longer functions." Yet there are great scientists, like Lord Kelvin, Dr. Osler and Sir Oliver Lodge, who are firm believers in survival on scientific grounds. Professor James has ably argued that the obvious fact of the connection between the soul and the brain may imply not the production of mind by the brain, but its transmission. Scientists of high rank believe the assertion that the soul dies with the body to be only an inference, and perhaps a mistaken one.

It is therefore nothing less than presumption for anyone to assert in the name of science that we do not survive death. Further than this, it is only an attitude of prejudice that can justify the declaration that it is impossible to discover whether or not we survive. That would assume that the last word has been spoken, and the last experiment tried. And when one recalls the statement just made, that science is as yet very young, as indeed is also true of the world and human life upon it, the superficial nature of such dogmatic assertions is revealed.

And if the soul survives, as the principles of science severely applied would admit as at least possible, does it retain such consciousness of personality as to link the future with past experience? To many of us any sort of continued life that did not carry with it the persistence of our own possessions of memory would seem little worth. Yet writers from Plato to Maeterlinck have been at pains to point out the fact that memory is one of the first and most easily lost of our possessions, and is by no means essential to the persistence of personality, or even of consciousness. In sleep memory lapses. The content of memory is ever variable. We are constantly losing from memory important portions of its material. How far might that process of attrition go consistent with any satisfying theory of recognized identity? Must we not confess that the entire problem of personality is as yet too little understood to make it possible for one to insist upon this or that theory of persistent self-consciousness?

Yet on all grounds it would seem reasonable that if the soul survives, its identity is not lost by any process of absorption into the infinity of being. And as for future knowledge of ourselves and those with whom we have common interests both here and there, we know that such knowledge is a part of the rich possession of the soul here. Why should we cease to know, or know less in any later and expanding form that life may take?

We have to confess that we do not see far into the mystery. And as long as this is the case, one ought to discipline his spirit to speak with reticence. Many there are who speak volubly and with assurance. It has been our observation that those in whose souls the hope of eternal life burns most brightly speak but little of it, hushed into reserve by the very greatness of the idea, and the solemn mystery in which our yet imperfect life finds it involved. But some assurances we have which to the sensitive mind are sufficient. The psalmists and prophets believed that there was an intimacy with God which made all considerations of life and death nothing worth. The apostles made clear, in measured but confident terms, their faith in the great hereafter. The saints of every generation have comforted their souls with the calm and happy expectation. And the Master himself lived evermore in

The New Protestantism

BY E. L. POWELL

A Sermon Preached at First Christian Church, Louisville.

IT IS not easy to analyze the spirit of an age. I should say that the temper of our own country is cynical, critical, accusing, disapproving, pessimistic. Nothing is right or even partially right. The times are out of joint. On all the highways of life is the signboard on which is written "Beware." There are few paths on which we find placed the signboard, "This way to the heights." Our forests are gloom-haunted and devils are in ambush. Our mountains are all volcanoes belching forth fire. Our atmosphere is germ-laden. Babies are not to be kissed, for there is poison in the kiss. Our social institutions are awry and our boasted civilization seems to be moth-eaten. One looks and longs and prays for the light from the hills.

Never at any time in the world's history was there so much needed the trumpet exhortation, "Lift up your eyes unto the hills whence cometh our help." We are obsessed by slums, saloons, graft, the social evil, political corruption, business dishonesty, predatory wealth. We find ourselves dwelling in charnel houses. We are living the greater part of our days in the tombs. We no longer seem to have the capacity for ringing, joyous, exuberant, thrilling laughter. The atmosphere is sultry, it is oppressive. Something is boding—either a brilliant glory or an awful catastrophe.

> "And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

DWELLING IN DARKNESS.

I said to a gentleman, a member of one of our clubs in this city, "Do you find any note or speech of encouragement from your associates in the presence of world conditions?" "No," said he.

The voice of our age is strident, scolding. The music is discordant. There is only on every hand the wrinkled brow of thought; the calm visage has disappeared. And yet, friends, there stands the truth of God: "This is your victory over the world, even your faith." Who that hath need of faith may work miracles? How shall there again be given beauty to color, form and living lineaments to cold marble, unless there be recovered the attitude of confidence, of buoyant, elastic courage and the splendid glowing enthusiasm born of the certainty that this world shall one day be fashioned in all of its parts into the image of God's dear son?

I have chosen tonight a subject which has been entitled "The New Protestantism." I believe that the one dominant, clear, vibrant note of this "New Protestantism" is the claim, the imperative demand, that we shall be set free from this awful, oppressive—what shall I call it? A gloomy, death-killing atmosphere. There is no need for this temper, this mood, this attitude. Is it a habit? Is it the outcome of the constant association with the things that unquestionably are evil and our failure to have fellowship with the things that are equally unquestionably true and good and beautiful?

CYNICAL INDIFFERENCE.

Stop for a moment and think. If you have a word concerning the church, is it hopeful? Since when have you dropped into the croak of the raven? If we speak of the church today, any of us, those in the pew and those in the pulpit equally, it is in the mood of discouragement and depression and gloom.

We see the empty pew and not the possible crowded congregation. We see the cynical indifference, but not the possible glowing enthusiasm. We invite sympathy with our discontent rather than sympathy with our hope. We are asking that men in this mighty propaganda shall ally themselves with our invalidism rather than with our conscious strength. Shall we take stock of our resources? Shall we find our normal mood by a return to the olden glory when the church was young, when humanity was young, and when the notes of the springtime were sounded on every hand?

REINTERPRETING THE GOSPEL DYNAMIC.

Here is the Apostle Paul, the mighty champion, the mighty protagonist of this real Christianity, facing conditions that were as bad if not worse than the conditions of our present time; and with that smile of confidence, courage and an enthusiasm born of a mighty faith he faces these oppressions and evils and sins of his day by declaring, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth in His Word." Paul matched the power of the Gospel against the sensuous and sensual materialism of Corinth, the militarism of Rome, and the culture of Athens, cold and conscienceless, and has no sort of doubt whatsoever as to the final victory. Our New Protestantism is asking that we reinterpret this dynamic, this divine power, and thereby loose it and let it go in its tremendous redemptive work.

What is the objective of the Gospel? It is the salvation of the souls of men from greed, from ambition, from cruelties, from lust, from all those influences and agencies that disintegrate the spiritual, and through the salvation of the souls of men to save every custom, every law, every government, every civilization, fashioning all of them in harmony with the mind and will and spirit and righteousness of our Lord Jesus Christ. That is the objective of the gospel; that is the program of the gospel.

The method of its accomplishment, the power which is to bring to pass this mighty redemption, is blood. The power of God unto salvation is redemption through suffering, through pain, through war, through the shame and self-reproach of sin, through the bitter and heart-breaking experiences of the individuals and of the race. That thought, I believe, is coming to be more vivid than ever before. It is only fire that will set free the music in the log that we have placed on the andiron. It is only the strain and the stress, the pain and the agony that can liberate from all of the power of the devil this mighty, this immortal thing which we call the soul of man.

REDEMPTION IN WAR.

Therefore, with all my heart I believe that the work of redemption is going on in war-stricken Europe. I believe that there are going to spring from every battlefield the flaming angels of sympathy and of love and of tenderness and of service. I believe that through this world experience we shall have brought forth in terms more vivid than ever before in the history of humanity the redemptive power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The cross of Christ is emphasized, actualized, given its full meaning in the awful experience of humanity. Only martyr ages have interpreted the cross as redeeming. The Gospel of Jesus Christ, as the redemptive power from sin through blood, can only be manifested in a time, in a period when humanity is nailed to the cross. We are saved from selfishness, saved from softness, saved from materialistic standards of life, saved from narrowness and bigotry, saved from cruelties, saved from those things that the gospel came into the world to set men free from, in the comprehensive phrase of Scripture, destroying the works of the devil.

Now the thought I have in mind is this: the work of redemption is going on. It is going on in strict accord and in strict harmony with the divine method of God, as made known to us in the monumental and historic expression of that method in the cross of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. We are saved not by some magical application of the blood of Jesus taken from the outside and in some kind of way, we know not how, applied to our souls; but we are saved by that God as appropriated and incorporated in our own experiences. Suffering is the savior of the world.

The opening years of the twentieth century are interpreting as never before, not in the terms of theology, but in terms of living experience, the gospel of the cross of Jesus Christ. Why should we not have faith? Why should not hope with reference to the future be buoyant? Why should there not be the optimistic mood? Over against all the evils of the world today stands this flaming angel of the gospel, with fearless front and drawn sword and gleaming eye. The gospel is still the power of God unto salvation, and though in its working age-long periods may be required, the end is just as inevitable and certain as that the sun shall rise tomorrow morning.

SAVE THE SOUL FIRST.

Nor is there in the permission of all these cruelties which are redemptive anything inconsistent with the divine love, since the end of it all, the final goal towards which the whole process tends, is benevolent, the salvation of the world and the redemption of humanity. Am I sounding here rightly this note of the New Protestantism? The New Protestantism is claiming the use of the old weapon as contradistinguished from art, from science, from diplomacy, from philosophy, from legislation, from all artificial agencies and means and appliances.

The soul has to be saved, and then your art will be saved and your science will be saved and your civilization will be saved. You cannot save the soul by the things of its own creation. The things of its own creation are things that are wrong.

Its philosophy is wrong, its art is wrong, its civilization is wrong. That is the admitted fact. We cannot take the things that are wrong to save the soul which has created them. The soul is wrong; is there any power that can minister to a mind diseased bringing forth devils instead of angels? Is there anything that can come into touch with this marvelous capacity if God is perverted in the heart, and set it free to bring forth material creations that shall be in harmony with the mind and will of God, the gospel of blood, the gospel that has to be interpreted in the sighs and groans and agonies of humanity? The gospel is the power, the redemptive power, the very word "dunamis," dynamite, is used. The power of God unto salvation.

A NEW DISCOVERY.

Now, a second note in this New Protestantism is most encouraging. We have gotten hold or are within sight of the practical use of God. I feel as though we were just on the eve of a great discovery, namely, that of bringing actually and vitally the resources of the infinite God into the accomplishment of our tasks, into the carrying forward of our work in the world. Science is telling us to-day that the thing we speak of as material is really spiritual, that energy, life, movement is in everything. I touch this table, and it seems to me inert and dead, and yet it is all vibrant with energy, movement, infinite particles constantly employed in their ceaseless and endless activity. Here is the thought: Is the energy that we call electricity any more real than the energy of thought, the energy of love? Do we not believe that electricity can be harnessed so that it may drive street cars and light cities? Do we not believe that Niagara has some hidden energy in it that in late years has been linked up with the dynamo and giving forth in practical fashion its might and its sublime energy? What is that life in heat, in light, in electricity? Is it different from the life that we call spiritual life? Is not God in the sap that flows up through the trunk and outward to all the branches bringing forth the fruitage? Is not God actually, savingly, redeemingly at work in this marvelous spiritual thing, the soul of man, ever healing, evermore constructing, evermore building it, evermore fulfilling his purpose concerning it?

Is he not doing that thing as really and as truly, whether we will it so or not, as he does in these natural processes, in the ongoings of these elemental forces? In this wonderful psalm which I read a moment ago, in presence of the wreck and complete overthrow of all nature seemingly, the Psalmist says: Do not get discouraged, do not feel disheartened; there is a river that makes glad the city of our God. God is in the midst of her. In the language of the scientist the Psalmist declared the immanence of God. God is in the trenches, God is in the guns, God is in the bitter experiences of the battlefield. God is in the activities and pursuits, right or wrong, that are going on in the world. We used to tell the story of the boy who was not affrighted in the presence of the storm and declared "Father is at the helm." That brings before you the outside God, and it has its comfort and its inspiration, but that which science and theology to-day are teaching us is that God is in the shop, in the machinery, in the coals that make the blaze, in the wheel that drives the ship, in the timbers out of which the ship was built, in the knowledge that can fashion the ship to ride the wave and meet the tempest. God is in the midst of her. She shall not be moved. This old world of ours has the living divine immanent God at work in every part of her, and she shall not be wrecked, she shall not go against the rocks, she shall not go down into the depths, she shall yet make harbor, although the sails may be torn and the tackle may be damaged.

GOD IS EVERYWHERE AT WORK.

The new Protestantism is affirming the actual reality of God's presence. I cannot understand what it is to believe the omnipresent God unless it is an omnipresent life and energy and agency. What good does it do me in the midst of my struggles and sins to be told that God is everywhere unless I know that he is right here in this agony, that he is right in me, in the blood flowing through my veins, in the brain that gets weary in the very stress and strain and is forced to utter despair and hopelessness time and again?

God is in the world, and Browning catches the right note of the new Protestantism when he says the spring is going to come, the buds are going to burst, the hillside is going to be dew-pearled. All is right with the world in the sense that God is in it, and in every part of it. All is right with the world, God is in his heaven. Yes, but God is in his earth. God is in the forge, God is in the shop, God is in the saloon. That man had a thought as he lifted the glass of grog. Something shot him. Who did it? God is in the gamblers' den. God is on the battlefield. God is in the sick room. God is immanent, making the wrath of man to praise him, making it presently to come to pass that he will break the bowl and shatter the spear in sunder and burn the chariot in the fire. That seems to be the message of the new Protestantism. But I find that I cannot finish the sermon which I had prepared. I shall be more than rewarded if I can set over against the gloom, the pessimism, the discontent, the discouragement which seems to be in the world and in the church, in our art, in our literature, in our poetry, not so much so in our science, but in our theology, if over against that I can say we are conscious to-day as never before that the gospel interpreted in the terms of the cross is the redemptive power of humanity.

"ALL'S RIGHT WITH THE WORLD."

We are conscious as never before of the fullness and richness of the divine life actually at work in the world carrying forward humanity as the life from the soil carries its power and energy forward until finally it breaks forth in the glory of the springtime in foliage, in flower and in fruit. Strengthen the hands that hang down and the feeble knees, blow the trumpet and cease to be lulling yourselves into somnolence by the minor strains of the age. Come out of the tomb. Sepulchres are bursting, prison houses are opening, fetters are snapping, liberty is flourishing. God is in his world, humanity is on the march, nothing is dead, all things are living. There is a swing and a stride and a mighty onward sweep of the race, and by and by we shall find that this great earth war has only cast over us a nightmare; that we have been, as it were, men in blindness, dazed for the moment, while the sun still shines bright and the stars still glow and God still lives.

The Church and the Newspaper

BY JAMES KEELEY

(Editor of the Chicago Herald.)

From an address delivered before the Church and Publicity Conference held recently in Chicago.

NEWSPAPERS and churches are in the same business; that is, to better conditions in the communities in which they exist. We may not walk arm in arm down the same thoroughfare, but we are on that thoroughfare and we ought to get a little closer together.

Both church and newspaper are criticized for not doing more, but with all their faults they are the most powerful agencies in the community for good. When vice poisons our community, an attack initiated by the churches doesn't make much impression until the newspapers spread the information. When young women are lured to destruction in the cabarets, the newspapers and churches cry aloud against the outrage until the whole community arouses itself and action is taken.

Milk is kept pure for the babies; vice is lessened; criminals in and out of politics are (sometimes) apprehended; improvements are launched and completed; the sick and suffering are better cared for and the moral tone of the whole community is raised by the co-operation of the churches with the newspapers and of the newspapers with the churches.

DID CHRIST ADVERTISE?

While the people came to Christ sometimes, the reports show that most of the time he went out into the streets and market places where the largest number of people congregated and there advertised righteousness.

He believed in going where people were, giving his message in language they understood and he thus created and stimulated a demand for what he had to offer. Aren't most of us, or rather, until recently weren't a large number of us —businessmen, churchmen, preachers— rather inclined to wait until business came to us instead of going out after it?

You gentlemen who are the guests of the Chicago Advertising Association, you pastors of various flocks represent the House of the Lord, the biggest establishment on earth, whose charter for doing business was issued by the King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

Your commission, as Mark, the reporter, puts it, is "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." You were not told how to do it; you were told to do it. This is your assignment.

Are you carrying out your commission to preach or to advertise the gospel to every creature when in a number of cases you minister only to those who come to your church? Aren't there many discouraged and sad persons outside the church that don't know that the House of the Lord, which has about one thousand branch houses in Chicago, has a full stock of hope and joy and peace and consolation to fill their need?

How will you let the lonely persons in Chicago—and there are tens of thousands of them—know that they will find friends inside the House of the Lord unless you advertise the fact? And when you do advertise hope and joy for the discouraged and sad, and friends for the lonely, will you deliver the goods to them when they come? I will let you answer.

DELIVERING THE GOODS.

I am not here to outline a program for advertising the gospel. The lesson from business houses which might be learned by churches is to set aside a certain amount of money each year for advertising purposes and find a man to spend the money wisely. If advertising is good to create a demand for food products why shouldn't it be just as good for the gospel?

Recently in the East there have been one or more campaigns advertising the church and the gospel. I understood that in the judgment of the people who were sponsor for those campaigns, they paid and paid well.

If I were asked to make suggestions as to what should be done in this line, I would ask why it isn't possible for a group of men to be appointed to represent all the churches of the city and advertise the things of the church as a whole on a big scale? I believe that Chicago would not lag behind its Eastern neighbors in the support of such a campaign.

National Missionary Congress

Some of the leaders who will have part on the program of the National Missionary Congress, to be held in Washington, D. C., this month under the auspices of the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

THE program of the National Missionary Congress to be held in Washington, D. C., April 26 to 30, excels in men who possess fresh experience and skill to report what they have seen and heard. The speakers will be recognized also as students of missionary problems, not only in America but in the ends of the earth and their addresses at the Congress will sound an authoritative note.

Each session of the Congress will be devoted to the discussion of a general theme. On one morning the possibilities of missionary achievement will be discussed by several speakers from the point of view of actual experience in parishes, in groups of parishes and in entire communions. An afternoon will be given to the present day world appeal to American laymen and this will be presented by representatives of the Moslem World, the Hindu World, the Buddhist World and the Christian World. Other themes for the sessions of the Congress are the Christward movement in the non-Christian world, practical ways in which laymen can best use their property for the extension of Christ's Kingdom, the adequacy of the gospel to meet the social needs of the nations, and how to increase lay initiative and the sense of lay responsibility for the missionary tasks of the Church.

MEN IN THE LEAD.

Some of the men who are to participate in the program are:

Robert E. Speer, who was the presiding officer of the Panama Congress and returned from a visitation of mission stations in the Far East only a few months ago.

John R. Mott, chairman of the Edinburgh Conference Continuation Committee, also at the Panama Congress. Mr. Mott has visited Europe twice since the beginning of the present war.

Hubert C. Herring, one of the foremost home missionary statesmen of the United States; General Secretary of the National Council of Congregational churches.

Shailer Mathews, President of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, recently returned from a remarkable trip to Japan.

George Innes, missionary layman who gave up the active management of a prosperous business to devote his time to mission work.

J. Campbell White, now president of Wooster College, the organizer and for ten years the leader of the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

E. N. Poteat, who has made a thorough study of the Christian use of property and has inspired a multitude of men to invest their lives and their money in Christian service.

George Sherwood Eddy, just home from a wonderful evangelistic campaign in India.

N. W. Rowell, K. C., of Toronto, leader of the Liberal party in the Provincial House of Parliament of Ontario; one of the ablest advocates of missions among the public men of today.

W. D. Mackenzie, President of the Hartford Theological Seminary, widely known because of his continual close touch with world movements.

Hon. Amos. P. Wilder, for years the consul general of the United States at Hongkong and Shanghai. He knows the Chinese as do few Americans.

Silas McBee, editor of the "Constructive Quarterly," who is in continuous correspondence with ecclesiastical leaders all over the world.

Bishop Arthur S. Lloyd, President of the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Raymond Robins, one of America's foremost students of social problems, who has just conducted an unparalleled series of meetings among the college students of America.

John P. Jones, of the Hartford School of Missions; for thirty years a missionary in India: author of authoritative books on India life and thought.

Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, Bishop of Tennessee and Chancellor of the University of the South.

William B. Millar, General Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement; organizer of the army and navy department of the Young Men's Christian Association.

S D. Gordon, author of the "Quiet Talk" books which have been sold to the extent of more than a million copies in over twenty languages.

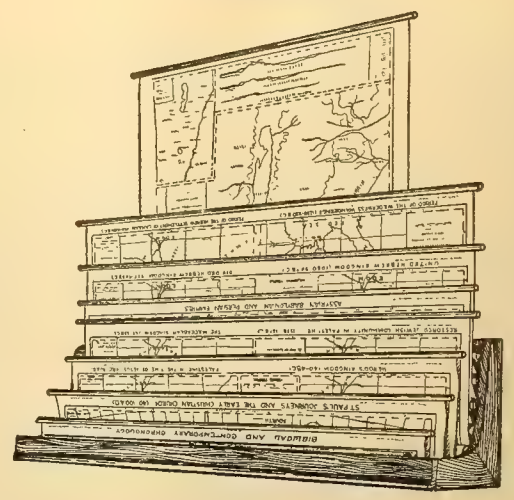
John F. Goucher, a conspicuous leader in educational and missionary circles, whose investments in world missions have brought striking returns.

Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of the Methodist Episcopal church, who has been in intimate contact with missions in Mexico since attending the Panama Congress.

James L. Barton, an authority upon almost every phase of Christian Missions; Foreign Secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

Fred B. Fisher, organizer of great missionary conventions; Associate General Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

William F. Oldham, organizer and founder of educational institutions in Malaysia; former Methodist Bishop for Southern Asia; now Corresponding Secretary of the Methodist Board of Foreign Missions.



Former Lieutenant-Governor A. J. Wallace, of California, an outstanding layman and traveler.

The speakers mentioned do not exhaust the list, but indicate the character of the program of the congress. It would be difficult to imagine what greater inspiration the manhood of America could receive than that which will be given by the addresses of these men.

New York State To Be Cleaned Up

One Thousand Meetings to Be Held in Every Corner of the Empire State in Anti-Saloon League's Big Drive for Nation al Prohibition.

ARRANGEMENTS for the biggest dry campaign that New York has ever witnessed for the moulding of sentiment for national Prohibition has been completed and the time definitely set. One thousand meetings will be held over the entire state by the ablest men that the League can obtain.

No village of 200 inhabitants will be slighted, reports the New Republic. In the larger cities meetings will be held in different parts of the town so that every man, woman and child can be reached by the message the Anti-Saloon League is sending out.

In Albany, Troy, Bingham, Elmira, Schnectady and other cities approximating their size, there will be from three to five meetings. Buffalo and Rochester will each have at least twelve meetings, while in the city of New York there will be held 100 gatherings in different parts of the big city.

There will be an opportunity during the big drive for everyone within the Empire State to get in touch with the big Prohibition movement that is spreading rapidly over the entire world.

WET POLITICIANS WORRIED.

While the meetings are primarily on behalf of national Prohibition, they will bring nothing but misery to those authorities at Albany who stand between the people and their right to vote upon the liquor question in their own community. Each of the speakers will have something definite to say about the New York liquor regime in addition to giving his message in favor of the Sheppard amendment of the national constitution.

Each member of Congress from the state will be especially invited to attend the largest meeting in his particular district. Other public men, irrespective of their attitude on Prohibition, will be made welcome at the meetings.

"The New York campaign," said Milo G. Kelser, who is in charge of the speakers' bureau of the National Dry Movement, "will be different from all its predecessors. Other campaigns have simply covered a few of the more important places. This will reach every community of importance in the state and will carry the message of national Prohibition into many communities where it has not had a hearing.

"The pastors of the state are up in arms. They have smelt blood in the fight against the liquor evil. Last year more than 100 new towns went dry. The pastors are beginning to believe that there is, after all, hope for New York."

SOME OF THE "BIG GUNS."

Among the speakers who have been assigned to take part in the New York campaign are: Captain Richmond P. Hobson, Hon. Malcolm R. Patterson, Hon. Robert B. Glenn, Dr. Adam Clarke Bane, Dr. Sam W. Small, Dr. Edwin I. Stearns, Major Dan Morgan Smith, Dr. Louis Albert Banks, Dr. Madison Swadener, Hon. John G. Woolley, Dr. George W. Morrow, Dr. George W. Young, Hon. Frederick Landis, Hon. Wayne B. Wheeler, Dr. George R. Stuart, Dr. Ira Landrith.

Through these meetings the League expects to reach at least 1,000,000 of the people of New York.

The report that the Anti-Saloon League had this movement under consideration has aroused keen interest among members of Congress, even during these distracting days of international politics. The New York delegation, almost to a man, are making careful inquiry as to just how the League's work may affect them. In a closely contested election the candidate's fate even in wet New York may determine, not by the success of his party, but by his individual stand on the subject of national Prohibition.

HOBSON A LEADER.

Captain Hobson, the hero of the Merrimac, has for years been recognized as one of the ablest orators in the dry movement. As a member of Congress, he introduced the resolution favoring national Prohibition which received a majority vote in the House of Representatives in December, 1914.

Our Readers' Opinions

MINISTERS AND THE MINISTRY.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

Recently you published testimonies from a number of prominent preachers to the effect that. if they had their lives to live over again, they would choose the ministry. In every case the men were those who belong to the exceptional class of ministers; those whose lives have been cast in pleasant places; who have had good salaries; men whose talents entitled them to prominent places, etc. Now that is not a fair test. What would the fellow at the bottom say, if he felt free to give his honest expression? Take the men who have been dragging about the country, moving almost every year, living at a starving wage, etc.

Now I suggest: that you give the opinions of AVERAGE ministers; make an effort to get their honest expression, without speaking with reservation. You can only get such an expression by assuring them that their communications will be held in the greatest confidence.

Why is it that so many ministers are quitting the ministry?

Why is it that so many ministers would quit, if they saw any opportunity to make a living elsewhere?

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE?

EDITORS THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

I wish first of all, to thank you most heartily for your recent editorial on "Following the gleam."

It did not help me quite so much as it would if it had included all the troublesome facts.

Congregations of Disciples are conservative and do not "grant you the right to do your own thinking and to form your own conclusions."

I do not think I know of a pulpit in the South that would engage a minister if he be suspected even of holding as true the specifications which you mentioned.

The principles of evolution and biblical criticism go to the heart of his message. They constitute his permanent method of seeking truth and God and of taking them to the people. It is the contest of the traditional against the modern method.

When a person adopts the traditional method, the traditional things become his message.

They are unsatisfying and in many instances repulsive to one who has the other viewpoint.

You are entirely correct in what you say about reformers in general and about one's stripping himself of his following and about one's being sure that he has a vital truth.

But such questions as the following still remain: Shall he seek another communion where people are more open-minded? Or to be minute, What should one do in the state in which I live when he has adopted the methods of Historic Criticism?

To let it be known that he looks at things that way is to strip him of his following, is to raise opposition on the part of nearly all the preachers and all the churches and is to reduce his work to the smallest compass.

I have spent more than twenty years on these things and what shall be done with this fund of information? I should like to try really the experiment of Christian union. It cannot be done here.

We in this section are rapidly crystallizing. There is no prophet. A certain stereotyped course is prescribed or looked for and stereotyped results are demanded. Wanting these all is wrong, and a new preacher must be had. F. H. J.

RELIGIOUS JOURNALISM.

[The following is a part of a letter from a woman of professional prominence, and wide acquaintance.]

I am very glad for the editorials in the "Century" and for the "Century" as a whole. It is the one bright spot in religious journalism today. I wonder if the Church has any conception of how rapidly it is losing its intellectual members and those who, while never personally affiliated with the Church, belong there by all the traditions of their past. My work brings me in contact with all classes of business and professional women, and in nine cases out of ten they are indifferent to the Church if not openly antagonistic. Yet they are deeply impregnated with social betterment ideals and a desire to meet their problems in the true spirit of Christ.

It almost seems as if the Church now, in having its ideals shaped by the conservative membership, is losing far more than it would if it gave to the people more of the results of modern historical criticism. I did not plan to write so freely, but the present day conditions make one do serious thinking.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE NEW HOSPITAL

THE Disciples of Christ everywhere, and particularly those of Kansas City, are to be congratulated on the completion of the main building of the new Christian Church Hospital, which is opened this week in that city.

It is an enterprise in which Mr. R. A. Long has had a foremost part, as in so many other noble and progressive movements. The Disciples of Kansas City have rallied admirably to the work of building and equipping this fine plant. Up to date about three hundred and thirty thousand dollars have been expended.

There are seventy-five rooms, and one hundred and fifty beds. The arrangements are of the most modern and scientific character. A notable staff of physicians and surgeons has been chosen to have charge.

It is expected that ultimately there will be several other buildings added. Opportunity is given Disciples everywhere to have fellowship in this enterprise, one-third of whose work is to be free. One hundred dollars furnishes a ward bed. Five hundred dollars furnishes a private room. Five thousand dollars furnishes a small ward.

We extend heartiest felicitations to the Christian Church Hospital Association, of which Mr. J. W. Perry is president.

THE AMERICAN PROBLEM

OF FAR more vital significance than any program of military preparation for the repulse of imagined foes, is that of actual preparedness to meet the internal conditions of our citizenship in the United States.

Our cities and our frontiers present large areas of practically virgin soil for the preaching of religion, the greatest of all solvents of the vexed questions of modern life.

Our population is the most cosmopolitan in the world, and therefore at once the most virile and the most dangerous. It is Christianity alone which can turn to account these mighty forces of released vitality, and restrain them within the limits of ordered and purposeful activity.

We have long recognized the duty of foreign missions as an obligation not to be forgotten or slighted. We have not always been true to the more immediate and not less urgent need of evangelization in our own land.

The American Christian Missionary Society is the representative of all our churches in extending the area of Gospel efficiency in the needy portions of our own continent, and the first Sunday in May is the time at which the Annual Offering is taken.

No church will wish to omit this paramount cause from the calendar of generous offerings. This day is a most important one, and should be observed by all our churches.

THE TRUTH ABOUT PREPAREDNESS

IT IS a credit to the alertness of the American people that the very vigorous agitation in behalf of increased armament has aroused widespread interest, and created in the minds of a large section of the nation the feeling that America is threatened with serious dangers, and must prepare for emergencies by enlarged military and naval equipment.

It would be a sad comment upon the responsiveness of our people were such liberal use of the expedients of publicity, and such alarmist methods of persuasion, to fail of all results.

It is also to the credit of the national intelligence that it is beginning to take a sober second thought as to the meaning of this loud advocacy of preparedness, and is starting to ask certain questions. Among these are the following:

Who furnishes the money to promote this expensive campaign of alarm?

Why are the people who directly profit from the manufacture and sale of munitions of war so active in agitating in behalf of preparedness?

What are the signs that the United States is now in greater danger from invasion by a foreign enemy than for a century past?

What argument that can for a moment face the bombardment of facts can be advanced that either Germany or Japan has the slightest desire to become embroiled with the United States?

Why is it that after years of annual expenditure for armament amounting to practically what Germany has spent for the same purpose, we are declared to be so inferior in ships and equipment as to be at the mercy of any evil-minded power?

Who has gotten these funds which were supposed to be spent in behalf of national military and naval efficiency?

What assurance is there that any fresh and lavish expenditure, stimulated by the present hysteria of preparedness, would provide us with any more adequate defenses than those now in hand?

As a matter of fact, the nation is far from convinced that any such campaign is at all necessary. The results of the President's tour in the interest of "preparedness" were not at all satisfactory to the alarmists. His speeches set the people to thinking through the entire question. And in the last issue it is the people, not the politicians or the jingoes, who will settle the matter.

Preparedness is a great watchword, and a good one. But there are phases of our national life and character that are in far greater need of strengthening than our naval and military equipment. And as we become sensitive to these more urgent needs,—intelligence, social solicitude, moral depth, honesty, virtue, appreciation of international obligations, and the good will which the Christian religion inspires,—the superficial alarms of a shallow nationalism will subside.

A POLITICAL MURDER

THE people of this city were deeply stirred last week by the news that Dr. Theodore Sachs, former superintendent of the Tuberculosis Hospital, had committed suicide.

He was probably the most celebrated living specialist on tuberculosis. The citizens of Chicago were greatly elated by his selection for this important position under a former administration.

To the surprise of all, the present city government, led by Mayor Thompson and his Commissioner of Health, John Dill Robertson, failed to re-appoint him to his position, on what now appear the perfectly clear grounds of political expediency,—they were engaged in the statesmanlike employment of constructing a partisan political machine, and they needed the place for another man.

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

The protest that was voiced by the people who knew Dr. Sachs' devotion and ability drove the Mayor and his friends to some sort of defense, and they began a campaign of detraction against the former superintendent so mendacious and unwarranted as to astonish and disgust all but their attached henchmen.

In the midst of it all, depressed and discouraged by the overthrow of his cherished plans for the institution which he had nourished with the best efforts of his life, Dr. Sachs took his own life by poison.

His last words were a plea for the institution of his love, and without a word of malice, but only saying, "I am weary," he took his departure.

The deep indignation of people who believe in higher ideals for the city was voiced at the polls two days later, when the Mayor's candidates went down in pitiable defeat. The man who went into office with the largest majority ever given a mayor in this city is on the way to the political oblivion which his crude type of spoilsmanship merits.

THE DISCIPLES' CONGRESS

AN ANOTHER page will be found the complete program of the Annual Congress of the Disciples, which will meet in this city April 25-27.

Such subjects as "The Program of the Disciples," "Christian Liberty," "New Testament Eschatology," "The Religious Experience of Jesus, and "National Preparedness" are certain to bring out animated discussion.

The Hotel Sherman is the place of meeting.

ART AND LIFE

WE HOPE that none of our readers miss the pleasure and profit of a careful reading of all the poetry contributed to our columns by Mr. Thomas Curtis Clark, a valued member of the "Century" staff.

The character of Mr. Clark's verse is sure to attract the attention of those who are seeking for illumination and nourishment for the inner life. In the present period of clamor and unrest there are many who are searching for the inner way. Perhaps it is for this reason that the works of the mystics through the centuries are today in greater demand than ever in the past. The meditations of St. John of the Cross, Englebrecht, Ruysbroeck, and the author of "The Imitation" are proving a bridge across a very difficult and miry tract.

In such a time any writing that helps to keep awake the inner motives of quiet contemplation of the chief purposes of life is of profit to those who will take time and thought for the deeper things.

Mr. Clark's poems have this value. They have been increasingly appreciated by our own readers, and are being solicited by other publications, notably the Sunday School Times. Watch for them, and secure the help and the pleasure which they afford.

SCIENCE AND FAITH.

the light of its complete certainty, and of its realization as already a present experience.

These are the landmarks of the soul. We do not know much, but we know enough. The program of the future life has not yet been issued, as Henry Drummond has said. Why should it be? There is no speech nor language in which we could read it. As well seek to explain to an unborn child the wonder of the life upon which he is presently to emerge as to outline the activities of the future. One world at a time. But let it be a real world, of intelligent Christian thinking, of devout use of all that the great interpreters of the holy life have left us, of enthusiastic activity in the high pursuit of the kingdom of God, and of confident hope, that "when the earthly house of our tabernacle shall dissolve, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

It remains to speak a word regarding the practical aspects of the life to come.

Union Churches

The Union Church at Goleta, California.

I am enclosing a copy of the Constitution and By-Laws of the Federated Church of Goleta, of which I have been pastor for six months.

The church was organized in the Methodist church as a Union church. For years, I am told, the Baptists and Methodists had maintained organizations with small attendance at Sunday services. This union idea met with favor and the M. E. church was full for one year. Then there came a misunderstanding (I judge from what has been told me) the officers of conference refusing to recognize a union church. A large body of the people withdrew to form the union congregation, and worshiped in a hall for a year, and then built a church and manse, bungalow style, with a cement-floored pergola for social purposes between. The property cost about five thousand dollars. There is a debt of less than two thousand now. The membership is about seventy-five. The average attendance at the Sunday morning service for February was fifty-eight. The pastor's salary is a thousand dollars and house. All the bills are met promptly, without outside aid. We have no direct relation with any denomination, but the members are urged to give to missions through the churches to which they formerly belonged.

The M. E. and Baptist churches maintain services by the aid (I am told) of conference and the association.

This is a country field as there is almost no village, just a store, blacksmith shop, school, and three church buildings together with a few houses. Walnuts and beans are the main crops. Land is held at about a thousand dollars an acre.

The people in this region have never been a church-going people, but I am told that more are attending since this union effort started, about three years ago, than ever before. It is very unfortunate that in the effort to have a union church such a division should have been created, but I believe that good will come out of it eventually. I am

Sincerely yours,

Goleta, Cal. John S. Niles.

Appended to this letter there is a copy of the constitution and by-laws of the Federated Church of Goleta. It states that the Church is organized in the belief that the kingdom of heaven can be more speedily advanced and firmly established by the federation of Christian people of Goleta valley. Membership is offered to people in good standing in any evangelical church. They do not even need to sever their relations from the churches of which they may be members. For those who wish to come in without previous membership in any church, the following questions are submitted for affirmative answer: Do you believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world? Do you now accept of him as your personal Saviour? Will you take the Holy Bible as the rule and guide for your faith and practice through life? All persons who have not been previously baptized shall receive Christian baptism before being received into membership. They shall choose for themselves the manner of their baptism. The pastor must be an ordained minister of some evangelical church, and shall not be chosen from the same church as his predecessor. Communion shall be celebrated at the morning service on the first Sundays of January, March, May, July, September and November. The members are urged to contribute to foreign missions and other benevolences through their own denominations.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

A Call to Prayer.

The Federal Council of Churches invites the churches to observe Holy Week as a special week of prayer. The following topics are suggested: April 17, "Thanksgiving;" April 18, "Authority;" April 19, "Unity;" April 20, "Consecration;" April 21, (Good Friday), "Sacrifice and Service;" and April 23, "Triumph." The Federal Council is now the accepted symbol of the unity of Protestantism in the United States and every year more and more churches accept its plans for united activity.

Taking Stock of Presbyterianism.

The northern Presbyterians hold their assembly once a year, and they will meet this year at Atlantic City, May 21-27. While the pastors are away, the "Continent" proposes that the churches shall hold services on Wednesday night in which they will take stock of Presbyterianism. The activities of the various boards of the denomination will be reviewed. Dr. William Chalmers Covert, of Chicago, has been asked to prepare a program for such meetings that will be uniform throughout the country.

Require Bible Reading by Law.

Massachusetts and Pennsylvania already had laws requiring the reading of the Bible in the public schools every day, and now New Jersey has joined them in this provision. The law provides for the reading of at least five verses every day, while in Pennsylvania the law requires ten. It is clear that a teacher not in sympathy with this law can practically nullify it. The five verses can be read from the genealogies every day or from the other formal portions of the Bible and in a manner detrimental to true worship. It is clear also, that when the law is faithfully observed, it contributes only a little in the direction of religious education. It has been prized chiefly as a symbol of the Christian character of the commonwealths enacting these laws, it would seem.

An Optimistic Note Concerning Conditions After the War.

In a recent address the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Boston, Cardinal O'Connell, struck an optimistic note for the religious future of the war-stricken peoples. He counts the war itself a factor in this revival of spiritual influences. "All over Europe," he says, "there is already visible a rosy dawn of a long and brilliant day. And when the smoke, which for months has blurred the vision of her fertile fields and beautiful towns, has at last cleared away, a new Europe will appear, a Europe on its knees before the God it has sinned against, a Europe which has had enough of the rags of the false trappings of infidelity and doubt and the gospel of disorder, a Europe turning once more with eyes which shall see clearly, though still bedimmed with bitter tears, the old faith triumphant, at least over all her enemies."

Free Churches in England Decline.

The free churches of England have fallen upon evil days. They are all showing a decline in membership. The Sunday-schools have a decreased membership. The conditions have challenged the attention of the most thoughtful leaders of nonconformity. These denominations are now federated under what is called the National Free Church Council of England. Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, one of the most eminent Baptist clergymen of the country, is the president. He proposes that instead of a federation, there shall be a real union. At the meeting at Bradford recently, the Council has endorsed the plan for the organization of the United Free Church of England. The constituent denominations are to hold a relationship to it like that of the states to the United States in the federal government. The venerable Dr. F. B. Meyer endorsed the plan heartily as did the other leaders, and it was carried by a unanimous vote. It will now go before the governing bodies of each of the denominations for action. If it is adopted, steps will be immediately taken to reduce the competition of churches in the villages of the country.

A University for All India.

The British government has laid the corner-stone for a university for all India which will bind the various sections of that country into an educational unit. The plan is one which has been dreamed of for a century. The new institution will be located at Benares. The missionaries look on the project with the deepest interest because, as has been demonstrated in Turkey, education is the forerunner of a Christian civilization.

Father and Son Issue Books.

An announcement of unique interest is just made by the University of Chicago Press with reference to forthcoming books by father and son. Dr. Thomas Wakefield Goodspeed, who for twenty-three years was the secretary of the Board of Trustees of the University of Chicago, and is still its corresponding secretary, is the author of "The History of the University of Chicago," which will appear about the first of June; and his son, Dr. Edgar Johnson Goodspeed, professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek in the university, is the author of "The Story of the New Testament," to be published shortly. The publication of the first-mentioned volume is peculiarly appropriate at this time, when the University of Chicago is preparing to celebrate the first twenty-five years of its history; and no one is more conversant with the beginnings of the university or has been more enthusiastic over its remarkable growth than the author of the present history.

Father Clark Continues His Journey.

"Father Endeavor" Clark is continuing his journey around the world. It is stated that he continues to improve in health after the severe illness of last year. The last message reported him to be on his way to Japan, Korea and China for a series of conventions and will return in the early summer.

Prepare to Use University of Chicago Chapel.

The University of Chicago has announced that it will provide a chapel which will be for the use of any religious denomination that desires to use it. The Bishop of Chicago (Episcopal) has already asked his diocesan board to advise him in what way his denomination shall take advantage of the generous offer of the university, whether by appointing a student chaplain or by using the ministrations of the near-by rectors of churches. A committee has been appointed which will bring in a report at an early date.

Home Mission Work Progresses.

Home missionary societies in America report an increase of income in ten years of 63 per cent. Sixty-two mission boards now receive fourteen million dollars a year. The amount spent on negro work is the largest single item, and next comes a classification called "general evangelism." Educational institutions are subsidized with significant sums of money.

—F. D. Kershner is to be chief speaker at the Los Angeles, or Southern California, Convention, which immediately follows the state convention at Santa Cruz.

—The Bible-school at Bellaire, under the leadership of the pastor, C. C. Hammond, is preparing a card index of the entire school.

—Twenty Ohio Bible-schools will have handwork exhibits at the state convention which will be held at Mt. Vernon, May 22-25.

A Conference of Inter-Church Organizations

A conference of nation-wide interest will be held at Atlantic City, June 2 to 5. Last April, representatives of Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, the International Sunday-school Association, the Laymen's Missionary Movement, Missionary Education Movement, the various Brotherhoods and Young People's Movements and the Home Missions Council gathered at Atlantic City at the call of a special committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. As a result of this conference a new Commission representing all these interests was formed and is known as the Commission on Federated Movements. Mr. Fred B. Smith is the Chairman of this Commission, Rev. Roy B. Guild is Executive Secretary and James A. Whitmore, Field Secretary. This Conference instructed this Commission to call another conference during the coming year that these organizations doing inter-church work might all become acquainted with one another's plans and purposes and with one another's working forces. Each organization participating will present its work by public addresses and exhibits. A Committee on Suggestions will review all plans of work considering all cases of overlapping and overlooking, if any. It will also consider what united efforts can be made in strategic places or in emphasizing a particular message.

PETER DELIVERED FROM PRISON.

Lesson for April 30.

Golden Text: The angel of Jehovah encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them. Psalm 34:7.

Lesson Acts 12:1-19: verses 1-11 printed. Memorize verse 11.

(1) Now about that time Herod the king put forth his hands to afflict certain of the church. (2) And he killed James the brother of John with the sword. (3) And when he saw that it pleased the Jews, he proceeded to seize Peter also. And those were the days of unleavened bread. (4) And when he had taken him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers to guard him; intending after the Passover to bring him forth to the people. (5) Peter therefore was kept in the prison: but prayer was made earnestly of the church unto God for him. (6) And when Herod was about to bring him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers bound with two chains: and guards before the door kept the prison. (7) And behold, an angel of the Lord stood by him, and a light shined in the cell: and he smote Peter on the side, and awoke him, saying, Rise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands. (8) And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals. And he did so. And he saith unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me. (9) And he went out, and followed: and he knew not that it was true which was done by the angel, but thought he saw a vision. (10) And when they were past the first and the second guard, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth into the city; which opened to them of its own accord: and they went out, and passed through one street; and straightway the angel departed from him. (11) And when Peter was come to himself, he said, Now I know of a truth, that the Lord hath sent forth his angel and delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. About that time Herod the king. This was Herod Agrippa I, the grandson of Herod the Great.—To afflict certain of the church. Some of the real leaders of the church.

2. James the brother of John. Two of the three favorite disciples of Jesus, the sons of Zebedee and Salome.—With the sword. He had James beheaded. James and John are the only apostles whose deaths are recorded in the New Testament.

3. It pleased the Jews. He was a time server. At this time the Jew was especially hostile.—Seize Peter also. Because he was one of the leaders. Peter counted in his community.—The days of unleavened bread. The name given the Passover because there was no leaven, or yeast, allowed in the bread during the feast.

4. Four quaternions of soldiers. Four sets of four men, two of whom were chained to Peter.—The Passover. The full seven days of the feast.—Bring him forth to the people. Take him to the elevated place where the tribunal stood, to pronounce the sentence of death before the people. Since the whole matter was to please the Jews he waited until after the feast.

5. Prayer was made earnestly. The verb has in it the idea of continuance; hence they continued earnestly in prayer.—Unto God. The Source of all power. This is the attitude every one should assume in prayer.—For him. Nothing is more helpful than earnest prayer for our friends.

6. When Herod was about to bring him forth, the same night. The night before the day of trial. There was a time when this would have terrorized Peter, but his faith had overcome fear.—Peter was sleeping between two soldiers. These men acted as policemen. Two watched the prisoner and two guarded the door.—Bound with two chains. It was a Roman custom to fasten the prisoner to the two guardsmen with chains.

7. An angel of the Lord. Messenger of the Lord. All through the years God has sent his messengers in various forms to help his children.—Awoke him. The part of every true teacher is to focus the awakened soul on God as the source of deliverance.

8. Gird thyself and bind on thy sandals. There is something for each child of God to do in the escape from the lower tendencies of this life.

9. He knew not that it was true. It seems to be an overwhelming mental impression so vivid that it was confusing.

10. The iron gate that leadeth into the city. The outer gate of the prison. It would be strong and secure. The gates are large and massive.

11. When Peter came to himself. Peter had been dazed. The times were stirring and events moved rapidly. The whole matter seemed unreal to him.

TEST QUESTIONS.

1. Which Herod was it that put James to death?
2. What relation was he to Herod the Great?
4. Why is the Passover called "The days of unleavened bread?"
5. How did Peter's friends spend their time?
6. What is a quaternion?
7. Why was Peter chained to the soldiers?
8. What did Herod do when he learned of Peter's escape?
9. How did Herod die?
10. Why were James and Peter persecuted?
11. Why did Herod regard the Passover?
12. How and when is prayer a power?
13. Are we using the power of prayer?
14. How many people do we pray for?
15. What is the longest prayer in the Bible?

Prayer

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

OURS is a scientific age. We are in many ways unconsciously controlled by its law, and it is hardly possible for us to ignore the initial questions that arise from the scientific point of view, when thinking upon any spiritual theme. The subject of prayer must be studied in the light of these facts. Each individual must think them through for himself, aided by all the light he can get upon the subject.

The one thing most frequently met is the reign of law. No matter which way we turn, law is universal. It is found in every sphere of life. It is vital and insistent. Upon it we depend for our most cherished possessions in this world, Knowledge, freedom and character depend upon established law, and without some abiding laws in the world we could not even maintain our faith in the trustworthiness of God.

We must, however, make clear to ourselves that law, as such, can do nothing; it causes nothing, it finally explains nothing. Laws are only our formulations of the way in which things behave, or the modes of God's activity.

As surely as there is no doubt of laws, and our need of them, so surely is there no doubt either of our supreme need of God and the sense of his presence and power and love back of all this world of law. If religion is to exist at all, men need to be able to believe in a living God who can come into real and effective relations with his children, one who is able to manifest himself to them, and one who is able to adapt himself to their changing needs. We have access to each other's lives, and how much more freedom should the one have who created these lives! We can change the course of life of our friends; can it be that God is powerless at this point? I should think that he is even more capable of helping us.

Prayer has always been one form of approach to God. When the word is used broadly it is as universal as sacrifice in primitive religion and persists in later faiths with ever-increasing intensity in refined and ideal form long years after sacrifice has ceased. There may be many questions about prayer that we may not be able to solve; but as Professor James said: "It is probable that, in spite of all that 'science' may be able to do to the contrary, men will continue to pray to the end of time, unless their mental nature changes in a manner which nothing we know should lead us to expect."

If our religion is to be contemporaneous with our life and permeate the whole of it, we simply cannot put all our common life out of touch with God. We are not, therefore, to limit prayer to what we ourselves see that it is possible for God to do. Even in our human relations it would be a foolish child that would so limit his request of his father. We are not very wise, at best, as to the possibilities in the universe, and we need not be afraid in our requests of embarrassing God.

Behind the rough and barbarous exterior of war the spirit of prayer still exists. During the German bombardment of Rheims a lieutenant of the Salvation Army was holding a little service with a family in the cellar of their house when suddenly the door was burst open and there entered a Bavarian soldier and one of the Prussian guard. With great presence of mind the Salvation Army officer continued her prayer, and when she had finished, one of the soldiers, who spoke French, came to the Army lassie, and with tears running down his face showed her a portrait of his wife and children. "Will you offer a prayer for them, too," he asked, "that they may be kept from harm till I get home again?"

"Prayer is the burden of a sigh
The falling of a tear:
The upward glancing of an eye
When none but God is near."

Disciples Table Talk

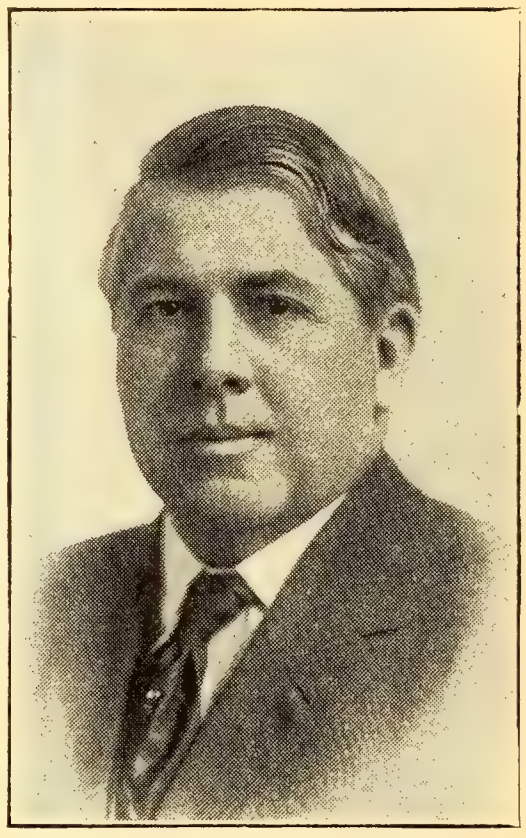
Jefferson City, Mo., Pastor Highly Honored.

Sunday, April 2, was the beginning of A. R. Liverett's sixth year as pastor of First church, Jefferson City, Mo. The congregation quietly worked up a surprise for their pastor. At the regular morning hour for church service the president of the official board took charge and notified the pastor that he was not to preach. A splendid program had been prepared covering the different phases of progress made by the church in five years. All gave tributes to the ability and aggressiveness of both Mr. Liverett and wife in the many phases of their work. A fine gift was presented to them by the congregation in token of their regard.

Norfolk School of Religious Education a Pronounced Success.

After a 21 weeks' course the School of Religious Education of Norfolk, Va., of which C. M. Watson, of First Christian church, is director, closed last month for the year. Certificates were presented to classes of 1917 and 1918. Of the 36 who received certificates, 12 were members of the Disciples Bible-school. The total enrollment for the year was 138. The denominations represented were Presbyterian, Baptist, Christian, Episcopal, Methodist and Disciples. For the year 1914-14 First church bore the total expense of the school. For the year 1915-16 this church gave the use of the building, while the enrollment fee of $1.00 paid the general running expenses. Dr. S. C. Mitchell, President of Delaware College, who delivered the address on the closing night, said that he believed that such a school as this ought not only to influence the city of Norfolk, but the whole South.

John G. Slayter to Leave Texas.



The resignation of John G. Slayter as pastor of East Dallas (Tex.) church was presented to the official board a few days ago and was regretfully accepted, to take effect within sixty days or as soon as the congregation can fill the place. Mr. Slayter is leaving the church, with which he has achieved remarkable success during the last four years, in order to proceed with plans which he has had in mind for some time and which are as yet in a formative state and cannot be divulged at present. Since going to Dallas from Minneapolis, Minn., in May, 1912, Mr. Slayter has been a conspicuous figure in the religious life of Dallas. His pastorate has marked a new era of enlarged work for the East Dallas church. He has also been in constant demand for big undertakings throughout the United States and it is reported that he is now considering a call to an important work in the West.

Evanston Disciples' Church Profits by Union Meetings.

B. Fay Mills is conducting union meetings for two weeks "for community betterment" in the south part of Evanston, a suburb of Chicago. The Disciples' church, O. F. Jordan, pastor, has been co-operating and has received to date more new members than any other church. About fifty signed cards seeking membership in this church by the end of the first week. Three-fourths of these went forward in the Sunday-school when Mr. Mills was not present, through the influence of the local workers. Mr. Mills presents the great fundamentals of the Christian faith faithfully. His social message is Tolstoian in quality and his reading of Emerson has left deep impressions, though he seldom mentions him. Mr. Jordan will follow the Mills' meetings with a week of preaching in his own church with local forces, during Passion Week.

Disciple Pastor for Missouri Governorship.

Formerly a student and professor in Christian University, Canton, Mo., and for many years pastor in the Disciple churches at New Franklin and Clinton, Mo., A. N. Lindsey, who is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Missouri, is attracting the attention of Disciples not only in the state of his candidacy, but in other states as well. Mr. Lindsay has won high honors in religious, educational, legal, fraternal and political circles, and pledges his best efforts toward securing "the highest possible efficiency and economy in every department of the state government."

A. N. Lindsey.

More Fellowship Class Promotion.

The articles of Frank W. Allen and others recently published in these columns on the Fellowship Movement at Springfield, Ill., have inspired many pastors throughout the country to write Mr. Allen for further information regarding the new organization. The Springfield pastor is delivering a series of addresses before the class based on Miss Jane Addams' "The Spirit of Youth and the City Streets." The following are the topics treated: "Youth in the City," "When Youth Goes Wrong," "The Quest of Adventure," "The House of Dreams," "Youth and Industry," "The Thirst for Righteousness."

C. M. Sharpe at El Reno, Okla., First Church.

Frank H. Lash, pastor at El Reno, Okla., First, writes that this congregation enjoyed a delightful informal reunion with a former pastor on March 20, when Charles M. Sharpe, of the Disciples' Divinity House of the University of Chicago, made a brief visit to El Reno. A hurry call brought a good group of members of the church together to hear him deliver a forceful address in the evening. Mr. Sharpe was the first located pastor of this congregation twenty-three years ago. Mr. Lash reports thirteen persons added to First church membership during March.

Chicago Church Tells "Ten Reasons Why."

Memorial church, Chicago, prepared a very attractive card which was used generously in a very successful every member canvass. "Ten Reasons Why You Should Attend Memorial Church," was the caption used on the card. The following are the reasons given: "1. Because you are a member. 2. Because everybody needs a church home, and church activity. 3. Because the people of Memorial are cordial and interested in the welfare of all the members. 4. Because Memorial is a union church, in full co-operation with both Baptist and Disciple interests, and actually practicing Christian union. 5. Because Memorial welcomes to its membership Christians from all other churches, without discrimination. 6. Because Memorial church seeks to avoid all sectarian narrowness, and recognizes the duty and privilege of co-operation with all Christian forces. 7. Because Memorial church attempts to give a modern and comprehensive interpretation of the Bible and Christian truth. 8. Because Memorial church has many departments of activity:—Sunday-school, Women's Societies, Young People's organizations, etc., in which there is abundant opportunity for profitable activity. 9. Because Memorial church is endeavoring to render to its community the service which ought to be expected of a wide-awake and aggressive church. 10. Because Memorial church seeks to interpret to its people the great movements of the Kingdom of God which offer opportunity for a share in the most worthful Christian activities of our age."

The month of April is being observed at Memorial as "Go to Church Month."

Big Subjects Treated at Nebraska Ministerial Institute.

Ira E. Carney, of Hebron, Neb., speaks in highest terms of the addresses of F. D. Kershner at the recent Nebraska Ministerial Institute, held at Bethany, Neb. A tremendous incentive was given, according to Mr. Carney, to "enlargement of calibre on the part of the individual minister." "To the gospel preacher, Mr. Kershner is a challenge in behalf of scholarship, and to the scholar he is a mighty challenge in behalf of the everlasting gospel," writes the reporter. The themes discussed were: "The Life Worth While," "Problems of the Ministry," "The Reality of the Spiritual Life," "Christian Social Service," "The Problem of Suffering," etc. The charm of Mr Kershner's work according to Mr. Carney, was in "the culture sufficient to ignore the superficial, and grapple fairly with the knottier problems of the fundamental." W. P. Aylesworth presented a series on "The Pre-existence, the Incarnation and the Abiding Presence of Christ," and C. R. Neel, William Oeschger, R. E. Deadman and S. J. Epler were prime movers in the institute.

Religious Survey at Wellington, Kan.

H. W. Hunter, pastor at Wellington, Kan., reports that the Ministerial Union there recently made a social and religious survey of the city. The union appointed various committees to carry plans through. The survey covered the economic, social and religious conditions of the city. About fifty persons, twenty-five teams, two persons to a team, had charge of the work. The church affiliations of those who are church members were taken and those who are not church members were asked their preference.

Northern Illinois Christian Ministerial Institute.

At the 1916 session of the Northern Illinois Christian Ministerial Institute, just closed at Gibson City, among those on the program were C. J. Robertson, Charles W. Ross, R. E. Henry, John R. Southgate, S. H. Zendt, H. H. Peters, G. O. Mills, H. E. Sala, R. E. Hieronymus, E. U. Smith, R. A. Doan, H. E. Monser and D. D. Dick.

BRIEFER NEWS NOTES.

—A school of methods will be conducted at Bellefontaine, O., under the efficient leadership of W. H. McLean, state superintendent. The date is May 1-5.

—The Inland Empire Missionary Convention will be held at Rosalia, Wash., this year.

—"The Message of the Disciples of Christ" is the name of an attractive little booklet issued by Central church, New York City, for use in enlisting new members for this congregation.

—Professor Frank L. Jewett, of the University of Texas Bible Chair, has a Sunday morning study class, with an enrollment of over 200.

—F. N. Calvin, of Central church, Waco, Tex., is preaching a series of sermons on social topics. Recent sermons discussed the questions, "Heredity and Crime," and "Who is Responsible for Crime?"

—W. H. Book gave an address on "Evangelism in the Sunday School" before the last meeting of the Indianapolis Sunday-school superintendents.

—The beautiful new "Bungalow Church" of the North Dallas (Tex.) Disciples, was formally opened on March 24.

—W. B. Clemmer, of Central church, Rockford, Ill., is general chairman of the union revival meetings being held by the churches of Rockford. These meetings mark the culmination of a community campaign for a higher type of religious life in the city, and are peculiarly adapted to the needs of this community, being dignified and actually helpful to the thought life of Rockford. Dr. J. P. D. John, ex-President of DePauw University, will have charge of the services of the last week. A union chorus choir of 300 voices is a feature.

—A new $9,000 church home will be erected by the Harrisonville, Mo., congregation. Over $6,000 has already been raised. The former building was destroyed by fire.

—It is reported that T. A. Boyer will leave his position at Berkeley University, Berkeley, Cal.

—J. R. Perkins, pastor at Sioux City, Ia., preached a sermon a short time ago on "Monastic Life in the Middle Ages," and a local priest delivered an address before his people in answer to "this insidious and un-Christian attack on the orders of the Catholic church."

—A Department of Education is being planned for next year at Christian University, Canton, Mo.

—Professor C. E. Underwood, of Butler college, condemned educational faddists and criticised some of the theories of vocational education in an address before the Christian Ministers' Association of Indianapolis. He asserted that the function of education is to make a life as well as to make a living.

—The new building of the Bicknell, Ind., congregation was dedicated by C. W. Cauble, and more than sufficient to cancel the obligation on this $20,000 church home was raised.

—Miss Stella Franklin, missionary to India, is expected to reach America sometime this month. Her sister, Miss Josepha, is recuperating at Anderson, Ind.

—It is reported that First church, St. Louis, which was willed about $75,000 by one Randall R. Gordon, of Christian county, Ill., will receive this amount in spite of protests of certain members of the family. Another report indicates that the matter will be settled on the basis of a $25,000 gift.

—The remodeled church at Keota, Ia., now practically a new building, was dedicated by Geo. L. Snively, and all money needed raised.

—The Kansas Ministerial Institute will meet next year at Hutchinson. The new officers are: Sam I. Smith, president; J. A. Wilson, vice-president; Ray Lessig, secretary-treasurer; W. O. Allen, W. E. Babb and George E. Lyon, members of the executive committee. The big feature of the recent meeting of the institute was the series of lecturers by Carey E. Morgan on "The Task of the Church" and "The Plan of Salvation."

—David Rioch and family, of India missions, are returning to America, on regular furlough.

—Toledo church, Adrian, Mich., has recently cleared itself of indebtedness.

—C. W. Ross, of West Side church, Springfield, Ill., has been chosen president of the Springfield Sunday-school Association.

Which Do You Prefer?

It is important for reasons of health and practical economy for every housekeeper to ask herself this question:

"Do I prefer a pure baking powder like Royal, made of cream of tartar derived from grapes, or am I willing to use a baking powder made of alum or phosphate, both derived from mineral sources?"

The names of the ingredients printed on the label show whether the kind you are now using or any brand, new or old, that may be offered is a genuine cream of tartar powder, or merely a phosphate or alum compound.

Royal Baking Powder contains no alum nor phosphate.

Big Gain in March Offering

The receipts during the month of March amounted to $40,917, a gain over March, 1915, of $16,580.

The churches as churches during March gave $32,658, a gain of $12,306.

The number of churches contributing is 1,657, a gain of 526. This is one of the largest and most encouraging gains in the history of the society. There was a gain, also, of 44 contributing Sunday-schools, 86 Endeavor Societies, but a loss of 15 individual offerings.

One thing is evident, and that is that the March offering has a firm grasp upon the churches as a method of raising their missionary contributions for Foreign Missions. The churches are swinging back, more and more, to the regular offering day, as they did in 1909 and 1910, and the increased receipts mark the advantage of the churches observing the regular day.

Record for Six Months.

The Endeavor Societies gained $491; the individual offerings gained $1,130; annuity gifts increased, $2,100, and bequests, $125. Note there was a gain from every source of receipts except miscellaneous offerings, and a loss from that source of only $16.

The receipts for the first six months of the missionary year were $96,499, a gain of $19,315. There has been a gain, also, of 697 contributing churches during the six months, and a gain of 23 contributing Sunday-schools, a gain of 338 Endeavor Societies, and a loss of 129 individual gifts. We are confidently counting upon 4,000 contributing churches during the year. Please put your church in line.

The churches as churches during the six months have given $50,654, or a gain of $18,672. Let it be noted that about all the gain of the year comes from the churches. The Sunday-schools have gained $583, the Endeavor Societies $1,949, individual offerings $2,564, and miscellaneous offerings $228, but annuity gifts show a loss of $4,697.

The gain in regular receipts amounts to $23,994.

Now for a gain of at least $25,000 from the churches as churches before September 30; a gain of at least $10,000 from the Sunday-schools.

All together for a long pull, a strong pull for $500,000 total receipts for the year! Let everybody be diligent and prompt. Send all offerings to F. M. Rains, Secretary, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Program of Disciples' Congress

At Hotel Sherman, Chicago, April 25-27, 1916.

—In spite of war pressure, Cecil street church, Toronto, has already paid in full its new living link obligations. A. L. Cole is pastor of this church.

—Carey E. Morgan, of Vine street church, Nashville, Tenn., had a large number of the Nashville fire department to hear him in a special sermon for their benefit.

—There is talk of enlarging the work of the Kansas University Bible Chair.

—North Side church, Omaha, Neb., of which G. L. Peters is pastor, is one of the new living link churches.

—E. T. Williams, for many years United States consul in China, recently gave a lecture at Broad Street church, Columbus, O., on "The Modernization of China." Mr. Williams is now chief of the division of Far Eastern affairs at Washington. He was formerly a resident of Columbus.

—A. D. Harmon, pastor at Cable, Wis., made a deep impression in a recent lecture in that town on "The New Social and Political Skyline." Mr. Harmon has many calls for lecture work.

—As a feature of the "preparedness" program of First church, Lawrence, Kan., for the coming of the new pastor, George Darsie, a "Get-Together" supper was held late in March. An effort was made to have all the 700 members of the congregation present. At this meeting several prominent business men of Lawrence and Kansas City delivered addresses.

—A preliminary meeting on "Men and Millions" was held at the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, on April 7.

—C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, Mo., will deliver the commencement address at Cotner University, June 8.

—F. J. Yokley, Chancellor of Missouri Christian College, has located with the church at Vinita, Okla., and will give his time both to the church and college. He remains as chancellor of the college, but will confine his efforts largely to Oklahoma.

—Geo. P. Taubman has received a unanimous call to serve First church, Long Beach, Cal., indefinitely.

—Central church and school, Sharon, Pa., and Central church and school, Newcastle, Pa., are in a friendly contest.

—The Prize Oratorical Contest at Drake this year aroused great enthusiasm. The prize of $40 was won by Lloyd Ellis, a student pastor. His subject was, "America's Contribution to Twentieth Century Civilization." A first prize of $15 offered for the best extemporaneous speech was captured by Leroy Munyon, also a student pastor. His theme was, "Cartoons and Preparedness."

—F. M. Warren, pastor at Vinton, Ia., will devote ten weeks of the summer to Chautauqua work under the Midland Bureau.

—D. E. Olsen, of the International Christian Missionary Bible College, Minneapolis, is on the last round in the campaign to raise $20,000 to complete the fine, new building for this work.

—W. S. Athearn will deliver addresses at Riverside, Pomona, Long Beach, Pasadena, Los Angeles, Fullerton and Berkeley, Cal. It is reported that Professor Athearn has been offered the position of head of the department of Religious Education at Union Theological Seminary, Berkeley.

—William Jennings Bryan recently delivered an address at the Colosseum, Des Moines, on "The War in Europe and Its Lessons for Us." The Christian News reports that the address was received with evident approval. Governor Clarke, in introducing Mr. Bryan, paid a high tribute to his character.

—Among the speakers at the Indiana State Sunday-school convention to be held at Muncie, June 20-22, are: Miss Hazel Lewis, Cincinnati; Prof. C. E. Underwood, Indianapolis; Garry L. Cook, Indianapolis, and E. Leroy Dakin, Logansport.

—Finis Idleman, pastor at Central church, New York, will preach sermons to children of the church on April 14 and April 21. His themes will be "Consider the Lilies" and "How the Church Came to Us."

—The new building of the Thorntown, Ind., church was dedicated by G. L. Snively on April 9. R. E. Callithan is pastor at Thorntown.

—A. R. Moore, pastor at First church, Savannah, Ga., preached a sermon on the Bible in answer to one delivered by the Catholic Bishop of the diocese of Savannah on the attitude of his church toward the book.

—The men's class at First church, Galesburg, Ill., assigns 75 per cent of its receipts to a special fund for relief of members of the class.

—W. S. Priest, of Central church, Wichita, Kan., has refused a call to the work at First church, Portland, Ore.

—John L. Brandt addressed a gathering of women at First church, St. Louis, in behalf of a proposed bill for the suppression of dancing and singing in the city's cafes.

—W. S. Rounds, pastor at Taylorville, Ill., recently preached for M. L. Pontius at Jacksonville.

—Edgar D. Jones preached a sermon at Park Methodist church, Bloomington, Ill., on the subject, "Six Reasons Why Bloomington Should Remain Saloonless."

—A Des Moines daily reports that approximately $100,000 was raised by the Men and Millions leaders in Des Moines.

—The Missouri Disciples will meet in convention this year at Boonville. The meeting is scheduled for next month.

—There is talk of a new Bible-school building for the Long Beach, Cal., church.

—The men's Bible-class at Butler, Mo., has an average attendance of over 100. During April addresses are being delivered at Butler by L. J. Marshall, B. A. Jenkins, A. R. Liverett and A. W. Kokendoffer.

—W. W. Johnson, pastor at Orrville, O., reports that March 26 was observed by the church and Bible-school there as "Liquidation Day." Indebtedness in both church and school was met by pledges and cash. Mr. Johnson has closed the first year of service at Orrville.

—W. H. McLain, state Bible-school superintendent of Ohio Disciples, is in a series of institutes at Crooksville, Bellaire and Coshocton. I. J. Cahill speaks highly of the service being given Ohio schools by Mr. McLain.

—C. C. Cowgill is closing his work as state missionary in Middletown, O., on account of throat trouble. He will engage in welfare work in one of the large industrial

—I. J. Cahill, Ohio's state secretary, writes that his meeting with C. R. Stauffer and Norwood church, Cincinnati, were in the nature of refreshment to his soul. The church membership was increased by 55 persons during the series.

—Caldwell, O., will build a $10,000 church on the best site in town.

—J. F. Baxter is leading the Cambridge, O., congregation in erecting a fine, new building well adapted for social and Bible-school work.

—Six hundred delegates are expected at the Ohio convention this year to be held at Mt. Vernon in May.

—S. T. Willis, pastor at First church, St. Paul, is quoted as saying in a recent sermon that "Efficient diplomacy is of greater interest now than a larger army and navy."

—"This country needs to prepare people for peace," said Clay Trusty at Seventh Christian church, Indianapolis, in a recent sermon on "Preparedness."

—W. T. McLain, recently resigned at Wichita, Kan., Fairview church, has accepted a temporary call as pastor at Cunningham, Kan.

—The Bible-schools of Columbus, O., Disciple churches are in a fifteen weeks' contest with the First church school at Canton, O. The contest will close the last Sunday in June. On the first Sunday Columbus had 2,688 in its eleven schools, Canton reporting 2,376.

—At a rally of the Endeavorers of St. Louis, held last month at Union Avenue church, Secretary William Shaw made the statement that 36,000 members of the Christian Endeavor societies are giving one-tenth of their income for Christian work.

—At First church, Joplin, Mo., a conference of the elders and deacons of the county was held last month. The theme for discussion was "Efficient Stewardship in the Churches." Among the speakers were: J. H. Jones, J. E. Johnson, Andrew Jones, F. L. Moffett, G. W. Muckley, D. W. Moore and C. C. Garrigues.

—Speaking on "The Efficient Church," C. H. Winders, of Downey Ave., Indianapolis, said in recent sermon: "Spiritual efficiency is the important thing, and nothing is possible without a spiritual foundation. Efficiency is not maintained by spasmodic effort and it cannot be stimulated."

—The slogan at Wellington, Kansas, Bible-school, where H. W. Hunter ministers, is "Three Hundred every Sunday in 1916 never under, always more."

—A congregation of Disciples is being organized at Hopewell, Va., which is called "The Wonder City of America." This town has grown within a year to a population of 20,000.

Stuart, pastor of the church, reports that a new home will be planned at once. R. L. Cave, a well-known Disciple of Memphis, lost a valuable library by the fire.

—F. A. Mayhall, for many years a Disciple pastor in Missouri, and more recently a lawyer of St. Louis, is a candidate for nomination for the office of Attorney General of Missouri. He is a Democrat.

—H. E. Beckler, pastor at Longview, Tex., led the church there in observing March 26 as "Railroad Men's Day."

—During 1915, 117 persons were added to the membership of Second church, Bloomington, Ill., to which S. H. Zendt ministers.

—For many years B. B. Tyler was the only minister among the Disciples who held the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. A reader of this paper writes that it may be of interest to other readers to know that there are at least nine ministers among the Disciples of Christ of today who hold this degree. According to this correspondent, the following are the names and institutions from which they received the degrees of Doctor of Divinity: Chas. S. Medbury, C. M. Chilton, A. E. Cory, Peter Ainslie and Finis Idelman, from Drake University; Yale Divinity School also conferred the D. D. degree upon Peter Ainslie; Wallace Tharp, Worcester University; Edgar Dewitt Jones, Illinois Wesleyan University; H. A. Denton, Eugene Divinity School; T. A. Boyer and D A. Russell, Berkeley University. It is stated that I. N. McCash also has the D. D. degree, but that it is not known from what institution it was received.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTES.

During January and February the receipts from individuals amounted to $4,000.90, a loss of $915 over the same period last year. The church receipts for January and February are $1,976.19, a gain of $188.96 over 1915.

The board has received several annuity gifts during February and March, $100 from a friend in Ohio; $700 from a friend in Illinois; $1,445 from a friend in Minnesota; $1,000 from a friend in Kentucky and $100 from a friend in California.

The applications for loans are coming rapidly. In February there were calls for $43,800. In March the calls amounted to $63,600. The board, of course, cannot grant all the loans that are being called for because we have not the funds. At the February and March meetings of the board the following churches were granted loans:

New Boston, Ohio, $2,000; Hugo, Okla., $1,200, $500 of which was a new loan, $700 to take up the old loan; Streator, Ill., $3,500; Moran, Texas, $750; 6% Brenham, Texas, $2,500, 6%; Tenaha, Texas, $800; Lambert, Miss. $500; Jefferson, Ia., $5,000 6%; Lanett, Ala., $2,500; Ballard, Washington, First church, $6,000, 6%; Rockford, Ill., First church, $4,400; Portland, Ore., Kern Park church, $1,000; Shepherd St. church, Chickasha, Okla., (Colored), $250; Campbellville, Ky., $4,000, 6%; Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, $2,000; Denton, Texas, First church for enlarging their building, $6,000, 6%; Rosemont church, Dallas, Tex., $2,000; Quanah, Tex., First church, $3,000; Lindale, Texas $500; Maywood church, Oklahoma City, Okla., $4,000; Kennewick, Washington, $400; Cadiz, Ohio, $3,000; Crescent, Okla., $1,000; Shellsburg, Iowa, (Oak Grove church) $500; Kansas City, Kansas, Central church for enlarging their work, $3,000, 6%; increased loan, Borough Park church, Brooklyn, N. Y., to $9,200.

During February and March, John H. Booth is with the Men and Millions Team. During February and part of March, Mr. Muckley was attending the Congress on Christian Work in Latin-American which was held at Panama, Canal Zone.

The friends of Church Extension should remember that funds are constantly needed. There should be many personal gifts and also gifts on the annuity plan.

During the last two months the following loans were closed and the money paid to the churches; Gillespie, Ill., annuity fund, $3,000; Marceline, Mo., annuity fund, $4,000; Memphis, Texas, annuity fund, $1,000; Newport, Ark., annuity fund, $4,000; Opolis, Kansas, Geo. Darsie fund, $600; Spokane, Wash., North Hill Church, Columbus Tab. fund, $300; Brownsville, Texas, Dr. J. W. Gill Fund, $2,500; Albuquerque, N. Mex., annuity fund, $5,000; Dallas, Texas, N. Dallas church, Standard Publishing Co. fund, $3,000; Como, Miss., Augusta, Ga., First church fund, $400.

WHAT IF WE SHOULD FORGET EASTER APRIL 23?

FOUR HUNDRED BOYS AND GIRLS, now the comfortable, happy wards of the Church in six homes of the association would be left without food, without shelter, without love or compelled to find refuge in some Catholic institution.

ONE HUNDRED BABIES MOTHERLESS that now find tender, loving protection in the heart of the Church of Christ would be left to the cold charity of the Christless world. Next to a mother's love, is Christian love. Shall the babies have it?

NINETY-THREE AGED, INDIGENT DISCIPLES OF CHRIST many of them choice souls, would suffer the pain of hunger, cold and nakedness or the keener pain of public charity. To send them to the poorhouse is to send Christ to the poorhouse. What we do to them, we do to him.

SCORES OF WIDOWS unaided in the burden of their widowhood would break and go down to dishonor and ruin.

THE CHURCH WOULD SUFFER by our failure to provide generously for her wards. The Lodge and the Roman Catholic Church would gain and the world would condemn.

What $200,000 Will Do For the National Benevolent Association

As the world becomes better acquainted with the spirit of Christ and his teachings, it demands more practical exemplification of the spirit of Brotherhood which Jesus taught and practiced. The church that turns a deaf ear to the cry of the orphan and the call of the helpless, homeless aged will appeal to this age in vain. The world will condemn such a church here and Christ will condemn it hereafter.

The National Benevolent Association came into existence in response to this demand. The record of its thirty years of service is little short of phenomenal. The total number of unfortunates served in the name of Christ is over 21,000. The insistent demands of the churches upon the association for ministry to the widow, the orphan, and the aged, is so great as to make enlargement imperative. If we are to meet in anything like a satisfactory way these demands, we need in the near future not less than $200,000 for permanent equipment and this sum must be distributed about as follows:

For the rejuvenation and re-equipment of our little hospital at Valparaiso, Ind., we need. $10,000
(This hospital ministers to the sick among that vast army of poor students gathered from the four corners of the world in Valparaiso University.)

We need for a new heating plant and for desperately needed repairs on our building at East Aurora, N. Y. 5,000
(This home is a haven of rest to from 25 to 30 aged, indigent followers of our Lord. Some of the choicest spirits of the Brotherhood are resting here. We must make them comfortable.)

For a detention cottage to be used as a hospital for the sick children and for a barn and other needed improvements, our splendid Colorado Christian Home for Children at Denver needs at least. 10,000
(This is the only open door of mercy for the children sustained by the Christian churches in all the Rocky Mountain country.)

For the purpose of freeing from debt and supplying needed improvements, we need for our Northwestern Christian Home for the Aged at Walla Walla, Wash. 10,000
(This home is like a great rock in a weary land to many way-worn pilgrims.)

For a hospital and detention home for sick children for our Christian Orphans' Home, St. Louis, Mo., we need. 15,000
(In this great family of 200 children, some are always sick. We must give them the best care. The hospital is imperative.)

For a substantial addition to our Christian Home for the Aged at Jacksonville, Ill., we need, at least. 15,000
(Scores and scores of aged, worthy brethren in the decrepitude of old age, alone and homeless, knock at the doors of this institution every year. We must not turn them away. Their knock is the Master's knock.)

To free our beautiful Juliette Fowler Home for Children from debt and to finish the East wing of its beautiful new building, we need, at least. 15,000
(This home is the church's answer, and only answer, to the cry of childhood's need in all of the southwest.)

To supply a building for the care of children in connection with our home at Walla Walla, Wash., we need. 20,000
(The Christian church has not a single inviting, sheltering door for suffering children in all the Northwest.)

For the purpose of establishing, somewhere in a central location, a modest but comfortable home for incurables, especially among our own people, we need at least. 20,000
(This is one of the most urgent and pressing needs of the hour. The maimed, the halt, and the blind await outside our doors for our answer to their need.)

For the erection of a new, modern, substantial building for our Southern Home for children at Atlanta, Ga., we need at least. 35,000
(This home is doing a truly remarkable work. It serves the widow and the orphan in all of the Dixie states. It's our only answer to the cry of the perishing. This home is located in a rented house.)

For the erection of a modern building for our great orphanage at Cleveland, O., we need. 50,000
(This home is one of the great institutions of the Brotherhood. It enjoys the confidence of the entire community. It must be better equipped.)

Shall we meet these needs, exemplifying thereby that "pure and undefiled religion" that visits the fatherless and the widow in their affliction? If we do, he will gladden our hearts. "Come ye blessed, for I was hungry and ye gave me meat."

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Easter Hope

THE BELIEF THAT DEATH IS NOT THE END HAS DAWNED SLOWLY ON THE SOUL OF MAN IT IS INCAPABLE OF PROOF AS YET, BUT IT RESTS ON ASSURANCES THAT SATISFY THOSE WHO KEEP THEIR FACES TOWARD THE LIGHT.

It is necessary that one should discern the meaning of personality before he can rightly apprehend or even desire the extension of that personality into any other form of experience. Moreover, he must conceive that extension in terms of worthful activity, or else there will be no appeal to his mind in the idea.

It may be that these necessities explain in some measure the large indifference toward the entire conception of a future life observed in our generation. We are not quite sure of ourselves, and we have not found the current programs of the life to come sufficiently attractive to make us want to survive.

Meantime, the accessories of the doctrine have been of questionable validity. The thought of physical resurrection leaves us unimpressed and doubtful. The analogies of nature are suggestive but not convincing. The efforts to communicate with the departed by any of the devices tried thus far are unsatisfactory, and the so-called "messages" from the spirit world are chiefly valuable as arguments against suicide.

If the soul survives the incident of death, it is clearly not by virtue of any inherent immortality conferred by natural birth. None of the theories which make continuance of human experience compulsory has evidential value. If life is to persist in any form that is worthy of being called life, it must be won by struggle and conquest, even as character is won. No higher level of experience is reached without effort. And why should this be? There are many questions that lurk at the door of such a conviction, and few of them can be answered yet. But some considerations make their appeal to the mind, and with them we have to be content.

One of them is the worthfulness of life. Some there are whom we have known whose souls have been a priceless asset in the moral order of the world. It is impossible to think of any economy of the universe that could lightly cast away such characters. There are men and women who have rendered such service to the world that the mind refuses to believe that they have been allowed to go out into the void. Somewhere in the domain of God's providence they must be alive, and their great energies are employed in higher and more suitable tasks than this life could afford.

Furthermore, the divine friendship is an assurance past all doubting that life endures. All the prophets, psalmists and saints have rejoiced in the love of God. They never conceived of that love as a mere benevolence, but a warm, all-embracing, all-inspiring intimacy with the fount and source of life. "Whom have I on earth but Thee, and there is none in heaven that I desire beside Thee?" That is the constant note of Old Testament faith, and it is good for this world and every other world. "They are mine," said the Master concerning his friends, "and no one shall pluck them out of my hand." There is a quality of life and love that is timeless and deathless. On it the breath of separation and defeat can never come. In such a friendship with God there is the promise and realization of the life eternal.

How is that life to be employed? No one of all the souls to whom the thought of continuance has appealed has been without some wistful longing to know what employments and satisfactions the future life holds. It is this longing that has laid language under tribute to describe in some worthy manner the life beyond. It is of little avail. It will be a new adventure in the attainment of character. It will be a larger room in the school of God. It will be a more ample employment of powers that in some worthful manner have been used here and now. One may be sure that all figures of speech fall short in the effort to portray the advancing and expanding glory of the life that is to be.

But it is not in the future that we live. The present value of eternal life is the chief concern. Paul speaks of the risen soul as attaining successively the enlarging values of relationship with God. The true resurrection is not the rising of the body from the grave, nor even the entrance of the soul into any survivorship from death. It is rather the daily attainment of the virtues of Christian character which make it a suitable citizen of the kingdom of God.

"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek the things which are above." The figure is the coming of Christ from the dead, and the rising of the new-born Christian from the watery birth of the new life. But the reality is the growing experience in the kingdom of God, which Paul hoped to make his own, conscious that he had not yet attained, but hoping evermore to approach the divine consummation.

This, then, is the Easter hope. We have few arguments for a future life, but deep convictions, based on the confidence of the saints, the solemn fact of Jesus' triumph over death, whatever may have been the manner of that triumph, and the sure insight we are granted, in our best moments, into the reality of the life that is life indeed.

We are not dependent on that hope for the wonder of our Christian satisfaction. Paul thought that without such a hope the believers would be of all men most miserable. Moments of bitter persecution may have driven the first Christians to such words. But if this life were all, we should still have enough to make the winning of character under the divine direction the supreme satisfaction. But when to that is added this hope so great and so divine, life is complete, and the dawn of Easter finds the Christian happy in the possession of a love that binds him to the Father whom Jesus loved, and that assures him of a life of attainment along a pathway that shines more and more unto the perfect day.

The Church and the Street

BY JOSEPH FORT NEWTON

> "And I saw no temple therein." Rev. 21:22.

SURELY there is no lack of definiteness in the vision of the City of God described in the Book of Revelation. It is no vague blur of misty words, but a vivid picture giving detailed plans, specifications and measurements, so clear is the faith of the Bible in the final victory of righteousness, and in the coming of a true social order of a redeemed humanity.

For the Bible is a book of history written in the light of Eternity, telling the story of the march of man from a Garden of innocence to a City of purity. At the endtime of the world, as a trophy of all the long-drawn struggle of history, it sees the white city of God descending to the earth.

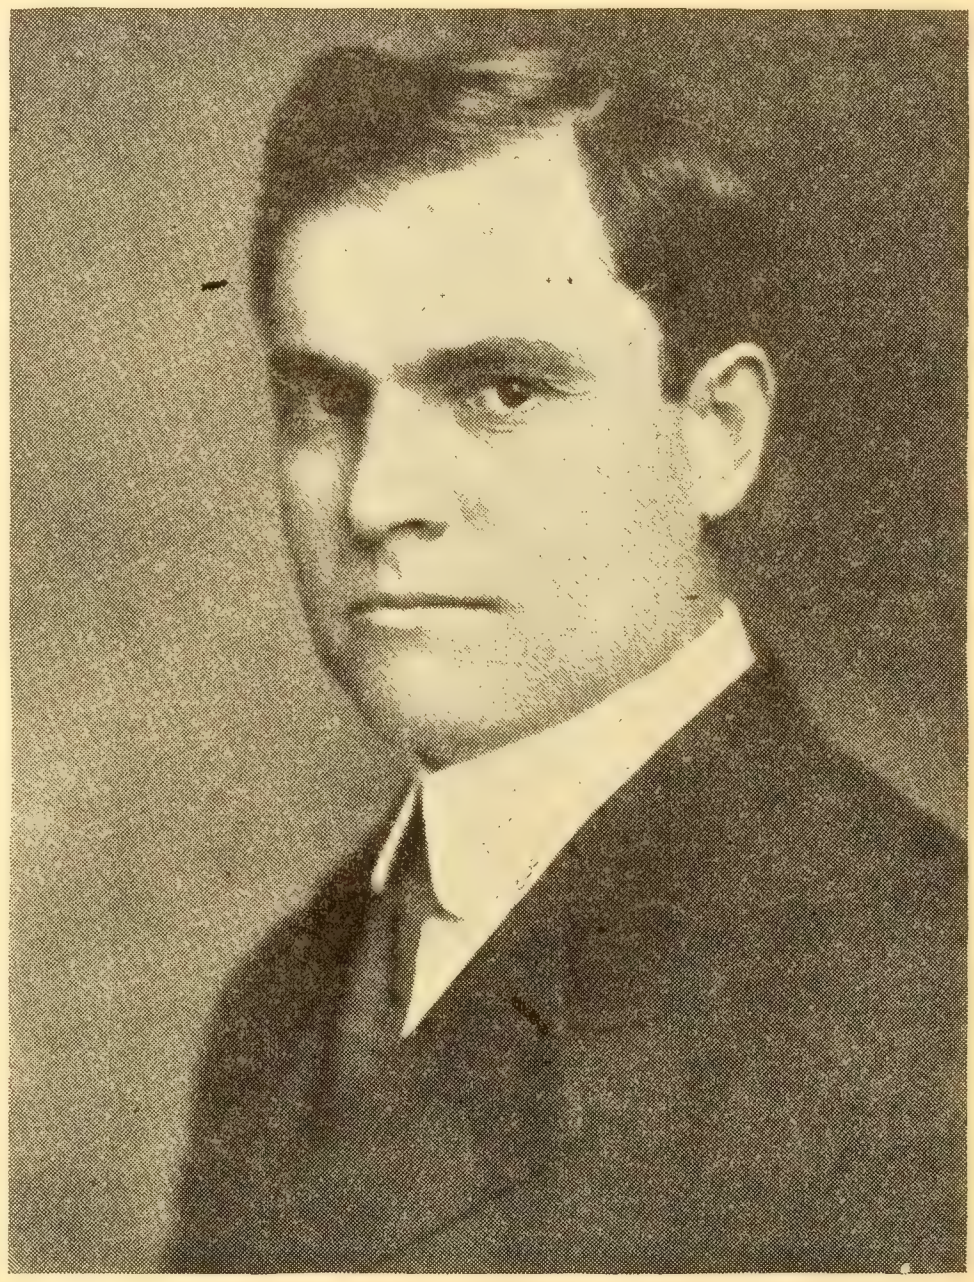
"RADIANT IDEAL—RAGGED ACTUAL."

What impresses the seer in his vision of the city of God is that it has no temple, no church. None is needed, for God is the light and glory of that city where there is no sin, no pain, no sorrow, and along whose streets no black hearses ever go. Until we enter that far-shining city the problem before us, felt so keenly in our day, is the problem of the Church and the Street.

So stated, my theme is a symbol of the perpetual problem by which all who toil in behalf of the ideal interests of humanity are confronted. As Elizabeth Browning said, human progress is a slow marriage of the real and the ideal, and it is often long postponed. But for the visions of poets and seers, such as that vouchsafed to the dweller on Patmos, we might despair of making up the awful deficit between the radiant ideal and the ragged actual.

From the far time when the Church began her morning march in the world, her problem has been to bring the highest faith to the service of the humblest life. Indeed, the early Church began its labors in the slums of great cities among humble folk, hardly reaching the higher classes at all.

LOWLY ORIGIN OF CHRISTIANITY.



If the inspiration of Christianity was from above, as a movement in history it came up from lowly origins. Not many powerful, not many wise were among its devotees in those dawning years, its members being drawn from the multitudes of the weary, the oppressed, the disinherited in that hard old Roman world. These heard its call of hope, its gospel of comradeship, its glad tidings of eternal life, and became its messengers to the ends of the earth. Yet that infant church, by its joyous faith, by its all-conquering idealism, grasped the crumbling classic world falling to ruin by its own rot, and saved humanity from a world-weariness which made human life a hell.

Such is ever the mission of the church, and by as much as it is true to its high purpose by so much does it grow in beauty and power.

CHURCH AND STREET.

Two facts stand out in the story of the church through the ages. First, whenever the church has forgotten the Street, and become rich and proud, metaphysical in dogma and aristocratic in spirit, the result has been bad for both the church and the Street. At such times religion has become a hollow formalism, a dead respectability, or, worse still, a barren stony orthodoxy, and life in the street has become a hideous scramble in which heart treads on heart and all the vices run rife.

Second, every revival of faith, every renewal of Pentecostal vision and power, has witnessed a return of the Church to the Street. There is not an exception, unless it be the Oxford Movement under Newman, which was more a reaction than a revival; and even that movement spent itself, at last, in the slums of London. It was in the days of Francis of Assisi in "the Galilee of Italy," when he built schools for the leper children and preached the gospel to the poor and down-trodden. It was so again, under Eckhart and Tauler in the Rhine country, when "the Friends of God" were the heroic servants of man in dire need and woe. It was so under Luther and Fox, and under Wesley and Woolman.

Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, of the Liberal Christian Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia. Dr. Newton has recently been honored in being called to preach during July of this year in the City Temple, London, the most famous Protestant church in the world.

THE WORK OF THE MYSTICS.

These God-illumined souls led a smug and indolent church out of doors into the street, even into the highways and hedges, in gracious ministry, as ever the mystics have done.

What means all the talk of Social Service in our day if it be not that the church is aware that it has lived too far from the Street where the feet of men are weary, lame and wandering, and where so many traps are set to trip the wayward to fall. The story called "The Inside of the Cup" gripped a host of readers, despite its lack of high art, because it saw clearly the old problem of the Church and the Street in the setting of today. St. John's Church was too far away from the street where Horace Bentley lived and labored, and a great gulf yawned between. The preacher in the story saw that gulf and tried to bridge it, with what results we know.

One recalls the Tolstoi story of the cobbler whose shop was in a basement where he could see, from his half-window, only the feet of the folk in the street. Tramp, tramp, tramp, all day long he heard them, until he learned to detect the light step of the young, the slow step of the aged, the measured step of the soldier, and the shuffling step of the drunkard; weary feet going home from labor, wild feet going astray, wandering feet going nowhere—the soiled feet that Jesus washed. Today the church hears the tramp of human feet in the street, and endlessly marching, and is disturbed by it, knowing not what to do.

Several solutions of this problem have been tried. There are those who would lead the church out into the street and have it take part, as a church, in the noise and din of the hurrying life. Savonarola did that. Not content to minister as few have ever done, to the spiritual life of Florence, he took part in its politics. Some good resulted from his adventure, such as the Bank of Pity and the Bonfire of the Vanities. But it hastened his downfall, if it did not actually undo the work of his earlier years. Always it is so.

SHALL THE CHURCH GO TO THE STREET?

When the church becomes a partisan in political feuds and social debates, it loses its influence and becomes only one more factor in the strife of the street. No longer an inspiration, it is an aggravation, dividing men whom it ought to unite, promoting ill-will among those whom it should bless. History warns us that this plan has been often tried, and as often found wanting, in that it does injury to the church and more harm than good in the street.

THE WEAKNESS OF SOCIAL SERVICE.

Social Service, of which we have heard so much of late, is too much an effort of the church to save itself. Having lost faith in the old appeals, it sets feverishly to work trying to keep alive, with no clear idea of what social service really is. As now interpreted, social service seems to consist in stopping our regular work in order to do something else. If carried out, that would require that every man give up his work to do work for someone else—a pretty mess indeed. Happily it is not carried out, rarely going beyond the stage described by Dean Sumner with a most just satire: "Social service is A conferring with B as to what C ought to do for D." Not many programs of social service go beyond that formula.

Surely we ought to be able to see that any useful work is social service. So long as potatoes are needed, it is social service to grow good potatoes, as truly as to espouse a reform platform. For we are social beings living in a network of relations—as Cicero knew when in his private letters he used the personal pronoun, and in his public addresses the large editorial plural. Members one of another, when a man lives justly, kindly, faithfully, doing his work in a noble spirit, he serves all his fellow men.

BRINGING THE STREET INTO THE CHURCH.

Others think that we should bring the Street into the Church. Spiritual appeals having failed, the church must equip itself with club rooms, gymnasiums, and other attachments wherewith to win back the multitudes. With every effort of this kind aiming at the physical, mental and moral betterment of people, no man of just feeling can fail to sympathize. If it breaks with the old tradition, it allies itself with the new humanism, and in the dingy districts of great cities it does great good. Its design is to bring men under religious influence unawares, making philanthropy a lure to religion, and if it fails in its aim the incidental benefits remain. That it does so fail is now confessed, for men come to the gymnasium for gymnastic privileges, not for religion. If religion itself is not so presented as to attract, we may be sure that nothing else will attract to religion.

A young minister once wrote to David Swing telling him that he had tried all sorts of things, and had not been able to make his church a success. The gentle preacher turned the letter over and wrote on the back of it this reply: "Try religion;" and that advice is still timely.

THE WHY OF THE CHURCH.

Nevertheless, such efforts on the part of the church have had some good results. They have helped to redeem us from the old self-centered pietistic idea of salvation, bringing the church to take account of the life of that now is, bringing the sects closer together, and revealing latent unities and fellowships. Albeit, the desire for social service and the dream of social revolution without spiritual evolution, has done much to deflect the church from its unique and lofty mission; and has, insofar, injured both the Church and the Street.

What is the unique function of the church? What indeed, but to keep the altar of faith and hope and love aflame in the midst of the years; to offer one place in the teeming life of the busy city where men and women, rich and poor, may come and bow in the presence of that Truth which helps us to know whither the marching feet in the street are going and who leads them even when they blindly stumble. No other institution serves society in this capacity, seeking to evoke and make prevail the only spirit in which the problems of the street can ever be solved.

Such is my ideal of the mission of the church in every age—an altar of the Unseen, a witness of the Eternal laws that rule today and always, a radiant and radiating centre of faith, freedom and fraternity, whose highest service is not in schemes and plans but in the quality of men and women whom it sends into the street, the shop, the office, and the places of labor and play.

LITTLE RELIGION TODAY.

Whatever things are in doubt, there is no question that the world suffers today, as Tolstoi told us, an immense and pitiful need of religion. By religion we mean that higher kind of living which shows itself in honest, kindly, truthful, fearless, generous, reverent and heroic men and women.

Had there been such honest men in plenty the great war would not now be desolating the world. The war came as the fruit of dishonor, fear, distrust, jealousy, suspicion, enmity, and more than all doubt whether this is a divine universe. But the war, with long-drawn tragedy of blood and fire and tears, is only one symptom of a vast need of real religion, in which our land shares with the rest, as witness our greed, our tawdry fashions, our industrial brutality, our class enmities, our race rancors, our unscrupulous politics, our mad pursuit of pleasure, our shallow thinking, our crude intent to get the most and give the least.

Think not that our fellow men on the other side of the sea are sinners above all that dwell upon the earth. Not so. The same evils are at work among us, and if unstayed we may any day fall into the same chaos where they struggle and die.

SOCIAL SERVICE NO NEW THING.

When men talk of social service as if it were some new thing, one is amazed.

Every great movement in Christian history bore fruit in social betterment, carrying ameliorating forces in its bosom. Luther embodied not only a great spiritual truth, but also the democratic instincts and aspirations of his time. Calvin as a social force is worthy of a long, deep study.

So also Wesley, who did in fact what we only talk about, as Channing and Bushnell did later. Macaulay said of the evangelical movement, that it improved the quality of cloth woven in the mills of west England, by improving the quality of the men who did the weaving. In this fundamental and fruitful way the great religious leaders have wrought, refining and exalting the souls of men, and so putting a new quality into their labor and play; changing them from idle, careless, selfish, lonely souls into happy, brotherly, noble servants of the race.

When the church works in this behalf, it makes all good things better, all noble things nobler. When it loses this power, or turns aside from this ministry, it is no longer the Church of Christ, but only a social reform club.

SOCIAL SERVICE IN THE HOME.

Social service does not mean that a woman must neglect her home, slam the door on her child, like the women in the Ibsen play, and go out "to mother the world,"—whatever that may be. It means that she brings from the altar of prayer a finer spirit, a sweeter grace, whereby to create in her home an atmosphere of light and joy and purity in which her little ones may grow up to usefulness and honor. It means that a physician will go back to the study and practice of his science with a new zeal, thinking of his benign labor not simply as a means of making money, but as a noble service to humanity. It means that the man who digs a ditch will dig it honestly, faithfully, and that the man who preaches a sermon will look into his own heart and speak to the hearts of his fellows sincerely, lovingly, and with eloquence of insight. It means that all men must be wooed to the life of brotherliness, and learn not only to live and let live, but to help one another to live nobly and with the fine gesture of joy. It means that each make a trial of what Stuart Mill proposed as the greatest thing a man can undertake, "so to live that Christ could approve his life."

"THE GREAT MIRACLE."

Manifestly, the church, if it has any virtue, got it from the Gospel. If it loses the secret of glad and hearty life for every one, for children and youth, for humble folk as well as the thinkers, for the wayward, the defeated, the lonely, the anxious, and those who know the dreary, dull pain of waiting for those who come not back, it will die and, to speak plainly, ought to die. For the church, to be of any worth, is a fellowship of such as love the thoughts, the ideals, the life, and especially the practice of the gospel of Christ, who come together to help each other to make this good life prevail at home and in the street.

When Stanley saw Livingstone, he tells how he got a new sense of what real goodness is. What the sad world needs is to see real goodness made visible and effective, using fine minds and skillful hands and busy feet amid the din and hurry of the street. This is the great miracle. It is the holy city coming down into the hearts of men in the marketplace, in the workshop, in the factory, in the home.

"Where in life's common ways
With cheerful feet we go,
Where in His steps we tread
Who trod the way of woe,
Where he is in the heart,
City of God, thou art."

The Orderly Life

An address delivered at the commencement exercises at the Shanghai (China) Baptist College.

BY CHARLES SUMNER LOBINGIER

IT IS almost commonplace to observe that one—perhaps the most important—of the secrets of success in any career is a recognition of the value of time. "Dost thou love thy life?" asks Poor Richard; "then value thy time, for time is the stuff life is made of." It is often said that "time is money." But the phrase is inaccurate, for time is much more than money. It is true that time may usually be converted into money but it is by no means easy to reverse the process. Has not the quest of the ages been for an elixir that would prolong life? And what fabulous fortunes would a modern Croesus, like the late J. P. Morgan, have given for only one additional year!

The brevity of life and the elusiveness of time have afforded a favorite theme for the poets from Homer down. Chaucer sang of > "The lyfe so short,

> The craft so long to lerne."

Longfellow elaborates the same thought in his lines

> "Art is long and time is fleeting,
> And our hearts though stout and brave
> Still, like muffled drums, are beating
> Funeral marches to the grave."

And the greatest dramatist of all time said:

> "We are such stuff as dreams are made of
> And our little life is rounded with a sleep."

Of course, too, the hymn writers have taken up the refrain in sombre strains like these:

> "Time is winging us away
> To our eternal home.
> Life is but a winter's day
> A journey to the tomb."

THE WASTE OF TIME.

Nothwithstanding the paucity of time and its transcendent value nothing is more common than the waste of it.

"Life, we are told, is a bubble, a shifting dream, evanescent as the morning mists, uncertain as a young maid's promise, brittle as a reed. And yet men proceed to deal with it as if it were as inexhaustible as the widow's cruse."

To every serious individual, however, sooner or later, there comes a profound recognition of this truth and a painful consciousness of this waste.

"We think at the age of twenty," said one who later became an octogenarian, "that life is much too long for that which we have to learn and do; and that there is an almost fabulous distance between our age and that of our grandfather. But when, at the age of sixty, if we are fortunate enough to reach it, or unfortunate enough, as the case may be, and according as we have profitably invested or wasted our time, we halt, and look back along the way we have come, and cast up and endeavor to balance our accounts with time and opportunity, we find that we have made life much too short, and thrown away a huge portion of our time. Then we, in our mind, deduct from the sum total of our years the hours that we have needlessly passed in sleep; the working-hours each day, during which the surface of the mind's sluggish pool has not been stirred or ruffled by a single thought; the days that we have gladly got rid of, to attain some real or fancied object that lay beyond, in the way between us and which stood irksomely the intervening days; the hours worse than wasted in follies and dissipation, or misspent in useless and unprofitable studies; and we acknowledge, with a sigh, that we could have learned and done, in half a score of years well spent, more than we HAVE done in all our forty years of manhood."

Here is another lament:

"Lost! yesterday, somewhere between sunrise and sunset, three golden hours, each worth sixty diamond minutes. No reward is offered for they are gone forever. Gone forever! In those bitter words lies the sting of the moralist.' '

But mere remorse and repining will do little to relieve this unpleasant situation. They are helpful only as they arouse us to action. The practical view is better expressed in such homely maxims as these:

"Don't cry over spilt milk."

"Never too late to mend."

And the practical question is, What can be done to stay the waste?

REMEDIES.

Now the first step toward curing an evil is to ascertain its cause. And when we seek the causes of our waste of time we will find foremost amongst them the lack of system. We have not put our lives in order. We spend our time in a haphazard fashion. We have no fixed method of utilizing it. Hence we undertake enterprises which we never finish because we find ere long that they should not have been begun. If we read it is for amusement and recreation rather than for inspiration or instruction. All this necessarily involves waste of time and the remedy must be sought in the adoption of the orderly life. For an essential feature of any scheme of economy is method, order, system. Well did Pope say,

"Order is heaven's first law."

And one of the first applications of method is the analysis and survey of our resources. If as Franklin says, "time is the stuff life is made of" our days are the basic elements of the stuff.

> "For the structure that we raise
> Time is with materials filled;
> Our todays and yesterdays
> Are the blocks with which we build."

Our days then are the units of our lives and it is to our days that we must apply any workable scheme for improving time.

"Oh," said Thomas a Kempis, "Oh that I had lived ONE DAY thoroughly well." And the psalmist prayed, "So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

"Perdidi diem" (I have lost a day) was the lament of Rome's imperial philosopher, Marcus Aurelius. "Carpe diem!" (seize the day) was the more practical thought of the modern-minded Horace.

But the day which we must seize is not some distant day—not even tomorrow—but today.

"Today is king," says Emerson.

And here we must face the truth that "procrastination is the thief of time." Too many of us have planned great deeds "when we get time!"

PLAN THE DAY.

Given today as the unit of our life how shall we use it and stay the waste? Well, in the first place we must plan it. Just as the well ordered workshop has "a place for everything and everything in its place," so the fruitful day has "a time for everything and everything in its time."

"A time for everything;" ay, there's the rub. It cannot be found, you say. Well, it will surprise you to find how much can be done by trying. The idle have the least time. And here we reach a second step in the process—selection. For since we have not time for all we must be content to exclude some. At least we must select the most essential things. Do not fail to allow for health, character; the moral, spiritual, and intellectual, life as well as for business and pleasure. Without these first the day is barren.

"We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths; in feelings, not in figures on a dial."

Some one said of a certain octogenarian that in all his four score years he had never really lived fifteen minutes!

ODD MOMENTS.

It is only when we are trying to find a place in our crowded day for even the most essential things that we come to appreciate the value of its fragments. For just as the day is the unit of life so the hour is the unit of the day and the minute of the hour.

Strive as we may to make our working plan complete, the most successful of us will always find moments and even hours which have not been provided for. Here is the chance for economy. The old adage, "save the pennies and the pounds will take care of themselves," may be adapted to the situation. "Save the moments and the days will take care of themselves."

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

Save some less important tasks for rainy days.

Have a good book ready for that wait at the station.

Set aside the next lull for reflection on some important problem.

It has been said of the late Grant Allen—who died in early middle life after having written voluminously and much that will live: "Like all men who do much in this world he had a genius for using up remnants of time. He had, too, an almost Gladstonian power of concentration."

MAKE THE PLAN COMPREHENSIVE.

But while our days, hours and minutes deserve our first attention we shall fail to make the most of them unless they are considered as parts of a whole to which each is essential. Our work of today is most effective when it supplements that of yesterday and prepares that of tomorrow. Happy is the man who finds a life-work, one to which he can devote his best energies throughout his active years. One of the sagest remarks of Theodore Roosevelt is: "the best fate is to be able to work hard at something worth while."

But to do this effectively we must look a long way ahead and plan for the far future. And here we encounter a paradox. Just as we begin to realize at once the brevity and the uncertainty of life we must prepare to live long. For consider the consequences of any other course! If every man believed that today was his last, the world would cease to move. Then—

"Live as though you are to die tomorrow; work as though you are to live forever."

Let us try to find our vocation; let us discover a task worth while; and then let us take a lifetime to accomplish it.

Another source of leakage in our time is indolence and sloth. We will not force ourselves to do what is necessary to improve our time; it is so easy to drift and dawdle. And here the orderly life requires the substitution of industry and diligence for idleness. One of the most pregnant of the recorded sayings of Jesus is the injunction, "Work while the day lasts; for night cometh when no man can work."

"Not many lives but only one have we:
One, only one.
How sacred should that one life ever be
Day after day filled up with blessed toil,
Hour after hour still bringing in new spoil!"

EXECUTE THE PLAN.

However complete our working plan it will avail nothing unless we are prepared to carry it out. "Hell is paved with good intentions." The shores of time are strewn with the wrecks of beautiful theories whose authors had not the strength of character to venture out upon the real ocean of life.

The execution of a matured plan is merely the most intelligent form of what we call diligence or industry which is the handmaid of economy in enabling us to make the most of our time.

But these virtues require an exercise of the will—that dynamo of the human spirit. And it has been well said that "character is perfectly educated will." Hence our quest for a means of utilizing time and stopping its waste ends in finding that it depends in the last analysis upon the education of the will—i. e., the development of character. This then is the key to the orderly life and this alone will make us, in Charles Kingsley's noble words, to

"Do noble things
Not dream them all day long;
And so make life, death and the vast forever
One grand sweet song!"

"Good-Bye to Glory"

BY EDGAR DEWITT JONES

IT WAS a tragic day for the Hebrew nation. The battle had gone sore against the Israelites and the Philistines were in possession of the ark of God. Eli, the aged prophet and judge, sat beside the gate of Shiloh anxiously awaiting a messenger from the battlefield. And soon one came bearing the dreadful news that the army of Israel was defeated; that Eli's two sons, Hophni and Phinehas, were dead, and that the ark of God was taken by the enemy. The tidings were so terrible that the old man fell from his seat breaking his neck, thus adding another tragedy to the sorrows of that day. Nor was this all. Eli's daughter-in-law, the wife of Phinehas, was so prostrated by the death of her husband and the capture of the ark of God that she gave birth prematurely to a son whom she named, with dying breath, Ichabod, saying, "The glory is departed from Israel, because the ark of God was taken and because of her father-in-law and her husband."

> "And she named the child Ichabod, saying, The glory has departed from Israel." 1 Samuel 4:21.

This is the Old Testament story that has made the name Ichabod synonymous with defeat, with loss of prestige and honor.. Ichabod—"Goodbye to Glory"—what a melancholy epitaph and how fittingly though pathetically it has been written over nations, institutions, and individuals.

The visitor to the old world is seldom permitted to forget he is in the midst of monuments and memorials reflecting a glory that is past and gone. Ichabod is written over many a stately ruin and broken column. Nowhere does one feel this so profoundly as among the relics of ancient Rome, once called "The Mistress of the World" and "The Eternal City."

Gibbon consumes many thousand pages to trace the story of the Roman empire's fall, but there is a huge canvas in the gallery at Versailles that tells it truthfully in a single picture. It is entitled "The Last Days of Rome," and portrays a banquet scene of revelry and debauchery. Roman senators and chieftains instead of being busy with the affairs of the state are holding half nude women in their arms, while others are drinking deeply from jeweled cups. Still others are beastly drunken, some of them lying stretched out upon the floor or under the banquet table. It is a picture of moral depravity such as one cannot soon forget.

It is ever so! When a nation loses the sense of sin it begins to decay at the very heart. Jeremiah, in chapter eight, the twelfth verse, charges the cause of Israel's downfall to sodden immorality. "Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? Nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush." When Israel forgot how to blush her national doom was sealed.

A nation may lose her glory, however, without a departure into the grosser sins and vices. Commercialism, for instance, may so enter the very heart of a people's life that lust for gain corrodes the nobler and finer ideals. A close observer has remarked that the attitude of America toward the present European war is palpably colored by the commercial spirit. Said he: "There is a very great danger that when the history of this world conflict be written America's part will be that of a supposedly neutral onlooker shrewdly speculating the while how many millions of dollars may accrue to the United States because of Europe's misfortune." This criticism is strongly phrased and is perhaps not exactly just, but there is enough truth in it to give sober pause to every citizen of the United States who holds dear to his heart the traditions that glorify our country's history as a whole.

This true grandeur and glory of a nation has often been dimmed and alas! blotted out by military ideals. Our own country faces a grave issue in the policy of "preparedness," advocated by many of our political leaders. Quite apart from any partisan or political phase of the issue, the average citizen is sorely perplexed by the gravity of the preparedness doctrine. If once our nation adopts a militarist policy no one knows where it will end, but judging by the history of nations that have adopted it the fruit of such policy is war—not peace. It has been our glory in the past that our dependence was not in forts, in battleships, or in soldiery, but in the spirit of democracy, justice, and liberty. The ideals of our fathers in this high regard may go aglimmering before the new policy of a great army and a mighty navy for American defense.

"For heathen heart that puts her trust
In reeking tube and iron shard—
All valiant dust that builds on dust,
And guarding, calls not Thee to guard:
For frantic boast and foolish word,
Thy mercy on Thy people, Lord!"

Bloomington, Ill.

O ALL WIDE PLACES.

O all wide places * * *
Great shining seas, pine forests, mountains wild!
Rock-bosomed shores, rough heaths and sheep cropt downs!
Vast piled clouds, blue spaces undefiled!
Room, give me room! give loneliness and air!
Free things and plenteous in your regions fair.
White dove of David, flying overhead,
Golden with sunlight on thy snowy wings,
Outspreading thee my longing thoughts are fled
To find a home afar from men and things,
Where in His temple, earth o'erarched with sky,
God's heart to mine may speak, my heart reply.
O God of mountains, stars and boundless spaces!
O God of freedom and of joyous hearts!
When thy face looketh forth from all men's faces,
There will be room enough in crowded marts;
Brood Thou around me, and the noise is o'er;
Thy universe my closet with shut door.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE EASTER OFFERING

WITH the coming of Easter and all of the satisfaction, aesthetic and spiritual, which it brings, no Christian should permit himself to forget those broad humanitarian interests which have come to the world's attention through the advent of our faith and the coming from the dead of our Lord Jesus.

First among these stands the care of the dependent. The apostle insisted that those who did not care for their own were worse than the unbelieving. The orphans and the unprovided aged of Disciple homes are objects of just this solicitous regard. That provision is being made for them is one of the satisfactions all our people feel.

The National Benevolent Association provides for these dependent ones in half a score of institutions in different parts of the country. And for the support of these institutions it receives the offerings of the churches on Easter day. It will be a work of love to contribute to this cause, and the churches that are alert to their privileges will respond generously to the needs of these its wards.

THE BIBLE AND THE NATION

ON SUNDAY, May 7th, the American Bible Society will celebrate its Centennial. One hundred years ago the Society was launched in the City Hall of New York, and an address was delivered by Jacob Radcliff, the Mayor of the city.

In the century that has intervened the organization has rendered the cause of Christianity a monumental service. Its line has gone out into all the earth, and its words to the end of the world.

It seems fitting that an anniversary so notable should be recognized with appropriate services by all the churches. Through its instrumentality more than one hundred and fifteen millions of copies of the Scriptures have been circulated. The Bible has been published in almost every living tongue.

Full information and aid in preparing for a suitable celebration of the day may be secured from the Society, Astor Place, New York. May 7th ought to be a great day in the history of American Christianity.

THE PEACE CRUSADERS

DURING the past week Chicago has been visited by a company of gentlemen on a tour of the country in the interest of peace.

They are not peace-at-any-price men, for it would probably be difficult to find any one who would proclaim himself of that persuasion.

They are not anti-preparedness men, for they believe that there are many regards in which our country is very far from prepared to take its rightful place of leadership among the nations of the world. And one of the best proofs of its naive lack of readiness for a crisis like the present is the frantic plea for larger armaments now being made in so large a section of the press.

The nation is in need of many things far more than of additional ships, forts, regiments and munitions. It is in need of information regarding the amount of money it has been spending during the past ten years for these very forms of "preparedness" now so loudly advocated—an amount in excess of that spent by Germany during the same period for the same purpose, and Germany has the reputation of being the most militaristic nation in the world.

The nation is in need of poise and sanity more than guns. Under the admirable leadership of a President who has yielded only in part to the war clamor about him, it has been exempt thus far from involvement in the conflict into which some of the fighting nations think we ought to have gone, and many of our own people seem determined that we shall be drawn.

The company of visitors included Rabbi Wise of New York, Dr. Washington Gladden of Ohio, Rev. A. A. Berle of Boston, Mr. Amos Pinchot of Washington, and several others. They will visit most of the leading cities of the country.

They discussed the question of preparedness plainly and convincingly. They showed from the testimony of leading navy men that our navy is in no such need of augmentation as is assumed. They made evident the close connection between the makers and sellers of munitions of war and the so-called "Navy League." They discussed one by one the arguments advanced in support of the theory of danger, and the nations that are cited as our possible invaders, Japan, Germany, England, revealing the absurdity of the alarmist talk.

A great company listened and applauded through the evening. It was a lesson in the larger obligation of preparedness—against jingoism, misinformation, and the militaristic spirit throughout the world.

THE DRIVE OF VICTORY

FOR several years the United Society of Christian Endeavor has been preparing to build for itself a headquarters building in Boston. It is one of the great needs of the Society, and such a building would in a score of ways promote the interests for which the Society stands.

Pledges amounting to sixty-five thousand dollars still remain unpaid by the various states that undertook to raise given sums for this purpose. It is thought that if these state pledges were fulfilled, the work could be done at once.

For example, the Endeavorers of Illinois promised to raise five thousand dollars; of this amount thirteen hundred dollars remains unpaid. Indiana promised one thousand, and nine hundred and fifty remains unpaid. Ohio promised fifteen thousand dollars, and almost a thousand is unpaid.

Other states have similar records. A united "drive" would carry the trenches of the enemy and provide the much needed structure. Will your Society, or individuals in it, help at this strategic moment?

GERMAN LOSSES

IT IS one of the sad results of the present war that so much of the world's confidence in German intellectual leadership is being shattered.

The debt of Christianity to Germany is almost incalculable. The earliest movement toward a genuine reform of the church came out of that land. Some of the most illustrious names in the history of Protestant Christianity are from the German race.

In the field of biblical and theological studies German scholars have taken the very highest rank. Their painstaking investigation of the Old and New Testaments and of Christian origins and history has furnished foundation stones for Christian scholarship in all other lands. At times these conclusions have seemed radical and in certain instances fantastic, but Christian scholarship has found these German researches of priceless significance in the alignment of modern thinking on Christian history and literature.

It is for these and other reasons that the present loss of faith in German leadership is the more pathetic. To witness the willingness of the men whose names have become household words in the field of biblical study and religious history to give their assent to theories of political autocracy and militarism which are revolting to the conscience of the rest of Christendom is, to a certain degree, to lose confidence in human nature.

We have stood with uncovered heads in the presence of the scholarship of men like Harnack, Diessman, Eucken and Delbruck. Their influence over non-German Christendom is today shattered forever, though their scholarship is revered and their contributions to theological literature are of the highest value.

This is one of the tragedies of the war.

A mightier Church shall come, whose covenant word
Shall be the deeds of love. Not CREDO then—
AMO shall be the password through its gates.
Man shall not ask his brother any more,
"Believest thou?" but "Lovest thou?" and all
Shall answer at God's altar, "Lord, I love."
For Hope may anchor, Faith may steer, but Love,
Great Love alone, is captain of the soul.
—Henry Bernard Carpenter.

LOVE NEVER DIES. Our partial knowledge dies amid the revelations of perfect vision. Faith will be needed no more where we know as we are known. Hope fades in fruition. But Love abides forever. Union Churches

The Church at Scotia, California.

The church at Scotia, Cal., is not technically a union church. To the man who can think only in terms of denominations this would be classed as a Presbyterian church, for it is organized according to the Presbyterian form, receives money from the Home Mission Board of the Presbyterian church, and makes such benevolent or missionary offerings as are taken in the congregation to this denomination. Ideally the church is a union or community church. The people of Scotia know it as the Scotia Union church. Members of any denomination are received into fellowship without distinction, and without being made to subscribe to a single dogma which is distinctly Presbyterian. The widest liberty possible in harmony with evangelical Christianity is granted to the new convert in being received into the church. No person who loves the Lord Jesus Christ and wants to follow him is turned away from membership in this church because his previous training may have developed a Baptist, Lutheran or even a Quaker conscience.

The history of the way the church came to be under the Presbyterian Board may be of interest. Scotia is a typical lumbering town of the Pacific coast. It lies in the midst of the famous Humboldt redwoods, and its 1,200 or 1,500 inhabitants are made up of representatives of almost every foreign country. The entire town, land, houses and factories, are owned by the Pacific Lumber Company. About eleven years ago, after the town was well started, a subscription was taken for the purpose of building a union church. I think the company furnished the lumber free, and of course they own the land on which the building stands. After the building was completed any minister of the various denominations was privileged to hold services. Early in the history of the church an Episcopalian rector holding a charge elsewhere made a regular appointment with the Scotia church to hold services on certain Sundays of each month. Other ministers of the county would fill in other Sundays, just as the spirit happened to move them. After the rector left others attempted to do something for the field, but with no great measure of success. Scotia was a pretty rough place in those days and considered a difficult field at best.

In 1910 the manager of the company requested Rev. E. P. Shier, who had been pastor of the Eureka Presbyterian church, but at the time was on a ranch on account of poor health, to become the resident pastor of the church. The church being unorganized and in no position to pay a minister a living salary, Mr. Shier agreed to take it only on condition that it be organized under the Presbyterian denomination. As nearly as I can learn, the change was made merely from the standpoint of expediency. The church became, speaking technically, a Presbyterian church for the purpose of being organized and of receiving funds, but ideally and in spirit it was still to be a union church.

Such a situation is not half bad if the minister who takes charge of the field believes in Christian union. The trouble comes when some minister bubbling over with sectarian zeal takes the field. Such a man can very quickly play havoc with the interests of the kingdom. It seems to me that at the present stage of progress toward Christian union one of two plans should be worked. Either draw these union churches together into some form of cooperation—which would in reality amount to organizing another denomination—or let the leading denomination invite such into their fellowship, with the understanding that these fields shall be considered holy ground into which sectarianism with its hob-nailed shoes shall not enter. It is a pleasant and easy task to get the people of a community behind the union church ideal when they and the union preacher are left alone. The trouble comes when missionary secretaries, religious journals and heresy hunting fellow-pastors come in and stir up denominational patriotism of the older members of the congregation.

I have been on this field a little more than a year, but my experience in that time convinces me that the most fruitful, efficient and surely the most pleasant ministry a man can engage in is that of the community church where the interests of the kingdom are always first and sectarian interests are forgotten in a wholehearted service which sees on the one hand a tremendously needy world and on the other a crucified Christ.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Socialism and Christianity.

There are many signs of better understanding between the representatives of socialism and Christianity. In the early days the movement sprang into being largely from the brain of Karl Marx, who was a materialist. Exponents of socialism made comparisons between their movement and organized religion that were not calculated to help the churches. This was met by determined opposition on the part of Christians, this opposition being more strenuous in the Roman Catholic church. John Spargo, a prominent socialist, has recently written a book, "Marxian Socialism and Religion," which has an irenic tone. One quotation is sufficient to show the curve of the book. Engel is made to say: "Marx and I are partly responsible for the fact that the younger men have sometimes laid more stress on the economic side than it deserves. In meeting the attacks of our opponents it was necessary for us to emphasize the dominant principle denied by them, but when anyone distorts this so as to read that the economic factor is the sole element, he converts the statement into a meaningless abstract, absurd phrase. The view that every fact in history can be explained on economic grounds is not only pedantic, but ridiculous."

Railroad Employs a Minister.

When a railroad employs a minister and puts him on the payroll because he increases the efficiency of the employes, we have striking proof of the practical character of Christianity. The Rev. C. L. Bass, a member of the Northern Georgia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, did a great deal of work among railroad men at Inman Yards, a terminal of the Southern Railroad. His influence was such that the road now employs him to travel over the lines and he makes addresses in Christian associations and at other places where railroad men may be brought together to hear him.

Passion Week and Holy Week.

It has become common for Protestant churches to have special services the week of the Easter season. In Chicago, Rev. John Timothy Stone and Rev. James M. Gray, of Moody Bible Institute, are speaking this year at noon hour in the Garrick theater. Often, however, Protestant announcements have wrong terminology. Passion week is the week befor Palm Sunday, and Holy Week is the week before Easter.

Bishop Luccock Passes Away.

Bishop Naphtali Luccock, of the Methodist Episcopal church, passed away on April 1, after an illness of considerable length. He was sixty-two years of age at the time of his death. He taught Greek in Allegheny college, Meadville, Pa., for three years but he rest of his active life was given to the ministry. He held important pastorates in Pittsburgh, St. Louis and Kansas City. He was elected to the episcopate in 1912 and the scene of his episcopal labors was the great northwest where he became very popular, though he had been a city man for so many years.

The Rights of an Episcopal Rector..

A case very interesting to Episcopalians had arisen in Alabama involving the rights of a rector in his parish, and also raising some questions about the encroachments of Romanism in the denomination. The Rev. F. D. Devall, rector of the church of the Ascension in Montgomery, has been employing acolytes in the chancel to assist in the service, just as Roman priests do. He was forbidden to do this by his bishop and refused obedience. The Standing Committee of the diocese to pass on cases of disobedience to ordination vows has decided that the church has no law against such practice as the use of acolytes, and that the bishop had no right to substitute his order for the constitution and law of the church. This opens the way for further Romanizing the ritual in the church.

New Plan for Christian Jews.

When the Hebrew-Christian Alliance of America meets in May it will consider a request from the Philadelphia branch to adopt a public declaration that Jews who accept Jesus Christ as Savior need not abandon "the social and national customs" of Israel. The new plan involves a compromise with Judaism much like that which was in operation in the Jerusalem church. A Jew would have the privilege of retaining the worship in the synagogue along with a loyalty to Jesus Christ. This would be an attitude on the part of Christian Jews that would prove very embarassing to the rabbis. It is thought that the rabbis could not deny the privileges of worship to a Jew who kept Jewish customs, even though he believed in Jesus as Messiah.

"Lucky Baldwin" With Episcopalians.

Independent rescue missions are having a hard time in the city these days and some of the prominent mission workers have sought refuge with the denominations. Dan Batey recently became connected with the city missionary society of the Methodists in Chicago, and now an even more celebrated character, "Lucky Baldwin," whose real name is Chris. J. Balfe, has opened a Cathedral Shelter at 937 West Randolph St., Chicago, with the aid of the Episcopalians and with the approval of the Bishop of Chicago. Mr. Balfe got his title "Lucky Baldwin" from the fact that he was a criminal without getting convicted. A very interesting sketch of him is to be found in Macfarlane's "Those That Have Come Back." He was converted in the Jerry McCauley mission of New York seven years ago. Since then he has learned to read and write. He goes to Joliet once a week to teach a Bible-class among the prisoners at the state penitentiary.

Roman Catholics Campaign to Remove Prejudice.

The Knights of Columbus have standing committees who work on the task of breaking down religious prejudice, especially that which is directed against the Roman Catholic church. On April 6, they held a mass meeting in the Metropolitan Opera House in Philadelphia. Invitations were sent to laymen of all religious beliefs to attend the meeting, and a great crowd came. The chairman of the meeting was a Jew, formerly Mayor Sulzberger. Mr. Joseph Scott, of Los Angeles, was the chief speaker.

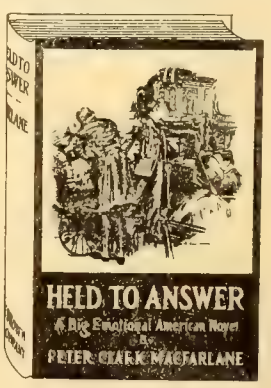
Seminary Loses its Head.

The General Theological Seminary of New York has lost its dean, the Very Rev. Wilford Lash Robbins. He has served for thirteen years. He is going abroad for the present. He is known as the author of two books, "An Essay Toward Faith," and "A Christian Apologetic."

Episcopalians Use Motion Pictures.

Two Episcopal churches in Chicago are making use of the motion picture in religious work, St. Paul's and Trinity. A recent ordinance has passed the city council permitting churches to use non-inflammable films. The Pathe company has produced many reels for the use of churches. The Episcopalians are using the film in connection with some of their confirmation classes.

Will Decorate Ministers' Graves.



The Veterans of the Cross Fellowship of the Methodist Episcopal church has appointed Sunday, June 18, as the day to decorate the graves of deceased ministers. There are 250 of these departed ministers who were buried in th territory of the Rock River conference.

THE MISSIONARIES OF ANTIOCH.

Lesson for May 7.

Golden Text: Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations. Matthew 28:19.

Lesson Acts 11:19-30; 12:25-13:12: verses 11:19-26; 13:1-3 printed.

Memorize verses 13:2, 3.

11 (19) They therefore that were scattered abroad upon the tribulation that arose about Stephen traveled as far as Phoenicia and Cyprus, and Antioch, speaking the word to none save only to Jews. (20) But there were some of them, men of Cyprus and Cyrene, who, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Greeks also, preaching the Lord Jesus. (21) And the hand of the Lord was with them; and a great number that believed turned unto the Lord. (22) And the report concerning them came to the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas as far as Antioch: (23) who, when he was come, and had seen the grace of God, was glad; and he exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord; (24) for he was a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord. (25) And he went forth to Tarsus to seek for Paul; (26) and when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that even for a whole year they were gathered together with the Church, and taught much people; and that the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.

13 (1) Now there were at Antioch, in the church that was there, prophets and teachers, Barnabas, and Symeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen the foster-brother of Herod the tetrarch, and Saul. (2) And as they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Spirit said, separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. (3) Then, when they had fasted and prayéd and laid their hands on them, they sent them away.

VERSE BY VERSE.

11:19. They therefore. Read the account. Acts 8:1-4. The dispersion occurred after the death of Stephen.—Traveled as far as Phoenicia, and Cyprus and Antioch. The place may have been mentioned to show how far the gospel was carried.—Speaking the word to none save only to Jews. They went among their own people.

11.20. Men of Cyprus and Cyrene. Greek-speaking Jews who did not scruple about mixing with the Gentiles.—Greeks. The context and some of the manuscripts indicate that the pure Greeks had the gospel preached to them.

11:21. The hand of the Lord. The hand is a symbol of power, and the success among the Gentiles was so marked that it seemed as if the Lord was with them in great power.—A great number that believed. The exact number is not given, but the number was large enough to make a new center of influence from which the gospel spread over the Roman Empire.

11:22. The church which was at Jerusalem. This conservative congregation did not view with Christian joy the conversion of the Gentile.—They sent forth Barnabas. He was the proper person, for he was a native of Cyprus and would judge the work at its proper value. We need thousands like Barnabas today.

11:23. Had seen the grace of God. They witnessed the power of the gospel among the Greeks and thought the results could only be accounted for on the ground of the grace of God.—Purpose of heart. Strong purpose was necessary to the best type of Christian then as now.

11:24. Full of the Holy Spirit. Such a man would have the feeling of the Master toward the Gentiles.—Much people was added unto the Lord. The life that is filled with the spirit of God will attract men and women to the Father.

11:25. Went forth to Tarsus to seek for Saul. Barnabas knew Saul and his work so he desired to go to look him up.

11:26. For a whole year they were gathered together with the church. Both these men were great powers and as a result of their year's work the community was reached.—The disciples were called Christians first in Antioch. It is evident that the conduct of these men and women had been so changed that the people noticed that they lived as Christ would live; hence they were called Christians. They did not assume the name.

13:1. The church that was there. The body of Christians and not a church building.—Lucius. One of the prominent churchmen at Antioch. He may have been a kinsman of Saul.—Manaen. The foster-brother of Herod. This was the son of Herod the Great.

13:2. As they ministered to the Lord. As they conducted the worship of the church. The words denote any official duty.—Separate me Barnabas and Saul. The Greek adds "now," which gives precision and emphasis to the expression.

13:3. When they had fasted and prayed. The Jews prayed at the setting apart of the Twelve. See Luke 6:72, 73.

Paul and Barnabas

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

FOR SOME years after the conversion of Paul the church seems to have lost sight of him. It is a very common thing for our churches to take in a large number of converts and then lose sight of them. Judging from what we have, by way of information, the church leaders did not care any more than modern churchmen seem to care whether the sheep of their pasture stray and are lost.

Barnabas was a native of Cyprus, but the son of Jewish parents who were of the tribe of Levi. He possessed some land which he generously disposed of for the benefit of the early Christian community, and "laid the money at the apostles' feet." Since this occurred soon after Pentecost we are justified in believing that he was an early convert to the Christian faith.

Barnabas was associated with Paul in the early days of his Christian experience. When Paul returned to Jerusalem after his conversion the disciples were afraid of him. It was at this time that Barnabas introduced Paul to the church and testified to his sincerity. Barnabas believed in him, and told his story so convincingly that they received him into their fellowship. They did not, however, entrust him with any great church work. He was an undiscovered leader when he left Jerusalem for his old home in Tarsus. His ability attracted Barnabas.

God was bringing things to pass and doors were opening rapidly. The conversion of Cornelius, with its attendant circumstances, had given the Jewish Christians clearer views of the comprehensive character of the new dispensation, yet the accession of a large number of Gentiles to the church at Antioch was an event so extraordinary that the conservative old church in Jerusalem resolved to send a man to look after their "modern theology."

They sent Barnabas. When he witnessed the flourishing condition of the church, and felt the urgent demand for a man of vision he very naturally turned to Saul. The door of opportunity was opening to the whole Gentile world and Saul of all men was best fitted to enter. Barnabas sought him in Tarsus. Saul was a man with the necessary breadth of mind and sympathy of heart; a Hellenistic Jew like himself, familiar with the Greek language, culture and thought. How much we are indebted to Barnabas, as God's agent for setting Paul on his wonderful career of usefulness, we shall never know; but let us try to show our appreciation in the matter of discovering other men for life's duties. Everywhere there are people whose talents are lost to God's kingdom, because no Barnabas has brought them out of their hiding place. Have you a thoughtful young man who should be trained for leadership? Have you a singer among your pupils who could be encouraged to become a "sweet singer in Israel?" If you have, your supreme task is to lead them to places of service. If it had not been for Barnabas, Saul might have remained in obscurity. Think if you can what the world would have lost if Paul had not been discovered!

It is a long and rugged road from Peter the fisherman to Peter the martyr, from Paul the persecutor to Paul the great missionary to the Gentiles. But the spirit of God is a faithful leader and they both arrived. They had many and costly lessons to learn, and so will the modern Christian if he is worthy of the name. Paul and Barnabas labored for a year, teaching the disciples in Antioch, but at the end of that time the Disciples were called Christians.

Our task is not half done when we get one to see the light; we must teach him to walk in it and be saved.

Christianity wants nothing so much in the world as sunny people; and the old are hungrier for love than for bread; and the oil of joy is very cheap; and if you can help the poor on with a garment of praise, it will be better for them than blankets.—Henry Drummond.

Disciples Table Talk

Two Springfield, Mo., Disciple Churches May Unite.

A union of Central church and First church, Springfield, Mo., to form one of the largest congregations in the city, which probably will build a splendid new church edifice is contemplated as a result of a decision of officers of the two congregations at a joint meeting held a few days ago. The plan by which the union will be effected, contemplates the selling of both properties now owned by the two churches. For several months First church has been without a pastor. Weekly services, conducted by members of the official board and the congregation, have been held, but no pastor has been called. W. E. Harlow is pastor of Central church. Central church is the larger of the two bodies. It has a congregation of about 800 members. First church has about 300 members.

Bethany Class of 1906 Will Make Gift to College

Anna M. Kemp, of Dawson Ave., Mansfield, O., is the secretary of the class of 1906, Bethany college, and she announces a reunion of that class to be held in June at commencement time, at the college. She also states that it has been decided by this class to lead all the alumni in a gift of a $600 piano to the college at this season. She requests all Bethany alumni to join in this worthy work and to send checks to help. These should be made payable to "Bethany Alumni Piano Fund, Anna M. Kemp, Treas."

Two Pennsylvania Pastors Believe in Exchange Meeting Idea.

E. N. Duty, pastor at Charleroi, Pa., First, and Ben. S. Johnson, of First church, Greensburg, Pa., were college friends, and now in the time of their maturity have been renewing their friendship through exchange revivals. Not long ago Mr. Duty preached for a Greensburg meeting, and now Mr. Johnson has just closed an excellent meeting at Charleroi, Mr. Duty leading in solo and chorus work. Junior and senior choruses were used with success. Although the field had been gleaned a year ago by the Minges company, 32 persons were added to the membership. Mr. Duty speaks highly of the work of his co-laborer and mentions especially the deepening of the spiritual life of the church as a notable result of the campaign.

Easter Week at Liberty, Mo.

Features of the Easter week services at Liberty, Mo., besides sermons by the pastor, Graham Frank, were the following: Sermon by S. B. Cousins of the Baptist church, Liberty, Mo. Sermon by L. J. Marshall of Wabash Ave. Christian church, Kansas City. Sermon by Pres. Joseph A. Serena of William Woods College, Fulton, Mo. Sermon by Burris A. Jenkins of the Linwood Blvd. Christian church, Kansas City. Sermon by E. F. Leake of First church, Independence, Mo. G. W. Muckley recently gave an address on the Panama Congress at Liberty church.

Indiana Convention to Be Held at Danville, May 15 to 18.

Plans are being rapidly pushed to completion by the Danville, Ind., church to entertain the state convention which meets May 15 to 18. The Recreational Committee is arranging to procure the use of all the tennis courts, croquet grounds and baseball diamonds for the use of the guests. The splendid new gymnasium at the church will be at the disposal of all who come. So this convention will not by any means be a "dry" affair. The program will be an exceptionally strong one. Monday will be Ministerial Day, with the opening session of the convention in the evening. Tuesday will be devoted to state missions. Wednesday will be Bible-school and Endeavor day and Thursday will be C. W. B. M. day. Some of the strongest talent in the brotherhood will be upon the program. Charles M. Sharpe, of Chicago; H. H. Peters, of Paris, Ill.; W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City; F. D. Kershner, of the "Christian Evangelist;" R. A. Walker, Field Secretary of the State C. E. Society; Miss Maus, of Cincinnati; Mrs. Harrison, of Lexington; and Mrs. Stewart, of Kentucky, are a few of the number.

Ohio Church Has Four Living Links.

First church, Steubenville, O., has just closed the most prosperous year of its history. Ernest H. Wray has been pastor of the church for the last three years, since his graduation from college. When Mr. Wray came to this church it was doing very little for missions. Today it is supporting four living links besides its support to other benevolent institutions. It cares for the following missionaries: Mrs. Settelmeyer, of Nanking University, through the F. C. M. S.; C. S. Dunning, Baton Rouge, La., under the A. C. M. S.; J. F. Baxter, of Cambridge, under the O. C. M. S.; and the church has recently assumed responsibility of a living link in India under the C. W. B. M. During the last year the church gave almost as much for others as it kept for itself. Last year's total budget for current expenses was $4,155.22. and offerings for missions and benevolences, $1,864.40. During the past two years the pastor has been his own evangelist and there have been more than two hundred persons added to the church. Mr. H. W. Cohagen has recently been employed as assistant to the pastor and choir director. For the last four weeks the pastor has been delivering Sunday evening lectures on "The Four Great Religions of the World": Buddhism, Mohammedanism, Judaism and Christianity. These lectures attracted much attention and drew capacity houses. During Passion Week there were services each evening, and on Thursday night was observed the Lord's Supper. Easter Sunday is set as Decision Day. Immediately after Easter the pastor will begin a series of Sunday evening sermons on "The Four Great Sins of This Age." The Steubenville congregation has voted to substantially increase the pastor's salary, and to send him as a delegate to the National Laymen's Congress in Washington, D. C., April 26 to 30.

Prof. C. M. Sharpe, of Chicago, who will have a prominent place on Indiana's State convention program this year.

Third Illinois District to Meet at Monmouth.

The Disciples of the Third District, Ill., will meet in annual convention May 9 and 10, at Monmouth. Allen T. Shaw is president of the convention, W. D. Endres, vice-president, and George W. Wise, secretary. Features of the program are: C. W. B. M. Session, Tuesday afternoon; an address on "Latin America," by Mrs. W. J. Burner, and District President Shaw's address on Tuesday evening. The convention sermon will be preached by H. E. Sala, on Wednesday morning; H. O. Pritchard, of Eureka, will speak on the church college, on Wednesday afternoon; the evening of this last day will be given to the state mission address of John R. Golden and to an address by Edgar D. Jones. Guy V. Ferguson, pastor at Monmouth, should be written regarding entertainment of delegates and guests.

Women to Lead in New Building Enterprise.

W. W. Johnson, pastor at Orrville, O., writes that the church in this town has just closed an unusually prosperous year, with March 31. During the year there were received into the church by statement and letter, 31, by baptism, 61. Seven removals by letter and two by death made a net gain of 83, net increase of 60%, the present membership being 203. The pastor made 332 calls and preached 85 sermons. For all purposes there was raised $2,246.79. There was a total attendance in the Bible-school of 7,334, with a total offering of $444.59. A Christian Endeavor society was organized, and has been doing excellent work. All indebtedness is now paid and a surplus in both the church and Sunday-school treasury. The Ladies' Aid Society is already looking forward to a new church, with $225 put aside for building fund.

Ohio Bible School News Notes.

During the past year the Millersburg school spent $99.64 for missions and $155.90 for local expense. E. C. Smith is pastor and Geo. Lange superintendent. * * * The church at Chardon is expecting to remodel its building in the near future in order to accommodate the rapidly growing Bible-school. Pastor A. T. Fleming and Supt. E. D. King are planning to introduce graded lessons as rapidly as possible. * * * Twenty-seven men assembled in the church at Fowlers Mills, March 12 and organized a men's class. E. A. Summers is president. Frank Root is secretary, and D. N. Gilette, the pastor, is teacher. State Superintendent Wilford H. McLain was present and gave an address.

Christian Endeavor Foreign Mission Notes.

The Endeavor Society at Hedrick, Iowa, has become a Life-line Society, assuming the support of Mirshah, an evangelist at Jubbulpore, through the Foreign Society. * * * A keen interest is manifest on the part of the Endeavor Societies in the orphanage work at Damoh, India. The societies are to be congratulated on the work accomplished in the years past. * * * The Foreign Society has prepared a very interesting set of colored stereopticon slides telling the story of the work at Damoh, India. The societies are gladly availing themselves of the opportunity of using them. They are sent out to societies paying express charges. Requests should be sent to Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

BREIF NEWS NOTES.

—The churches of the Fourth District, Illinois, will hold their convention this year at Pontiac, May 24, 25. The pastor, Ernest H. Reed, should be addressed for information concerning lodging and breakfast for guests and delegates; his address is 516 W. Grove St. B. W. Tate is president of the district, and H. H. Jenner, secretary. Some of the speakers listed on the program are: Mrs. Lura Thompson Porter, W. C. McDougall, B. W. Tate, V. W. Blair, C. J. Robertson, S. E. Fisher, John R. Golden, Guy L. Zerby, R. B. Doan, and L. O. Lehman.

—R. W. Gentry, pastor at Winfield, Kan., had part in the recent move by which the pool rooms were cleaned off of Winfield's map. As many readers know, this fine town was recently awarded by Ex-Governor Stubbs a prize of $1,000, as the best Kansas town in which to rear children. Mr. Gentry writes that the pool rooms were done away with against the advice of some people of very good standing, but he believes that the move will result in good in Winfield as in other towns. He suggests that the problem now is how to provide a decent recreational center, and thinks an article on this subject might be of value. The "Christian Century" would like to publish either articles or testimonies of recreational achievements from its readers.

—E. B. Barnes, pastor at First church, Richmond, Ky., has been preaching a series of sermons on the Master Missionaries, following a custom of having a series every winter, and he reports that the attendance at "dry" missionary meetings has been very gratifying. A large number of the students of the Normal School have heard the series throughout. Livingston, Carey, Paton, Judson, have been the subjects treated thus far. Mr. Barnes reports 30 persons added to the church membership recently.

—Supt. W. H. McLain, of Ohio, recently visited the Bible-school at La Belle View, Steubenville, O., and gave an address at the morning service on "The Task of a Church School." La Belle View has been doing aggressive work for the past month under the leadership of C. G. Chaney.

—Among the contributors to the April "Christian Union Quarterly" are: Chancellor W. P. Aylsworth, of Cotner University, on "The Ultimate Basis of Union"; M. M. Davis, of Dallas, Tex., on "Christian Union from the New Testament Viewpoint"; and S. G. Inman, on "The Panama Congress." There is also an editorial on "The Poison in the Way of Christian Unity."

—Garry L. Cook, Bible-school Superintendent of Indiana is addressing county conferences on the theme, "The Church and the Young People."

—The death is reported of Hunter McDonald, Disciple minister for many years. The end came at Anderson, Ind., and was a result of a period of illness extending over two years.

—The new church home at Benton Harbor, Mich., was dedicated on April 8. Evangelist W. H. Sandy preached the sermon and Pastor T. W. Bellingham pronounced the dedication vows.

—F. E. Lumley, Secretary of the Disciples' Congress, reports that Dr. H. L. Willett will speak at the closing session of the meeting, on Thursday afternoon, at Hotel Sherman, Chicago. His theme will be, "America and the New Orient." The date of the Congress is April 25-27.

—The Christian Endeavorers of First church, Mishawaka, Ind., are supporting Miss Kijo Takahashi in the Margaret K. Long Girls' School, Tokyo, Japan. Miss Bertha Clawson is at the head of the school.

—May 21 will be "Fellowship Sunday" with the churches at Springfield, Ill. Frank W. Allen will speak at one of the Methodist churches; Chas. W. Ross will occupy the pulpit of the First Methodist church. The churches of Springfield are in an increase campaign. The Christian churches have already made an increase of 197 members.

—At a banquet of the Men's Bible Class, Norwood, O., held April 14, L. N. D. Wells, of Akron, O., was chief speaker. C. R. Stauffer is the teacher of this great class, which has grown from nothing to an enrollment of nearly 200 in a few months.

—The Michigan State Convention will be held at Lansing, July 11-14.

—Joseph Fort Newton, of the Liberal Christian church, Des Moines, Ia., has been asked to occupy the pulpit of the City Temple, London, the church made famous by Joseph Parker, R. J. Campbell and other great Englishmen.

—Odon, Ind., will have a new $10,000 building soon.

Twenty-three Easters for the N. B. A.

For more than twenty-three years the National Benevolent Association has asked our Bible-schools to devote this beautiful resurrection memorial day to the parentless child, the dependent widow, the aged, indigent disciples, and the destitute sick, gathered into its homes and hospital. Their response has been gratifying beyond expression. Thousands of our Bible-schools by their faithful and increasing support have enabled the association to minister tenderly to twenty-one thousand desperately needy souls. What a resurrection from poverty, sorrow and sickness and even out of sin, has been accomplished by the aid of these schools through these years.

The Easter offering has become the largest single source of income to the association. By it the association has developed a great and worthy enterprise. Because of their participation in this offering our schools and churches have (and that quite properly) increased their demands upon the association for service. Increased offerings have justified the acceptance of increased responsibilities. In turn, this larger service has called forth larger support. So it has gone on through the years. The bonds of sympathy and confidence uniting the association and our schools have strengthened until today each depends with assurance upon the other.

Our friends will understand that the needs of the association are greater this year than ever before. This is only another way of saying that its work is greater than at any previous time, and that therefore it presents a greater opportunity for investment and for service. Last year it asked for an Easter offering of $50,000. While we did not reach that mark we were most thankful that we could report the largest Easter offering ever made.

Because of an additional institution, the Massie Christian Home at Long Beach, Cal., and because of the increasing demands made upon the association by the churches everywhere an offering of at least $50,000 will be required from the offerings of this season. Brethren, make Easter unanimous for the N. B. A. and this amount will be reached. Remember to send it to Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, 2955 N. Euclid Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Ohio Secretary's Letter

The Sandusky Disciples are in their new home. They purchased a well located chapel from the Episcopalians, put it in perfect condition and have made it a thing of beauty. The first day in the new home was March 26. The state secretary enjoyed the occasion. The church is in a splendid location. The neighborhood needs and welcomes it. The Sunday-school surpassed all former records on that day—165 were present. G. Webster Moore and T. J. White were present and participated in the services of the day. H. L. Wiggin came over from Clyde at night. Franklin Circle church, Cleveland, supports this work as its living link mission in Ohio. Charles Hofrichter represented the church on this glad occasion.

G. Webster Moore remained two weeks in a special meeting introducing the new congregation to their community. Fourteen persons were added to the membership. R. C. Lemon is greatly loved by this people for his faithful and efficient work.

The state convention is drawing near. We shall have the presence of great ones from abroad like F. D. Kershner and Walter S. Athearn. Four national organizations will be represented on the program. The Men and Millions Movement will send a secretary. Ohio talent in goodly array will complete one of the strongest programs ever offered.

The C. W. B. M. will bring Mrs. Charles T. Paul, Mrs. Greist, state president of Indiana, and Miss Allena Grafton, national secretary of Young Ladies' Circles. They will also have a strong array of Ohio talent.

The brotherhood men will have a characteristic program such as always delights and stimulates the men.

The Mt. Vernon church offers a splendid new house of worship and a fine old type of hospitality to all comers. Plainly, "Mt. Vernon '16" is distinctly the convention not to miss.

Now concerning the collection. There will be a report at Mt. Vernon. It will show that state workers have been diligent, efficient and true. It will show the measure of the co-operation of your church in a strenuous and fruitful year of work for a Christian Ohio. Is your offering in yet? The books close May 1.

When I began this letter there were ten appeals for help on file unanswered. As I close there are eleven. Ohio is a state of unlimited opportunity for Christian work of the richest fruitfulness. Send in the offerings that the work may be multiplied. I. J. Cahill, Cor. Secy., 2047 E Ninth St., Cleveland, O.

Notes From the Foreign Society

The churches still gain in receipts over last year. We were all rejoiced that during the month of March the gain in this respect was over $12,000 from the churches as churches. For the first twelve days in April the churches have gained $2,869 over last year. If this record keeps up the churches have the possibility of reaching a gain of $25,000 for the year. For the six months of the year they have already gained over $19,000. No one can measure the satisfaction this will bring to the missionaries after the serious record of last year.

The Children's Day goal of the Sunday-schools has been set at $100,000 for Foreign Missions. Every indication is that this amount will be reached and exceeded. Last year the amount given was $93,688.00.

The reception given to "Little Journeys to Distant Lands," by the Sunday-schools has been most encouraging. This is a series of lessons in the form of a tour of our mission fields prepared for all the Bible-schools.

H. A. Baker, of Batang, Tibet, writes that during the Christmas season the Chinese church had special meetings for three days and nights. The church was crowded, there being about 250 at each meeting. Contributions were raised to feed the poor at Christmas. The money contributed by the church and the merchants on the street amounted to $30. Two hundred poor people were fed and given food for another meal.

As a result of a recent meeting in the Hongo church, Tokyo, Japan, 25 persons have enrolled as inquirers.

F. E. Hagin, of Tokyo, Japan, writes that Miss Ogawa, a student in the Girls' School, convassed every home in Toride for money for a new church building. With some mission aid the Christians there will have their own house of worship soon. The work was begun twelve years ago. Toride is a small city with famous temples. The missionaries are hoping for several baptisms in Hachijo Island in April.

Dr. L. F. Jaggard, of Monieka, Africa, reports 38 baptisms.

In Nanking, China, there are several adult Bible-classes. The one at the Drum Tower has 155 members; at the South Gate 74 men and 58 women are enrolled.

F. M. Rains, Secy.

present on April 2: 647 present in the men's class, 102 in the Loyal Sons' Class. Nearly 1,000 men and boys are enlisted in the work of this great school. On April 9, the report comes, 1,320 were present in the school, with 534 in the men's class.

—The members of First church, Los Angeles, led by Mr. J. G. Warren and Mrs. S. M. Cooper, are raising money to create a missionary library in the church, in memory of the deceased wife of the pastor, Mary Richardson Thrapp. This library will be of creditable size. In the autumn, a reading class will be organized to stimulate the reading of missionary and religious books.

—The Wisconsin School of Methods, held March 20-24, at Second church, Milwaukee, proved a splendid success. There were 41 students enrolled.

—There are six Bible-schools in the state of Kansas, whose membership is numbered in the four figures. They are all in the "Each-One-Win-One" campaign. These churches are at Hutchinson, 1,500 members; Atchison, 1,408 members; Pittsburg, 1,210 members; Wichita, Central, 1,200 members; Parsons, 1,055 members; Coffeyville, 1,000 members.

—The Christian Endeavor Society of the Thirtieth Street church, Newport News, Va., joins the Life-line list of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society by assuming the support of Jose Acosta, a young man in Cuba, preparing for the ministry under W. L. Burner, missionary at Matanzas.

—Edgar D. Jones, of First church, Bloomington, Ill., gave four addresses at the Southern Illinois Ministerial Institute, which was held at Salem, on April 11 and 12: The addresses are as follows: "The Inner Circle of a Preacher's Library." "Poet-Preachers and Preacher-Poets." "The Ancient Gospel in Modern Fiction." and "Heart Power in the Pulpit."

—It is reported that W. T. Fisher, formerly Bible-school superintendent in Iowa, may return to Iowa. He has been one of the teachers in the Canton Bible Institute for the past three years.

—A Bible-class of young people in the Chickasha, Okla., church is transforming an unattractive vacant block of the town into a park.

—A recent session of the Bible-school at Broad St., Columbus, O., was in entire charge of boys.

—The Columbus, O., Disciple churches have organized "the Disciples' Union of Franklin County."

—E. S. Ames is delivering a series of lectures on "The Psychology of Mysticism" at Hyde Park church. About fifty persons are enrolled in the class.

—Monroe Street, Chicago, gave a reception to its new pastor, J. E. Wolfe, on April 14.

—W. Garnet Alcorn, pastor at Monroe City, Mo., will preach the baccalaureate sermon for the local high school this year. This is the third time Mr. Alcorn has been called to this service.

—R. L. Finch, pastor at Second church, Milwaukee, Wis., has organized a boy scout troop of about thirty boys from various denominations in the community.

—Fifteenth St. church, Washington, D. C., L. L. Bowers, pastor, has inaugurated the unified service plan.

—W. R. Warren, ministerial relief secretary, reports that the publication of the plan for permanent system of pensions for ministers has moved several pastors to enlist under the provisions of the plan.

—The average daily attendance at the Fife union meetings which have just closed at Pomona, Cal., was about four thousand. Large delegations attended from neighboring towns.

—W. E. M. Hackleman is assisting W. H. Allen, pastor at New Orleans, in Easter meetings.

—B. B. Tyler is supplying the pulpit at Central, Denver, until a regular pastor is found.

—Arthur Dillinger, pastor at Altoona, Ia., will work in the Chautauqua field during the summer.

—A. W. Taylor, of Columbia, Mo., will speak at the Country Life Conference at the Montana Agricultural College, June 12-22. His theme is the country church.

—North Side church, Indianapolis, celebrated its first anniversary on April 2.

—Miss Helen Keller will lecture at Atlantic Christian College early in May.

—F. D. Kershner will deliver the baccalaureate sermon at Transylvania college on June 4.

—At the State Bible School convention of Oklahoma, held at Tulsa, W. S. Athearn was a favorite speaker. Other speakers were Marion Lawrance, H. J. Heinz, and J. S. Durham, international association promoters.

—Splendid plans are being made by the Howett Street church, Peoria, Ill., for the new church and Bible-school building to be erected this year. This will provide equipment for various kinds of community work. F. Lewis Starbuck, pastor, is leading in this enterprise.

—Warren, O., church has a boys' club which meets on Tuesday evenings at the church. There is also a men's club, which meets once a month on Wednesday evening. E. A. Hibler leads at Warren.

—The Bible-school at Coffeyville, Kan., under five years' ministry of Arthur Long, has increased from a membership of 190 to 701.

—The Board of Church Extension, according to recommendations made at Panama, is expecting to extend the sphere of its influence into all of Latin America, provided its charter will permit.

—Wilford H. McLain, Ohio Bible-school superintendent, delivered the address at Sandusky, April 11, on the Bible-school night of a week's union campaign of the churches of the city. His subject was "The Task of a Church School."

The American Society and Builder

The American Christian Missionary Society is an enterprise builder for Christ. Through all the years, it has laid foundations and others have builded thereon. It has furnished the first funds which inspired faith and hope and courage to these first settlers to undertake the work of organizing churches, establishing colleges and erecting houses of worship.

This "Home Society" has planted our "first" or "mother" church in many American cities If this Honor Roll were called, churches in the following cities would respond:

Halifax	El Paso
Boston	Tacoma
New York	Seattle
Philadelphia	Spokane
Harrisburg	Vancouver
Buffalo	Boise City
Baltimore	Winnipeg
Washington, D. C.	Aberdeen
Richmond	Lincoln
Norfolk	Watertown
Charleston	Minneapolis
Jacksonville	St. Paul
Tampa	Milwaukee
Pensacola	St. Louis
Mobile	Grand Rapids
New Orleans	Chicago
Galveston	Des Moines
Austin	Denver
Colorado Springs	Pueblo
Sioux Falls	Los Angeles
Shreveport	Birmingham
Portland	Houston
Alameda	Savannah
Pomona	San Francisco
Topeka	Berkeley
Atchison	Salt Lake City
Omaha	Leavenworth
Ft. Worth	Wichita.

But these "first" churches have in each city grown a numerous brood; so that the original 57 churches in the 57 cities named above have come to number 261, with a total membership of 71,344. We regret our inability to give property valuation.

This hallelujah chorus of praise continues to increase in volume as one recounts the widening influence of this American Christian Missionary Society family of churches as expressed in their missionary offerings. Thus 46 of the 60 churches listed as contributing the largest offerings of their respective states, belong to this A. C. M. S. family.

Again, the 261 churches, which include all our churches in above named cities, contributed last year to all missions a total of $92,684.64.

Choosing at random seven individual A. C. M. S. churches in different parts of the country, viz:

Pomona, California—First church.
Washington, D C.—Vermont Ave. church.
Des Moines, Ia.—Central church.
Topeka, Kan.—First church.
Wichita, Kan.—Central church.
Chicago, Ill.—Englewood church.
Pittsburgh, Pa.—East End church.

we find that in the last ten years they gave to the A. C. M. S. $16,564.11, and to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society $28,549.67, making a total of $45,113.78.

Since investment in American Missions not only produces such gratifying results in the Home Land, but also brings so great return in resources beyond, it is only reasonable to expect that the American churches will invest liberally in this basic missionary enterprise, so fundamental to all other organized work.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Character Talks

Rev. Edgar D. Jones

GOD IN THE OUT-OF-DOORS.

As with Jacob, so with all other great characters of the Bible; they found power in, and by close communion with God. Abraham on the mountain; Moses in the wilderness of Midian; Gideon on the threshing floor; Samuel in the house of Eli; David in the cave; Elijah in the mountain fastness; Isaiah in the temple; Daniel in his room with the windows open toward Jerusalem; John the Baptist in the wilderness; Paul in Arabia; John on the Island of Patmos—the great company of patriarchs, prophets, priests, apostles, martyrs, missionaries, were all made strong through the ministry of silence. Mr. Stewart Edward White wrote a book a few years ago called "The Silent Places," describing some of the great silent stretches of God's out-of-doors. Every life should have its "silent places," its "closet experiences" where God and man meet and commune. These places may vary in location though alike in aloneness with God. As Isaac of old went out to meditate in the field at eventide so God's out-of-doors may serve as an oratory for many a soul who is seeking him.

The United States and Japan

AS THE PATHS TO EUROPE ARE CLOSED TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE BY THE EXIGENCIES OF WAR, AND ARE NOT LIKELY TO BE OPENED IN ANY LARGER MANNER FOR SOME YEARS TO COME, THE ATTENTION AND INTEREST OF THE WESTERN WORLD ARE CERTAIN TO TURN TO THE PEOPLES ON THE OPPOSITE SIDE OF THE PACIFIC AS OUR NEAREST NEIGHBORS.

Students of geographical forces have been telling us for a generation that just as the Mediterranean Sea was the basin around and across which the courses of travel and traffic were laid in the classic age, and for the past four centuries the Atlantic Ocean has been the theater of the world's most intense activity, so in the period immediately ahead the Pacific will increasingly occupy the place of importance.

The truth of this statement will not be disputed by anyone who watches the movement of events in our day. Europe is practically closed against all approach. For at least a generation to come the close intercourse which has been maintained between the two sides of the Atlantic will slowly work toward reestablishment. Some features of that old intimacy will never reappear. The war has shattered many traditions, educational, artistic and industrial, which were deemed permanent. It is to the west and not the east that the attention of America is turned by all the providential and tidal forces of the time.

And just at this moment access to the shores of Asia across the Pacific is accelerated in astonishing measure. It once seemed a wonder to travel to the ports of England and the continent in ten days. Today one steams from Vancouver to Yokohama in nine days, and in the almost incredible space of thirteen days, raw silk is transported across the Pacific and our northern area from Tokyo to New York. The Orient and the Occident face each other at a distance far less than that which separated Palestine from Egypt in the days of our Lord, or New England from the Central States in the times of the fathers.

And just across this narrow and lessening barrier of ocean there dwells the most intelligent, progressive and brilliant people of Asia, the Japanese. In half a century they have come forward with almost incredible rapidity from a condition of feudalism, and have taken their place in the foremost rank of modern national life. Since the day in 1853 when Commodore Perry anchored in the harbor of Yokohama and forcibly, but bloodlessly, opened Japan to the commerce of the world, a date which many living men remember well, that remarkable people have traversed all the distance that separates our civilization from the age of William the Conqueror. Under the leadership of the late Mikado, Japan has obtained a constitutional government, an educational system of the highest type, universal, compulsory and free, and an industrial and commercial position which is the admiration of the world.

A people with such a record is naturally proud of its achievements. It is sensitive, perhaps supersensitive, to the opinion in which it is held by its neighbors. It is deeply concerned to receive the recognition and good will of Europe and the United States. It is surprised and troubled when it finds evidence of unfriendly feelings which it regards as unwarranted.

It is a familiar fact that certain men and newspapers in the United States have made it their business to scatter the sentiments of distrust and suspicion regarding Japan. Lyceum and Chautauqua platforms have been utilized to exploit the Japanese peril. A portion of the press has hesitated at no falsehood in the effort to create an anti-Japanese sentiment in our country. The picture of a Japanese invasion from across the Pacific is the most common form of this alarmist agitation. Hordes of Japanese laborers flooding into the Pacific states for purposes of colonization, and later of aggression, are another item in the indictment. The low morals of the Japanese, commercial and personal, are another count. Time upon time these charges have been answered and disproved. The Japanese probably have the average faults and virtues. Similar catalogues could be prepared regarding every one of the races that our country has welcomed to its shores. Yet the Japanese complain with cause that they are the victims of a persistent, malicious and mendacious form of dispraise alike unjust to them and dishonorable to the American people.

All the traditions of Japan are favorable to friendship with the United States. After the first resentment at the forcible opening of their gates to the world, the people of the Island Empire recognize the enormous service rendered to them by this action of our government, and regarded America with sentiments of unmixed admiration and good will. At Kurihama, in Japan, there stands a monument to Matthew Calbraith Perry, erected by the Japanese in grateful recognition of the man, who as the representative of our nation, introduced Japan to western civilization. All the relations of the two peoples since that time have been friendly. The sympathy of America was heartily with Japan in her two wars, with China and with Russia. The influence of our missionaries has been wholesome and appreciated in that land. Christianity might have been the foremost of the faiths of Japan today had the churches made use of their opportunity a score of years ago. Even now, with all the competing influences, most of which have come from the Occident, it is winning its way gradually and effectively among a wholly friendly people.

When Japan understood that the people of the Pacific slope were strongly averse to the coming of Japanese immigrants, the Imperial Government, in spite of its natural sensitiveness to the strange discrimination against that people at the very time that we were receiving immigrants from practically every other nation in the world, many of whom were as little of Caucasian blood as the Japanese, entered into an agreement not to permit the coming of any more of her people. And the most persistent jingo will have to admit that Japan has remained exactingly faithful to that agreement. Is it strange that now she protests against our enacting into law an arrangement which she has so faithfully observed, which is already a grave discourtesy to a friendly nation, but would in case of the proposed legislation become an inexcusable insult?

The Japanese people have many other problems than

World Needs a United Church

By WILLIAM PIERSON MERRILL

Pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York City*

PHILLIPS BROOKS once said of the Church of Christ that it ought to be a "universal solvent, lying back of all our differences, and composing them." If that is indeed the function of the church, it was never more needed in the world than just now. Even before the outbreak of the war, divisive forces were at work which seriously threatened the welfare of society and hampered the coming of the kingdom of God. Race prejudice, class strife, religious bigotry, sectional antagonisms, were splitting mankind into hostile fragments. The war has intensified all these centrifugal tendencies. It is time for the church to heed the call of the Spirit which is in her, and to reveal herself as the unifying force, the solvent, that can compose the differences of humanity.

SPIRIT OF DIVISION MUST BE CAST OUT.

But if the church is ever to do this work—the greatest piece of work waiting to be done just now—she must first let God cast out from herself the demon of division, and fill her with the spirit of generous, comprehensive unity. The church cannot unify until she is herself unified. And the only practicable way to oneness lies through generosity of spirit, largeness of view, which shall enable men of positive convictions to unite heartily, without suspicion or reserve, with men who differ from them on many matters, yet are one with them on the great essentials of the Christian faith and life.

If we desire our beloved Presbyterian church to have this season prove the best year in her history, the year of the boldest and most effective service for God and his kingdom, we ought to pray fervently for that unity of spirit and of action for which our Lord prayed on the night before Calvary. We should earnestly covet the power to stand before a divided, distracted world as an inspiring and appealing example of the beauty and force of united and brotherly faith and action.

Are we ready to do this? The worst and most real danger confronting our church is that we shall not be big enough, Christly enough, to stand by such a comprehensive policy. There are signs of reaction toward timid policies and narrow views and the spirit of dogmatism. Every loyal Presbyterian should stand against these reactionary tendencies with all his strength. The danger is that, in a day that calls for a big, brave, generous, comprehensive, Christly church, ready to hold in abeyance everything but the essentials of faith and practice, our church shall be frightened into reaction, dominated by a partisan view of life and work, and Christianity left swirling helplessly in an eddy of little thoughts and things, while the mighty current of the life of God's Spirit in the world goes sweeping past. That is the danger we need to fear, for deliverance from which we need to pray and labor and speak out.

THIS IS CHRIST'S DAY.

This is Christ's great day, if we will make it so, if we will drop our petty concerns and follow him. All things are calling us just now to give ourselves and our church to the primary things, and to keep out of the way all secondary things, however good and true, however much we prize them. At so critical a moment as this, the Episcopalian who holds essential his particular theory of the church, the Baptist who holds vital his particular view of the sacraments, the Presbyterian who counts essential the theology which distinguishes him from other evangelical Christians, are guilty of something like treason in wartime. It is time to rally to the defense of our common Christianity, and let our private, partisan, and denominational peculiarities shift for themselves. If they die, so much gain for the kingdom of God!

In the presence of this warring, suffering, divided, sin-cursed world, agonizing for the redemption which can come to it only through Christ and his gospel, the man who would waste any of the church's energy in whittling fine points of dogma, the man who would split up rather than bind up, the man who would force his personal convictions upon the whole church or refuse to work in fullest possible accord with all whom he acknowledges to be Christians, is taking a course un-Christian and inhuman, piling up for himself a weighty responsibility for the time when he shall stand before the Judge revealed in the twenty-fifth chapter of the gospel according to Matthew.

The great need today is that the whole church move into, and abide in the spirit of Paul's noble words, written to a church in danger of division, "For all things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's." Into such a comprehensive unity we need to be led just now—that big, generous, fearless attitude which is our birthright as Presbyterians and as Christians.

LIBERALS AND CONSERVATIVES MUST WORK IN HARMONY.

Would that the Spirit of God might be put into the hearts of liberals and conservatives, of all party men in our church, that spirit which saved the church in its earliest days. There was serious danger of division as Christianity moved on its way from a Jewish sect to world religion. One party held to the past; the other reached out toward the future. There are always those two parties in a living church of the living God. Each side felt that there was danger in the other. But the leaders of the church had enough of the spirit of their Lord to see that the real danger was that the church would be divided; and, by the grace of the Spirit of Christ, they held together. "James, and Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars"—men who stood fast, conservatives, loyal to Christian traditions—"gave the right hand of fellowship to Paul and Barnabas"—moving "pillars" of cloud and fire—and a united church, in which men who differed widely trusted each other with loving and frank confidence, moved irresistibly upon the heathen world.

Cannot our beloved church rise into the same big, brotherly spirit? We, too, have come to a critical day, when the world cannot be delivered save by a church which is heartily one in generous love and confidence.

It is a time, if ever there was one, when all reasonable, moderate men, all who put spirit above forms and unity above party advantage, should hold together in that "love which is the bond of perfectness." It is a time for a real brotherly union of liberals and conservatives, which shall suspect no one, accuse no one, and exclude only those who will not live in Christian faith, hope and love with their brethren. "If any man loveth not the Lord let him (and no one else) be anathema." But "grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ with a love incorruptible." It is a time, therefore, for outspoken, though reasonable, protest, against any attempts, direct or indirect, to drive our church into a narrow, extreme, or partisan position.

UNITY ABOVE PARTY ADVANTAGE.

Whenever extremists—whether they be extreme radicals or extreme reactionaries—attempt to impose their views as authoritative and decisive for the entire church, the whole body of moderate men, who put love and service first, should unite to hold the church steady in its historic position (sanctioned by the Bible and by our standards) of a union based on the great essentials, and strong confidence and fearless freedom as to all else.

The most serious danger confronting us is that our great church, so needed today, so wonderfully fitted for the work of God just now, may be driven by vague fears into a corner where it shall sit hugging to itself certain dear non-essentials, while the great movements of God and man and the kingdom go on their way to a victory which we, of our sins, may not share.

God keep us from such a fate! "For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together even till now, waiting for the revealing of the sons of God." It is only as the church of Christ, in this crisis, rises above small things into the mind of Christ, that we can hope that "the creation itself may be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God."

"Come then! Since all things call us.
The living and the dead;
And o'er the weltering tangle
A glimmering light is shed;
Come then! Let us cast off fooling;
For this at least we know,
That the dawn and the day are coming.
And forth the banners go."

Happiness comes not from the power of possession, but from the power of appreciation. Above most other things it is wise to cultivate the powers of appreciation. The greater the number of stops in an organ, the greater its possibilities as an instrument of music.—H. W. Sylvester.

* * *

Hush thy complaints. Sweetness and kindness are good when they bear thee home to God. Cruelty and wrong are good when they force thee to the bosom of God. Evil is evil unto him who doeth evil, but evil is good to thee if it unites with God the Beautiful.—Mozoomdar.

God's Responsibility or Man's?

By J. E. JONES

THE Voice of Doubt has been many times raised since the war began. The comfortable belief in a beneficent Providence has been rudely shaken. If God is all-powerful and all-good, men and women are asking, why did he allow this wicked war to begin and to continue?

"To answer this question, declares the English agnostic, Mr. Robt. Blatchford, the Christian apologist 'has to show why a God who hates evil and has power to prevent it allows it to exist.' He chooses the Rev. R. J. Campbell as one of the conspicuous English divines engaged in reconciling the war with the Christian conceptions of a Heavenly Father. Mr. Campbell was forced to meet the direct questions of some sufferers by the war such as this put by an afflicted mother, 'Where was God when my boy was bayoneted in the face and left to bleed to death in agony?' "

A PERTINENT QUESTION.

The foregoing is from the Literary Digest of January 22d, the introduction to an article entitled "Agnostic View of God in the War."

The mother had a perfect right to ask the question, where was God when her boy was bayoneted and left to die? She could have gone further and asked, where was God when the bayonet was manufactured for the very purpose for which it was used? Where was God when the government under which the boy grew to manhood permitted the bayonet to be manufactured knowing it was for that purpose? Where was God when the people permitted a government to exist that would allow the manufacture of bayonets with which to kill? Where was God while the mother was nurturing her boy under conditions which made it not only possible but highly probable that he would ultimately be bayoneted in the face? Where was God when the parents consented that a child born might be born into the world under conditions which made bayonetting in the face not only possible or probable, but a certainty?

In other words, if men and women know the things are wrong of which they complain why do THEY permit them to exist or condone them at all? Why do THEY burden themselves with taxation to build up, maintain and make effective the very evils against which they cry out?

Is it not better that a boy should not be born than that he should, in his young manhood, be shot, bayoneted or torn to fragments by shells? Is it essential to the welfare of the race that the youth of the nations should periodically, or at the whim of some self-adulating war-lord, be marched out on the battle field and slaughtered?

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

Why put the responsibility of any or all these things upon God? If we believe the things are wrong of which we make complaint, what are we living for if not to correct them? Why rail at the Most High, why doubt his existence or question his justice when the responsibility is upon ourselves and we know that it is? We burden ourselves grievously in order to maintain the very conditions which awaken our resentment.

The trouble is, we deny our responsibility. We whirl off in the death-dance with Satan, rendering to him our allegiance, and when the ruin and disaster of it all appears we lift our hands in holy horror and exclaim, "There is no God or he would not permit us to do the things we persist in doing."

God did not ordain man to suffering, to evil or to death. He created him a finished being, gave him a paradise in which to live, warned him of the dangers with which he might afflict himself and their consequences, and commanded him to refrain from that which was detrimental to the law of his being and in contravention of the will of his Maker. He was made a ruler and a king. The earth was prepared for his occupancy and he was given dominion. The work was his. God entered upon his rest, proclaimed his Sabbath, and to impress upon him that the work was left to him commanded that he observe every seventh day in commemoration of the rest of God.

THE DEVIL REIGNING TODAY.

This being true, how may we expect God to prevent war or any other evil on the earth except it be by denuding the earth of the human race? We lose sight of these things. We overlook our own shortcomings, shirk our responsibilities and temper our lives, our laws and our religion to that modified righteousness which will meet, if not the approval at least the toleration of Satan. For slow as we may be to recognize the fact, he is the most influential character in the world today. Never since he appeared on earth with his gift of disaster, ruin and death has his sway been greater than at the present hour. Never since the dawn of authentic history has such an orgy of death and ruin swept over the earth, never have the minds of men been more obsessed with the glamour and pomp of war and belief in its necessity. Ministers of the gospel, ambassadors of the Christ, instead of summoning their membership to rally as one in support of some great truth, some proposition to offer in the name of the Master for the attainment of peace in the world, are journeying to the docks to dedicate dreadnaughts, breathe benedictions over great guns and bless them to their purpose; thus proclaiming their faith in the utilities of war and their reliance in these for security rather than the favor and protection of God.

This is the trouble with Christianity in these days of strife. We are too prone to condone the wrong, to carry it along with us as a necessary evil under the delusion that we can the better control it and hold it in abeyance. The deadly reptile, the physical representative of evil in the world since the fall of Adam, we kill, extirpate, crush its very head lest it assail our mortal selves; but the more deadly enemy, that which dwarfs our moral being, we spare, preserve, that we may control and make it an adjunct to our Christianity, that it may be trimmed, pruned and modified to the purposes of war or to the toleration of any other evil.

THE ONLY SOLUTION.

The spirit of the contest was determined when Satan offered to the Christ the kingdoms of the world for a division of authority. How easy to have made Christianity universal—to have extended it without further controversy over the world. But it would have been evil-laden, freighted with the very things against which we cry out and of which we ask to be relieved; the very things which cause the thoughtless to doubt, if not the existence of God at least his love and mercy.

The Savior's dictum was, "Get thee hence, Satan, for it is written: Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and Him only shalt thou serve."

That is the solution of the whole problem; and when the Christian world realizes it ministers of the gospel will not be called upon to reconcile Christianity and war, or Christianity and any other evil.

I AM WAR!

By Alter Brody.

I AM a pestilence
Sweeping the world—
Hate is the root of me,
Death is the fruit of me,
Swift is my stroke;
Blood is the sign of me,
Steel is the twine of me,
Thus shall ye know me:
I am the death of Life
I am the life of Death,
I am War!

I am madness
Riding the necks of men—
Champing of nations armed,
Stamping of war-horse hoofs
Charging unbridled;
Clashing of bayonets,
Flashing of sword-blades,
Rumbling of cannon-wheels,
Crumbling of kingdoms,
These are my harbingers;
I am the death of Law,
I am the law of Death,
I am War!

I am a harlot
Seducing the nations;
Diplomats lie for me,
Patriots die for me,
Lovers I lack not—
Cannon mouths speak to me,
Battlefields reek of me,
Widowed wives shriek of me,
Cursing my name:
I am the death of Joy,
I am the joy of Death,
I am War!

THE WORLD'S YESTERDAY IS GONE.

That was the starting point of a profound address made in this city recently by Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus of Chicago. He said: "The world's yesterday is gone. The today of Europe is soaked with blood and slippery with tears, so that it slides from underneath our feet. The tomorrow of Europe is in the hands of America. And that tomorrow must assert the fact that man is improvable, that there is a necessary trend of things upward which all statesmanship must recognize.'

An Open Letter

Being originally a communication addressed to an inquiring fellow pastor, and attempting to make clear some features of the Fellowship Movement.*

BY FRANK WALLER ALLEN.

THIS is to thank you for your letter of inquiry concerning the Fellowship Movement. I will undertake to answer it and should I not quite meet your expectations do not hesitate to write me again.

In the first place, I credit much of the success of the Fellowship Movement to these two facts: Everything done is concretely related to life. We are not mere ideal mongers, glory-seekers. We will have nothing to do with that which cannot be built into the individual life or may not be built into the social life. With the abstract we have nothing to do.

And the second is, we do not attempt to fit our young people to the machinery: we create our machinery to fit the young people. Too much has been made of mere machinery. The weakness of our educational system has been that we have made the child fit the school, rather than the school the child. Long ago I gave up holding to plans and systems as such.

GROWTH NOT HAMPERED.

With this ideal and plan our Fellowship Movement was permitted to evolve. Under the old idea of having the machine and fitting the youth into it, growth was hampered. Under this plan anything that does not produce results is immediately dropped. We have tried many things in this movement which we have dropped without ever stopping to think about it. We have held to those things which have proven attractive while at the same time they have promoted life. While we have held to the community or social service ideal, we have not failed to emphasize self-development and expression.

You express a doubt as to whether with your varied interests you would be able to give the time to the class work which comes immediately before the evening sermon. I, too, found this very exacting. But I found it worth all of the time and attention which I was forced to give to it. It meant, much of the time, that I had to prepare two evening addresses. My first plan was to correlate the Fellowship teaching service with the evening service. I soon found this to be a mistake, and afterwards planned to have the two addresses as nearly on different subjects as it was possible. After the Movement received some recognition and was taken with seriousness not only by my young people but by the church, I found it no trouble at all to secure a city man of ability to keep the platform supplied for each Sunday evening to relieve me of at least fifty per cent of the speaking. I think I have delivered one address before the Fellowship Class this year. I never fail to be present and to present the speaker.

MUST HAVE A MODERN MESSAGE.

I am exceedingly exacting as to the speaker. He must have a message about modern life for young people and be able to deliver it acceptably.

I have also adopted the policy of having speakers whose point of view is democratic and progressive. The negative side of a question can only get a hearing by a rising from the floor and questioning the speaker.

For instance, on a wet and dry issue the wet side would not be presented in the forum save only as it would be given permission to challenge the speaker and question him. (I mention this trite problem because of its patentness.) . . . When I take the platform I do not deliver a formal address. I have the people sit close about me so that I might touch many of them without leaving my point of vantage. This enables you, as you know, to speak informally and with a loss of very little physical energy. While the outside speaker presents many problems that are interesting to all people who are interested in political and economic progress, I make it my work, with rare exceptions, to talk in the most human way about the problems of adolescence in the terms of day dreams, love, hopes and aspirations, so characteristic of that period of life. I tell you all this to show you how you may relieve yourself of overmuch labor.

HOW ORGANIZED CLASSES ARE AFFECTED.

I find that it has no effect whatever on the organized class movement in our Bible-school. I find that it increases the attendance at the evening church service. I cannot see that it has any bad effect upon the evangelistic work of the church.

It is true, as you suggest, that the facilities for play in connection with this church are unusually advantageous. But I do not see that a lack of our particular arrangements need interfere with the carrying out of some supervised play in any church.

In the first place I have taught all my young people the importance and value, even the religious value, of play in life, as is readily found explained by Seashore, Cabot, Stanley Hall and others. With this in mind it removes any prejudice of "fun" in a church. If you do not have a room which may be turned into a play room during certain days in the week, such a dining room in the church could be made use of. It is not difficult during the rest of the week to find a young lot within convenient distance of the church which may be turned into a play ground.

THE QUESTION OF EXPENSE.

You will find, if you question your local Y. M. C. A. Secretary, that it will not be a difficult matter to get some young man who is thoroughly trained and experienced, who can meet with your young men and give them ample training. The expense is a matter which we have found takes care of itself. As was indicated in my article, we allow no charges made or offerings taken save at the Sunday evening Fellowship Class. Here the offering is freewill with an occasional mentioning that it is for the purpose of financing the whole movement. This offering is sometimes made by passing baskets and at others by having plates just outside the door. Our offering last Sunday evening was in the neighborhood of five dollars. We have found these offerings sufficient to finance our athletic work and to pay the expenses of the monthly "parties" which we give for the young people of the community.

You ask: "Does your society or class after hearing from the experts on social and economic discussions have any expressional activity through its own organization?" It does not. Our fundamental purpose is to create the democratic mind, and teach young people to think and act for themselves through those political and social agencies which already exist. For instance, at the present time we have a school board fight on in Springfield. At the April election for members of the school board there is a ticket out-and-out supporting the present progressive policy of the superintendent, and there is a ticket against him. The superintendent of schools spoke at our forum one Sunday evening. The organization itself will not go on record as officially supporting him. This would not be in keeping with the democratic ideal I have taught. Our plan is educative and inspirational

OUTSIDE TASKS.

There are times when as an organization we do certain outside work. For instance, during last fall when we discovered that thousands of bushels of apples were rotting in the orchards of Illinois farmers, and that the poor of our community had no access to this waste, we acted as a clearing house between farmers and the poor for the distribution of those apples. We got into touch with farmers who gave us the fruit for gathering it. Our young people gathered this fruit and brought it to the church where we had hundreds of bushels of apples stored. We advertised through the papers and the people came and the apples were distributed either to them personally or in some instances taken to them.

There might be instances where the organization as such would work for certain programs in the city. So far that has not been considered necessary. In this class we want to give the young people the fundamental democratic point of view in reference to all public affairs. That is why we never have a topic that we cannot relate to their immediate individual lives or to some problem immediately before our people in the city, state or nation—something on which people have to vote, or to attempt to influence the action of their legislatures or councils or commissions. There is scarcely a thing that we discuss that cannot have an immediate or a relatively immediate application. And I continually emphasize that this sort of thing is religious. I remind them that hymns and sermons and prayers are religious and in no way deprecate such expressions; but I likewise emphasize the fact that supporting a progressive educational system in the city is just as religious.

The idea is to let them see that the support of any political, industrial or civic program that has as its purpose the betterment of the life of the people is religious.

Some Recent Books

THE MONEY MASTER. By Gilbert Parker. Even in this day of the writing of many books, and especially stories, it is always an event when a new book of Gilbert Parker's comes out. From the time when "The Right of Way" appeared, he has been a favorite. In the present story, the scene of which is laid in Canada, is given "the curious history of Jean Jacques Barbille, his labors, his loves and his ladies." (Harper & Bros., New York. $1.35 net.)

THE VICTORIOUS ATTITUDE. By Orison Swett Marden. The writings of Mr. Marden, once editor of the Success Magazine, have done much to put optimism into everyday life and to instill ambition and the desire to achieve in the hearts especially of the young. "To think you can, creates the force that can," is the keyword of this latest work. It is truly worth its weight in gold to earnest people. (T. Y. Crowell Company, New York. $1 net.)

JUST BE GLAD. By Christian D. Larsen. This is another book that encourages and cheers. Taking up facts of everyday psychology, the writer shows that a man can do much toward making himself successful in life just by the right kind of thinking. A frequently occurring refrain in the book is this: "All things respond to the call of rejoicing; all things gather where life is a song." (T. Y. Crowell Company, New York. 50c.)

"HE SHALL SPEAK PEACE." Compiled by "Dignus Non Sum." This is a collection of the wisdom of the world's literature on the theme of Peace. Poets, philosophers, preachers, prophets and statesmen, are called upon to declare in no uncertain tone that man must "love his brother." A remarkable compilation, and one that will do a vast amount of good. (Wm. F. Butler, Milwaukee. $1.50 postpaid.)

A HISTORY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE Since 1870. By Fred Lewis Pattee. Professor Pattee occupies the chair of English in the Pennsylvania State College. He is the author also of a work on earlier American literature. In the present volume he traces the development of a really national literature in America from Civil War times. Mark Twain, Bret Harte, Whitman, Howells, Thoreau, Burroughs, John Muir and Lowell are the leaders in this development. The treatment is careful and thorough and Professor Pattee uses at all times the spirit of a genuine critic. (The Century Co., New York. $2 net.)

BROWNING: HOW TO KNOW HIM. By William Lyon Phelps. Lovers of Browning and those who have never been able to know and love him are equally indebted to Professor Phelps, of Yale, for this work. Written with consideration for the average reader, it is sure to add to the followers of this Christian poet many thousands of new admirers. (Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis. $1.25 net.)

GOOD FRIDAY AND OTHER POEMS. By John Masefield. This is the newest volume by the man who is heralded by many as England's leading poet. Mr. Masefield has just completed a triumphant tour of American cities, and everywhere he was given royal welcome. Besides "Good Friday," which paints vividly the events leading up to and following Christ's crucifixion, there are also given sixty sonnets and a number of short lyrics. (Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25 net.)

DREAMS AND DUST. By Don Marquis. The author of these verses contributes verse and prose of various sorts to one of the New York dailies, but even so, he is a genuine poet! One of the finest poems in the collection is "This Is Another Day." (Harper & Brothers, New York. $1.20 net.)

SONGS OF THE WORKADAY WORLD. By Berton Braley. Perhaps not great poetry but rhyme with a swing and a heartbeat in sympathy with the every days of the common man. "Ready," the song of the "Panama gang," which has received wide notice, is one of the poems of this collection. (Geo. H. Doran Company, New York. $1 net.) (T. C. C.)

WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN? By John Walker Powell. The author describes his book as "a book for the times." He undertakes to state liberal orthodoxy for a popular audience, and with special reference to special problems of our modern life. Students of theological history would say that he treated such worthies as Jonathan Edwards cavalierly and unjustly, as the latter was by no means as reactionary as his pictures of hell might indicate. He repudiates anti-militarism as being a part of essential Christianity, and expounds Jesus' use of paradox and hyperbole. The book is a very excellent one for the purpose of showing laymen the faith and aspirations of an orthodox preacher with modern training. (Macmillan. $1.00 net.)

THE MAKING OF MEN. By W. A. Harper, LL.D. The author is president of Elon College, which figures prominently in the "Christian denomination." The book is a volume of addresses with texts, and in sermonic form. The point of view may be seen by the statement that the chief dangers to the modern college student are to be found in the higher criticism and sociology. (The Christian Publishing Association, 75 cents, postpaid.)

EVENINGS WITH UNCLE BIJAH. By Richard Grote. This book is published under a pseudonym. It details a series of conversations between a minister and a pious man outside the church. These conversations lead to the position of the "Christian denomination" that the only test of Christian fellowship shall be Christian character. (The Christian Association, 50 cents postpaid.

WHILE THE FIRE BURNS. By Alfred L. Flude. A series of disconnected meditations about life. (The Platform, Chicago.) (O. F. J.)

THE LORD'S DAY FROM NEITHER CATHOLICS NOR PAGANS. By Rev. D. N. Canright. This book is an answer to Seventh Day Adventism by a former minister among the Adventists. It reviews the familiar Adventist theories regarding the alleged political and pagan origin of the Lord's Day. (Revell. $1.00 net.)

YOUR BABY. By Dr. E. B. Lowry. A guide for young mothers, by one who has written a number of works dealing with the development of sex consciousness in boys and girls. The first half of the book deals with the mother and her various experiences; the second with the child and its care. (Forbes & Co., Chicago. $1.00 net.)

A Victory on the Congo

By CHARLES P. HEDGES

We have had a real triumph here this quarter, a triumph spelled in big letters. We baptized the only Nkum known to have been baptized in these parts, and so far as I know, anywhere else.

The Nkum is the Dead Lord to these people, and to call one a Nkum dies, because when he becomes a Nkum he ceases to appear to the living. Nkum is the only ghost we believe in. This is done in public under awful oaths and curses. Many [illegible] come over to become a Nkum person, [illegible] it covers and [illegible] it are cursed during [illegible] cut and [illegible] in the [illegible] He [illegible] to [illegible] chips of the [illegible] by the [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible]."

Iyeji Nkoi (Leopard) came here to Longa three months ago saying that he wanted to be baptized. He said the set phrase which all say; it is a little hard to get it in good English without losing its uniqueness: "I heard the gospel and it cut my heart like a wound, and I said I must go to the white man and be baptized." He had been under instruction in his home town for several months. But our evangelists were afraid for him to break the oaths, so they brought him in with all his glory attached.

The old man was in earnest, having given up all his wives but one, left his home and all to become a Christian. We did not insist stubbornly that he must give up all that stuff which seemed essential to him, but we got him to give up a little at a time. First he washed with water, and no harm came to his body; next he took off some of his animal skins and charms, and [illegible] substituted a skull cap for his official crown.

In all this [illegible] done to him. But when the supreme test came, that is, exposing his head in the daylight to men, it was with fear and trembling. The old [illegible] very happy when he saw that no [illegible] him, and said, "I've done all and yet I live, why should I fear any more?" His [illegible] nephews who are Christians told him that they would not go to the river to see [illegible] head to the gaze of the rabble and to have the sun shine upon it. But he said "I must do it, for I want to be a Christian." [illegible] head at the [illegible] but came [illegible] careful to be sure that it was not of Satan. But we have done what we could.

WHAT IS SALVATION?

IT MUST be admitted that not a little of the preaching of our age, in spite of the growing intelligence of preachers, and the serious desire to do justice to the larger values of the gospel, is couched in archaic terms which make the impressions of adherence to the outworn commercial conceptions of salvation.

Men in the pulpit, or in the paragraphs of religious journalism, talk of salvation as if it were a commodity that could be gotten by weight or measure, or a state of assured immunity from the further approaches of sin and its consequences.

At times it is made to appear that salvation is achieved by the acceptance of a belief, or the practice of a form of worship, or the obedience to an ordinance, or membership in an organization. No one of these things insures salvation, nor all of them combined.

A man might hold with entire intellectual sincerity the most adequate and convincing formulation of Christian truth and still he be advantaged in no regard so far as the attainment of the holy life, which alone is salvation, is concerned. There is no confession, of even the most vital truths of our faith, that by itself has any efficacy in winning salvation.

Nor is any rite or form or ordinance of the least value in procuring salvation. It is this commercial view of religion which has cheapened it in the regard of multitudes who might have been impressed with a more vital conception of the gospel. One cannot obtain so much salvation with an equivalent of belief or performance or relationship.

Salvation is friendship with God, and its highest interpretation is that given in the life and teachings of Jesus. Salvation is the life of good will and service. It is character, achieved by fellowship with the Savior, and expressing itself in a spirit like his. Belief, confession, worship, observance of symbolic acts suggested by him, membership in a community of his friends are all aids. But salvation is vital friendship with God and with man. Salvation is character.

THE OBSESSION OF MILITARISM

LIFE is not without a certain diversion, even in these tragic days of a great and desolating war. This diversion is furnished in no small degree by the animated efforts of the promoters of militarism in this country, who appear to be satisfied with nothing less than the most serious endeavors to involve the United States in the big conflict.

These interested people are not wholly the military men, for though they might be supposed from their profession of arms to be interested in the promotion of the fighting spirit, they have with few exceptions spoken with moderation on the subject. And far from joining in the cry for vast expenditures of money for greater war equipments, they have pointed out the ample ability of the country on its present military and naval footing to take care of all emergencies that are likely to arise.

It is rather a certain section of the press, that seems to have lost its head completely, and to have forgotten every principle of comity and internationalism for which our people have contended through all our national history. This type of journalism, not content with the utterance of what might be regarded as appropriate warnings on the subject of preparedness, has seemed rather to make it its chief business to foster the war spirit, and to use its utmost endeavors to force the nation into war.

A notorious and flagrant example of this order of jingoism is furnished by the Chicago Tribune, a journal that in the past has stood for more moderate and constructive measures. Now its pages are filled with inflammatory utterances on the hypothetical perils in which the nation is involved, the weakness of the administration, the need of a strong arm, and the practical certainty of war. One could approve a dignified, even if mistaken advocacy of militarism. But when every sign that can be construed into an indication of coming conflict is seized upon with an avidity that betokens positive delight in the prospect of war, the reader revolts from the malicious and misleading outbursts, that from cartoons to editorials fill columns of the daily output.

People who have read the Tribune for years with profit and pleasure are compelled, out of self-respect and the desire to preserve in some measure their national ideals and their regard for facts, to exclude it from their homes. After this time of hysteria has passed, it is to be hoped that such papers, disappointed of the cheap notoriety of militant leadership, and the sordid profits that newspapers reap out of any public calamity, may return with somewhat chastened spirit to the nobler task of promoting clear thinking and the better sentiments of good will which are the surest safeguards against the danger of war.

THE OFFERING FOR HOME MISSIONS

WITH each year the opportunities of home missions grow as the nation extends its empire into the sparsely settled regions of the west and southwest. With a territory capable of supporting many times our present population, and with the certainty that the next few years will bring us enormous additions from the stricken realms of Europe, it is the nick of time for the formation of the Christian type of character in the yet plastic communities where mission work is most productive.

Also in the cities, drawing to themselves not only the incoming peoples of Europe, but the urban-tending youth of our own land, there is call for a new order of consecration to the cause of Home Missions. Notable things have been accomplished among foreign populations of several of our cities by the American Christian Missionary Society. It would be folly to exchange its time-tried leadership for any provincial and partisan experiment in the work of missions in America.

The first Sunday in May is the day for the Home Mission Offering.

CHURCH UNION IN ENGLAND

THE non-conformist churches of England have long been theatened with the two-fold danger of the official prestige of the Church of England, and the divisions in their own ranks.

They have at length come to see the futility of longer wasting their resources in the rivalries which in this country as well as there constitute the outstanding scandal of the church. At the last meeting of the Free Church Council the president called attention to the very great need of a united church, to the extent at least of such a federation as would combine the struggling forces in small communities, and reduce friction elsewhere. The proposal was met with the heartiest cordiality.

It may be that England, whose reputation is that of a slowly moving people, will yet anticipate the churches of the United States in the attainment of effective unity among the many and hitherto divided free churches.

THE UNITED STATES AND JAPAN.

those which relate to America. Their attitude toward China and Korea are outstanding in this list. In some of these regards we do not sympathize with the Japanese attitude. But we are of the convinced opinion that in dealing with the Japanese the American authorities have been guilty of most grave and irritating discourtesies toward a brave, progressive and friendly people, and that an honorable adjustment of the causes of friction should be sought in the spirit of fairness and good will, to say nothing of Christian generosity.

We may have war with Japan. There are many ways in which it might come about. But if war comes, it will be of our own making, as the result of needless affronts to a self-respecting and sensitive nation.

(1.) The visiting delegates occupied the platform at the theater meeting at Lima. The speakers were Prof. Eduardo Monteverde, of Montevideo; Rev. Alvaro Reis, of Rio de Janeiro and Rev. Frederiko Barroetavena. The last named was speaking when the picture was taken. Bishop L. L. Kinsolving, of Brazil, presided. His face is almost entirely hidden by Mr. Barroetavena.. The Lima Conference

The following are extracts from a letter written by Dr. A. W. Halsey, reporting the Conference held in Lima, Peru, by the company of missionary leaders who sailed the day following the close of the Panama Congress, to hold Regional Conferences in Lima, Santiago, Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro.

THE Lima Conference was a success. While the boat was late and we did not reach Lima until Tuesday, February 29, we were able to hold our great mass meeting on Tuesday evening. This was in many respects the best feature of the gathering. Bishop Kinsolving presided, and Professor Monteverde,, Sr. Alvaro Reis and Sr. Barroetavena spoke. The United States Minister, who was present, was most enthusiastic in his praise. The theater was filled with people, and a more attentive audience I have never seen. It would have been much better had a large hall been hired and meetings held there in the evenings. I believe we could have filled the hall every night. The newspapers treated us very fairly, giving us good space, and we received nothing but courteous treatment from all classes.

The Committee on Findings began their work early and I think the final result was most satisfactory. We gave the last day to Co-operation and Women's Work and the last two hours to a discussion of the findings. They were adopted unanimously.

Ample preparations had been made by the Local Committee. The papers for the most part were prepared with great care, and were packed full of information dealing with local conditions.

All the churches at work at Lima were represented. In some respects the paper presented by the Salvation Army man was one of the best handed in to our committee. We had the captain of the Salvation Army on the Business Committee and gave him, as we did the others, every possible opportunity to present his work. One morning we had each of the representatives of the bodies at work in Peru stand up while we bombarded them with questions as to the numbers engaged in the work, the strength and weakness of the position, their needs, and what obstacles there were in the way of co-operation.

At the beginning of the Conference, the national workers were a little slow to take part in the discussions, but as the days wore on they realized that the Conference was for them, and they freely indulged in the discussions.

We laid great stress on co-operation. There will be some difficulties. We are in hopes that the American Board may see its way clear to go in with some educational aid such as was outlined in the Findings. Mr. Goddard, who represented the American Board, has agreed to bring the matter before his board, and he is thoroughly posted in the whole situation and sees the imperative need of co-operation, and co-operation along the line of training a native ministry and workers from the field, to carry on the kinds of Christian activity needed.

Possibly the most interesting discussion came from a statement made by Mr. Smith, who had done much work among the Indians. If there is any lingering doubt in the mind of any one that South America does not need missionaries, I think the results of this one Conference would dispel such doubt, both as to the Indians and to the other classes of population in the community. I believe a valuable addition will be made to our knowledge of the Indian question by these various Conferences. The Indian certainly is a neglected man in South America, so far as mission work is concerned. I could go ever further than this and state that the men in South America are needing the gospel as possibly nowhere else in any one of our mission fields.

In general, the Lima Conference was characterized by a spirit of unity, of harmony, and of the utmost freedom in stating difficulties, with great stress laid on co-operation.

We left Lima for Santiago, Chile, yesterday, March 8th, exactly as planned. Every one, so far as I know, was thoroughly satisfied that full and ample discussion had been given to all the pertinent problems at Lima, and ample opportunity had been given to the delegates to see all the Christian work being carried on in this princely city of Peru.

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Convention of Y. M. C. A.

The thirty-ninth convention of the North American Young Men's Christian Associations will convene at Cleveland, Ohio, Friday, May 12, and the sessions will continue until the 16th. The program indicates that the big religious ideals of the association work will be to the fore in this convention. The speakers are noteworthy and include such names as General Leonard Wood, Archdeacon Cody, Rev. John Timothy Stone, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Bishop McDowell, Mr. Robert E. Speer, Mr. Raymond Robins, President W. Douglas Mackenzie, Rev. J. H. Jowett, Bishop McConnell and Hon Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Bible Sunday.

The American Bible Society was organized in May, 1816, and the organization is planning a celebration of the fact this year. May 7 is Bible Sunday and the churches are exhorted to show their appreciation of the organization by special services. This society issues Bibles in 45 different languages. During the hundred years it has circulated 68,828,334 scriptures in the United States and a total of 109,926,214 volumes for the entire world. In that period $38,000,000 has been given the society by the American people and some revenue has been derived from the sale of Bibles.

Study Religion at Northwestern University.

The study of comparative religion is now being carried on actively at many universities and at Northwestern University there will be a course of lectures on the religion of the Greeks during the first week in May. Prof. Paul Shorey, Ph.D., of the department of Classics in the University of Chicago, will deliver the lectures. The six subjects will be as follows: Introduction; Religion in Greek Poetry; Religion in Philosophy; Skepticism and the Spirit that Denies; The Gospel of Socrates; The Religion of Julian

Preachers Opposed to Church Peace Union.

New York has been made the center of an anti-preparedness propaganda by the Church Peace Union, but it is also becoming a center from which the other kind of attitude will be cultivated as well. A meeting was held recently at which a number of the eminent ministers of the city voiced their preparedness sentiment, and divisions do not follow denominational lines. Bishop Greer is a pacifist, but Dr. W. T. Manning believes in preparedness. Other preparedness advocates are Drs. S. P. Cadman, Henry E. Cobb, Wilton Merle-Smith, Cornelius Woelfkin and Nehemiah Boynton.

Thinks Confirmation May Be Waived.

The question of whether confirmation shall continue to be prior to communion in every case is one that agitates the Episcopalians of England. The war is undoubtedly tending to draw the Established church and the Free churches closer together, but the non-conformists are repelled by the lack of any sort of recognition of their Christian status. [illegible] has [illegible] ligious bodies be admitted freely at the communion table of the Episcopal church, even though Episcopalians would not be allowed to commune in Free churches. The early Methodists craved this privilege and would perhaps never have become a separate denomination if such practice had prevailed. Canon Green would also favor allowing non-conformist ministers to preach in Episcopal pulpits, even though these visits were not returned by the rectors. It will be interesting to see what effect these suggestions will have on the non-conformists and on the "Catholics" of the English church.

Moody Church Over-Crowded.

Rev. Paul Rader has been pastor of the Moody church for about a year and in that time has opened a tabernacle considerably north of the present location of his church. He has preached in the tabernacle through the week and on Sunday nights. It is now reported that the morning audiences are too large for the seating capacity of the church, which will hold 2,000 people. The morning meetings will be held at the tabernacle also. It will be remembered that this is a down-town church. It is very modern in its publicity program.

Think Church Leaders Want to Evade Law.

The Churchman reads a lecture to a number of religious leaders for wanting to evade the building laws of the state of New York. First the "Billy" Sunday movement is taken to task for wanting to get special permission from the legislature to build a tabernacle in New York City. Then the Christian Endeavor movement is reported as wanting to erect a building next to the state house which would be considerably higher than the law allows.

Revival of Catholicism in France.

It is now ten years since the disestablishment of the Roman Catholic church in France. This act was supposed to be the beginning of the end for the church, but it is reported as having grown more the past ten years than in the previous hundred. Over 20,000 seminarists, priests and monks are in the army fighting as common soldiers. There is now a revival of religious interest in France.

Find Use for Old Pullman Cars.

Blackburn University, of Carlinville, Ill., is a Presbyterian school that prides itself in its ability to help poor young people get an education. A unique method was used recently to house some indigent students. The Pullman company was induced to run two old cars that are now useless on a siding and in these cars a number of students will sleep for the present.

Mormon Church Makes Growth.

Ecclesiastical organizations seem to flourish on opposition, as is to be seen in the history of the Mormon church. The 89th General Conference of this body was held recently and it was shown that in fourteen years, seventeen million dollars had been disbursed by the church. The gain in membership in fourteen years was 187,773. Four hundred and sixty-five new churches were built in the same period. This indicates a normal and healthy growth in the most despised of all America's religious organizations.

Will Organize Against Infidelity.

In the belief of a number of ministers in Indiana and Ohio the old infidel movement of the past century is still alive enough to justify some attention from the church. A call is issued by these men for a convention in Evansville, Ind., early in May, to organize an Anti-Infidelity Society. The call is signed by Rev. J. Dwight Hagaman, of Evansville.

Starting War on Union Seminary.

The perennial exercise of a certain type of mind in the Presbyterian denomination is to start some form of persecution of Union seminary. After the seminary bowed to the will of the denomination and remained an interdenominational institution, it was thought that the whole question was amicably settled. Now reports are coming in of many presbyteries that have voted petitioning that the General Assembly start a "friendly" suit to recover property that is alleged to belong to the denomination. Leading denominational papers speak caustically of this movement. Recently a number of Union seminary men were ordained, though they were weak on their answers about the virgin birth. No active pastor voted against ordaining them, but three retired ministers did.

"LO, WE TURN TO THE GENTILES."
Lesson for May 14.

Golden Text: I have set thee for a light of the Gentiles, That thou shouldst be for salvation unto the uttermost part of the earth. Acts 13:47.

Lesson Acts 13:13-52: verses 13-15, 42-52 printed.

Memorize verses 45, 46.

(13) Now Paul and his company set sail from Paphos, and came to Perga in Pamphylia: and John departed from them and returned to Jerusalem. (14) But they, passing through from Perga, came to Antioch of Pisidia; and they went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and sat down. (15) And after the reading of the law and the prophets the rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, Brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on.

(42) And as they went out, they besought that these words might be spoken to them the next Sabbath. (43) Now when the synagogue broke up, many of the Jews and of the devout proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas; who, speaking to them, urged them to continue in the grace of God.

(44) And the next Sabbath almost the whole city was gathered together to hear the word of God. (45) But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with jealousy, and contradicted the things which were spoken by Paul, and blasphemed. (46) And Paul and Barnabas spake out boldly, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first be spoken to you. Seeing ye thrust it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. (47) For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying,

I have set thee for a light of the Gentiles,
That thou shouldest be for salvation unto the uttermost part of the earth. (48) And as the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of God: and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed. (49) And the word of the Lord was spread abroad throughout all the region. (50) But the Jews urged on the devout women of honorable estate, and the chief men of the city, and stirred up a persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and cast them out of their borders. (51) But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium. (52) And the disciples were filled with joy and with the Holy Spirit.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. Paul and his company. Paul by this time has become the leader in his group. There is in every group a natural leader. He is the [illegible]—Came to Perga in Pamphylia. Paul was a native of Cilicia and hence the southern part of Asia Minor must have been known to him.—John departed from them and returned to Jerusalem. We do not know the reason for his action; but the fact that he departed displeased Paul and leads one to suppose that [illegible] have been in the wrong.

14. Passing through from Perga, came to Antioch of Pisidia. [illegible] Paul in the beginning yielded to Barnabas in his desire to evangelize his native island. Paul assumes the leadership and turns to the mainland. This was his home.

15. After the reading of the law and the prophets. It may be that these readings were expounded and the exposition constituted the sermon.—The rulers of the synagogue. The ruler of the synagogue called any to speak that he desired.—Sent unto them. Paul and Barnabas that they should speak to the people gathered in the synagogue.

42. And as they went out. Paul and Barnabas, or the company with Paul.—They besought. The congregation that assembled in the synagogue.

43. When the synagogue broke up. When the congregation was dismissed. Devout proselytes. Some of the Gentiles who were friendly to the synagogue worship and work. —Urged them to continue in the grace of God. Keep yourselves in the love of God. Cultivate their spiritual nature. Grow in grace.

44. Almost the whole city was gathered together to hear the word of God. This shows that Paul was a good speaker, at least a man who had something worth while to say.

45. Contradicted the things which were spoken by Paul. They objected to the universal terms of salvation. The Jews thought that the Gentiles could not be saved with them, or by the same method.—Blasphemed. They slandered the apostles.

46. It was necessary that the word of God should first be spoken to you. This was the method of work, See Acts 1:8, and 3:26.—Ye thrust it from you. The Jews did not accept his message. See John 1:11.—Judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life. They did not accept. We are judging ourselves unworthy of it, by every act of refusal in our daily activities.—Lo we turn to the Gentiles. This marks a mighty revolution. Christianity is to become a world-wide religion not by the Jews, but in spite of them.

47. For so hath the Lord commanded us. The justification for this course is found in the command of the Lord. The quotation is from Isaiah 49:6.

48. As many as were ordained to eternal life believed. Publicly declared themselves for God. Those who enlisted in God's service.

49. The word was spread abroad. Principally among the Gentiles, Jewish prejudice would restrain large numbers of the Jews.

50. The devout women of honorable estate, and the chief men of the city. This may have been a class which did not attend the synagogue. Shows strength of opposition.—Cast them out of their borders. They were expelled from the city.

51. They shook off the dust of their feet against them. Symbolic act of disapproval, see Matt. 10:14.

51. The disciples were filled with joy. In spite of the loss of their leaders they were true to their faith.

Going Forward

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

FORWARD! is the watchword of the hour, in all forms of human activity. It calls forth our keenest minds, and rules the life of more people than any other word in the living world. We who work in the religious field do not appreciate it as much as others because religious ideas are the last and slowest to move forward.

It has been said of Napoleon that "he never for a moment lost sight of his way onward in the dazzle and uproar of present circumstances." Whether this is true of Napoleon or not it certainly is true of the Apostle Paul, as all our lessons have shown. When the Jews at Antioch refused to hear him he turned to the Gentiles. He will go on and on, till he has made Christ known throughout the Roman Empire, ceasing not in his forward movement till death itself arrests him. He never became careless of the goal.

We must not for a moment imagine [illegible] had an [illegible] course. He did not [illegible] many [illegible] to encourage him [illegible] have to [illegible] conquest. His old time friends were not friendly and the new ones were not very enthusiastic in supporting him in the Christian life. Opposition confronted him on every hand. It was the price he had to pay before receiving the coveted blessing. One of the sources of trouble was from the very people from whom he had every right to expect the most hearty support. It has always been true. We must not hope to escape if the crown of success is to be our happy possession. The same God that gave Paul victory still reigns and is willing to help us. He is our sufficiency. In a story by Mabel Earle two young men are pictured standing in a large pumping station, watching the ponderous machine supply the water for the needs of many. One of the boys said to the other, "Say, they make a fellow feel small. They are so efficient." The statement touched the springs of thought, and the young man discovered that the tremendous power made visible before them was simply a portion of God's power. Man could touch and claim it by obeying the laws under which it operated. Back of these massive wheels and plunging pistons was the undiminishing water supply. Beyond them, higher and deeper than human thought, lay the power of God.

In this case the power of God is working in iron, steel and brass because they are obedient to a certain mechanical law. It will work in high thoughts and brave actions and splendid kindness just the same way if the heroes and martyrs and philanthropists obey the law and make way for the strength of God to act itself out through them.

Our going forward to great success will depend upon our vigor of soul and body, the strength of muscle and clearness of brain which make life a joy and work a delight, and these are gifts from the inexhaustible source of all power. God is back of them. They are operated under a law which might be disregarded only at the cost of what is best in life. Their integrity for this world and the next is a sacred trust.

We need to learn the lesson which Paul taught these primitive people of Lystra, in these days of great achievement and conquest—that God is the giver of good, and that we are indebted to him for all the things of life. It may make us feel small, and yet—it is the only way anything great and good ever gets done.

Disciples Table Talk

Some Leaders at the Indiana State Convention to be Held May 15-18, at Danville.

Charles O. Lee, pastor at Danville, Ind., says that the indications are for a record-breaking convention this year. Preparations are being made by the Danville people to entertain a large gathering. The full program will be published next week. Among the features are the following addresses: "The Efficient Minister," Chas. M. Sharpe; Convention sermon, Jabez Hall; President's address, F. E. Smith; "The Glory of the Church," W. F. Richardson; "Consecration the Secret of Success," F. D. Kershner; "The Congress on Christian Work in Latin America," Mrs. Ida W. Harrison; Address, Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, Kentucky. All persons intending to attend the convention should write to Charles O. Lee, Danville, Ind., concerning entertainment.

R. H. Crossfield Again Heads Education Board.

R. H. Crossfield, president of Transylvania College, was re-elected president of the board of education of the Disciples of Christ at a meeting of the board held at Indianapolis, April 14-15. G. D. Edwards, of Columbia, Mo., dean of the Missouri Bible College, was elected secretary, and C. E. Underwood, of Butler College, was elected treasurer for the coming year. Dr. Crossfield has been president of the board for the past three years. He was also selected to fill the position of acting general secretary of the board and in this position he will represent the colleges affiliated with the board in the general meetings of the Disciples of Christ. Hill M. Bell, president of Drake University, presented a detailed report on the status and classification of the colleges represented in the board of education. T. E. Cramblet, president of Bethany College, spoke on methods of increasing college enrollments. The subject was also discussed by Thomas C. Howe, president of Butler College. The progress of the "Men and Millions Movement" was discussed by A. E. Cory and R. H. Miller. The board decided to join with the other boards of the Disciples of Christ in the publication of a joint magazine. Among the educators in attendance at the late meetings were President J. C. Caldwell, of Atlantic Christian College, Wilson, N. C.; President Miner L. Bates, of Hiram College; President H. O. Pritchard, of Eureka College; Charles M. Sharpe of the Divinity House of the University of Chicago; Mrs. Sinclair-Moss, of Christian College, Columbia, Mo.; President Joseph A. Serena, of William Woods College, Fulton, Mo., and Dr. Bell, Mr. Edwards, Dr. Crossfield, Dr. Howe, Dr. Cramblet and Mr. Underwood.

Record-Breaking Gains in Foreign Mission Offerings.

For the first twenty-seven days of March the churches as churches sent $24,958 for Foreign Missions, a gain of $9,934 over the corresponding time one year ago. This is one of the largest gains from the churches in the history of the Foreign Society, reports F. M. Rains. The number of churches responding during the twenty-seven days is 1,341, a gain of 405. The total gain from all sources is $14,243. For the current missionary year, that is from October 1, 1915, to March 27, 1916, the gains from the churches amounted to $15,341. Mr. Rains writes that the Foreign Society has never before been permitted to record so large a gain in the offerings from the churches for the corresponding time. The gain in the number of contributing churches is 607. This is also a record-breaker. No such gain has ever before been reported. Friends everywhere will rejoice over these advances. Secretary Rains, however, sends this word of warning: "Let us all remember that it is a long time to September 30, when the year closes. Our interests and our labors must not slacken. Every friend must work hard to keep up the gains that have been well begun. See to it that there is no retreat. Now is the time to strike. If your church is not in line, let it join the advancing column at once. There is widespread interest in coming up to the mark. All hands to the task! Please send the offering of your church today if you can."

Oklahoma Disciples to Meet May 8-11 at Claremore in Annual Convention.

May 8-11 is the date set for the state meeting of the Oklahoma churches, to be held at Claremore. E. T. Lane is president of the convention, A. R. Spicer being the state secretary and Bible-school superintendent. The following are some of features of the convention: The State Bible-school Session, on Tuesday, May 9; the C. W. B. M. Session, on Tuesday afternoon; convention sermon, J. W. Darby, Tuesday evening; C. W. B. M. breakfast and conference, Wednesday morning at 7; state work session, Wednesday afternoon; Men's Brotherhood luncheon, Wednesday evening; Joint conferences, Thursday morning; Bible-school session, Thursday morning at 11; Christian Endeavor session, Thursday afternoon; C. E. luncheon, Thursday at 6 p. m.; Closing convention session, Thursday evening. F. D. Kershner will conduct devotional Bible studies throughout the convention.

Some Features of Iowa's State Meeting, at Osceola, May 1-4.

Some of the outstanding features of the state convention of Iowa Disciples, at Osceola, are the following: C. W. B. M. Sessions, Monday and Tuesday; Consecration Address, Walter M. White; "The Trained Church Member," W. J. Clarke, National Adult Superintendent; "The Iowa Work in Retrospect and Prospect," A. M. Haggard; Convention Sermon, F. M. Warren; "Unopened Doors," B. S. Denny; "Closed Doors," J. A. McKenzie; President's Address, B. W. Garrett; "The Church's Task," W. J. Clarke; "A Life Call to Young People," W. F. Richardson; "The Minister's Problems," W. F. Richardson; "Christian Education," by A. M. Haggard; "The World Work of Our Brotherhood," C. S. Medbury; Christian Endeavor banquet; Rural Church conferences. George E. Purdy, of Bloomfield, is state chairman in place of C. H. Morris, recently removed to Denver.

Texas Disciples in Convention at Waco, May 8-11.

F. N. Calvin, of Waco, writes in behalf of the state convention of Texas Disciples as follows: "The program committee, especially the chairman, A. L. Clinkinbeard, has worked hard and faithfully to lay before the convention one of the best programs that has ever been presented. One day will be given over largely to the laymen, and we are hoping to see a large delegation of business men from all over the state. Our Young Men's Business League has agreed to cooperate with our committee in furnishing automobiles to carry all the visitors about the city at such hour as shall be agreed upon, and show them one of the prettiest cities and communities in Texas. If anyone desires any special information, if he will write me his letter will receive immediate attention."

Vachel Lindsay at Eureka.

Vachel Lindsay, of Springfield, Illinois, visited Eureka College recently, giving a reading. He was entertained on one evening by the members of the faculty at the home of President H. O. Pritchard, and the following afternoon at the same place by the members of the senior class.

A Church That Has Sixty Per Cent Foreign Membership.

Perhaps the most successful work being done by the Disciples of Christ among the foreigners of America is that at Broadway church, Cleveland, O., under the efficient leadership of Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Butchart and assistant, Miss Bessie Pehotsky. The work is the outgrowth of the old Aetna Street church. Twelve years ago Mr. Butchart became the pastor of this church. It was a downtown work and was gradually hemmed in by incoming factories and the foreign element who took up residence in that community. A few years ago the pastor saw that the only salvation for the church would be to build a new modern church building and community house in the heart of the Bohemian settlement. This was done at an expense of $19,000. The new church building is equipped with a splendid auditorium, Bible-school rooms, club rooms, gymnasium and kitchen and is located in the heart of a Bohemian settlement of 30,000. Two years ago Mr. Butchart was given a helper in the person of Miss Bessie Pehotsky and the problem of leading the foreigners to

Church Extension News

At the board meeting on April 4, the board granted the following loans:

Annona, Teas, First church, $500, 4 per cent; Urbana, Iowa, $1,000, 6 per cent; Storm Lake, Iowa, $1,000, 6 per cent; Mt. Vernon, Ill., First church, $5,000, 6 per cent; Eldon, Iowa, $1,500, 6 per cent; Corvallis, Ore., $6,000, 6 per cent and Edgemont, Ark., $300, 4 per cent.

Since our last report was made we have received $1,000 from a friend in Iowa, $200 from a friend in Ohio, who has given many times before, $1,000 from another friend in Ohio, who has been giving money before, $150 from Arkansas. All of these were annuity gifts.

279 churches have been helped in the erection of their buildings through the annuity plan. There is now over $425,000 in this fund which is constantly aiding in the erection of buildings. 439 people have given to church extension on the annuity plan, and every one is well pleased. Most of them are repeating their gifts annually. A large number of friends of church extension should be added to this list and should be giving money on the annuity plan. Send to G. W. Muckley, 603 New England building, for information. Our board pays 6 per cent for annuity money if persons are fifty years old or more. The wife is made a beneficiary in the bond if she survives her husband, and at the same rate per cent provided she is fifty years old or more or when the gift is made.

During the month of March, churches sent $741.76 and the individual gifts amounted to $3,762. This is a gain of $611.88 over the same month of 1915.

The Board of Church Extension, according to the recommendations of the brethren attending the Panama Congress, is expecting to extend the sphere of its influence into all of Latin America, provided its charter will permit.

L. D. Anderson will make the address on church extension at the Texas convention. Mr. Muckley expects to attend all the southwestern conventions including Oklahoma and all the north central Mississippi Valley conventions and those in Canada, during July.

All remittances should be made to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 603 New England Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Christ was begun in earnest. As a result today there is a church membership of 300, a Bible-school enrollment of 600; the average attendance of the Bible-school is 300. Sixty per cent of the Bible-school are people of foreign nationality. J. A. Canby, pastor at Uhrichsville, O., recently held a two weeks' meeting at this church, with a result of 19 persons added to the membership. Mr. Canby writes in high praise of the work of the Butcharts and their assistant, and gives the following interesting picture of conditions at Broadway community: "The settlement is made up of three generations, grandparents, their children and grandchildren. The grandparents are loyal Catholics; the children have no interest in the Catholic church except out of respect to their parents; the grandchildren are thorough Americans and are being educated in the public schools. It is a hand-picking job requiring great patience and prayer. When once the children have expressed their desire to unite with the church usually a storm of opposition arises in the home, instigated by the grandparents, who are loyal Catholics. The parents out of respect to the grandparents give little or no encouragement. However, under the consecrated and efficient leadership of Mr. and Mrs. Butchart and Miss Pehotsky the work is going forward."

Kansas Physician Will Enter Foreign Medical Work.

Dr. J. W. Young, of Hutchinson, Kan., who is now serving the third year as President of the Kansas Christian Missionary Society, will leave about June 1 for the Philippine Islands to serve as a medical missionary. Kansas people will regret his leaving the state but will take special interest and pride in his work in "the uttermost parts." Dr. Young has practiced medicine in Hutchinson for fourteen years, and only leaves because he is sensitive to the urgent needs of the foreign field for medical workers. Dr. Young will give one year each to the hospitals at Manila, Laoag and Vigan, to serve in the stead of Dr. W. H. Lemmon, Dr. C. L. Pickett, and Dr. L. B. Kline, whose furloughs are now due. The Kansas State Board passed strong resolutions of appreciation of Dr. Young's work for the state society.

Arkansas State Convention at Hot Springs.

The State Convention of the Disciples of Christ, of Arkansas, will be held with the Hot Springs church, May 29 to June 1. The program is already under way and Arkansas Disciples are urged to bear the date and event in mind. G. D. Serrill, pastor at Hot Springs, writes that the church is preparing to take good care of all who come, providing lodging and breakfast in the homes, and meals for the delegates will be served at a reasonable cost. Every phase of the work will be discussed in the convention, and the feast of good things prepared will be worthy of a splendid attendance. Vital themes will be stressed.

Death of Philippine Christian Leader.

Prof. Bruce L. Kershner, writing to the Foreign Society from Manila, Philippine Islands, says: "We yesterday laid to rest the body of Juan Garcia, Sr., the father of the well-known evangelist of that name. Mr. Garcia was a leading man and was numbered among our early converts. His brother, Basilio Garcia, was one of the most faithful men I ever knew. He literally preached himself out in the early days of the work and when dying in almost absolute poverty, for he had no support, I asked him if his faith in Christ was still firm. His feeble, but unhesitating reply was, 'Yes, I believe him faithfully.'"

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—R. J. Bennett, pastor at Sharon, Pa., preached a sermon two weeks ago on "The Worst Thing in Sharon."

—During the week preceding Easter, the C. W. B. M. of the Lexington, Mo., church held a series of prayer services. Easter was observed as Decision day at this church, and the pastor, R. W. Wallace, preached the annual Easter sermon to the local commandery of Knights Templar. Mr Wallace is emphasizing work for men, and recently preached a sermon on the theme, "A Man Called Matthew" for men especially.

—T. J. Golightly, superintendent of the public schools of Norborne, Mo., is also supplying the pulpit at Richmond, Mo., and the Richmond daily speaks in the highest terms of the work of Mr. Golightly.

—James M. Pickens, of Vermont church, Washington, D. C., sends in some printed matter recently mailed to members with the purpose of putting about $1,000 in the church treasury. It is quite novel, and effective. Anyone interested in this plan of clearing a debt should write Mr. Pickens.

Practical Economy

Baking powders made from alum or phosphate may be bought for a trifle less than Royal Baking Powder, which is made from cream of tartar, derived from grapes.

Alum powders are not only cheap, but they differ greatly in leavening power.

If a cheap baking powder is used for a fine cake and the cake turns out a failure there is a waste of costly materials worth more than a whole can of the cheap baking powder.

Royal Baking Powder produces the finest food, and its use therefore, results in an actual saving.

Christian Endeavor Notes

The Englewood Society, Chicago, Ill., has taken as its slogan, "An Englewooder in every mission field around the earth." A society with a slogan like that has the world-wide vision and will accomplish great things along all lines.

The Endeavor Society at Bellflower, Ill., when making a remittance to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society on the support of its orphan boy at Damoh, India, stated: "Our young people are doing fine work since they have taken a boy in India School. The two young girls that volunteered for foreign work will go to Eureka College to finish their work, then they will be ready for work on the field. They are both members of our C. E. Society and fine young ladies."

It is interesting to note the splendid increase in offerings from the Endeavor Societies to Foreign Missions. For six months of the missionary year to April 1 the contributions to the Foreign Society showed a gain of $1,946.50 over the same period last year. If this splendid rate of gain can be maintained the watchword, of the year, "$10,000 from the Endeavor Societies by September 30, 1916," will be reached.

The Society of the Madison church, Brooklyn, Iowa, is taking a splendid interest in world-wide missions. As a result of Endeavor Day they sent the Foreign Society $18 for the orphanage work at Damoh, India. They are also giving $15 a year for the support of an orphan at Bolenge, Africa. Miss Martha Tinker is president of the society.

A Question

Are Your Church and Bible-schools Systematic Supporters of the Widow and Orphan in the Homes of the National Benevolent Association?

If Not, Why Not?

Living Link Schools—
Give $100 annually thus supporting one inmate. Ninety-four schools are now in this royal company.

Life Guard Schools—
Devote monthly offerings for the support of the less fortunate. Nearly half the schools in Texas have enlisted.

Life Membership Certificates—
Are issued when as much as $25 has been given. Holders of life memberships vote on important matters of the home.

How Much Do We Eat?
300, at least, loaves of bread a day.
60 gallons of milk a day.
35 pounds of butter a day.
9 bushels of potatoes a meal.
100 quarts of fruit a meal.
90 pounds of meat a meal.
55 dozen eggs a meal.
$1.25 will feed one child for a whole week.

—Bruce Brown reports that F. W. Jackson, pastor at Shorb Avenue church, Los Angeles, has become well known for his vigorous campaigns against the saloon. The church was burned last autumn by the liquor interests.

—Central church, New York City, gave a reception to Chinese students of the city on April 28. On April 21 the oratorio, "Seven Last Words" was given at Central by a chorus of fifty voices.

—Paris, Tex., church will build a new home at once to take the place of the one recently destroyed by fire. J. N. Wooten is the heroic leader at Paris.

—R. B. Chapman, pastor at Ionia, Mich., has been holding a series of "lodge services" at his church, the various organizations of the city being invited to attend the meetings. The Elks of Ionia were the guests at the last of the series. Mr. Chapman has spoken in favor of the social and benevolent orders. "A good Elk is a good man," he said at this last meeting; "he has to be if he carries out the principles to which he has subscribed." Mr. Chapman is featuring the work of men and boys. A recent Sunday was called "Boys' day," and the Young Men's Bible class had charge of an evening service one Sunday this month.

—A. D. Harmon has accepted a call to become the head of the department of sociology and assistant in the Bible department of Cotner University, Lincoln, Neb. Mr. Harmon is now pastor at Cable, Wis.

—The following Kentucky towns were treated during April to "teen age" lectures and counsel by Miss Maus, National Teen Age Superintendent, and Roy K. Roadruck, Kentucky's Teen Age superintendent: Stanford, Lancaster, Danville, Harrodsburg, Lawrenceburg, Versailles, Eminence, Carlisle, Cynthiana, Georgetown, Shelbyville, Mt. Sterling, Flemingsburg and Maysville. Afternoon and evening sessions were held during the conferences.

—C. W. Cauble, of Indianapolis, has recently dedicated the remodeled building at Broadripple, Indianapolis, and the new building at Bicknell, Ind. He will dedicate Maple Avenue church, Terre Haute, late this month.

—Nearly two hundred "Philo Christos" met in the 1916 annual banquet at Central church, Des Moines. This class, under the leadership of Dwight Lewis, has had an unusual history. Among the honorary members of the organization are: Hon. A. B. Cummins, Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, Col. D. J. Palmer, Hon. B. F. Carroll, Gov. Geo. W. Clarke; President Hill M. Bell, of Drake, H. O. Breeden and Finis Idleman.

—F. E. Day, of Bethany, Neb., has been called to the state evangelistic work of Colorado.

—Rodney McQuary, now of Yale University, and formerly of Cotner University, finishes at Yale this spring, and will supply the pulpit at South Broadway church, Denver, during the summer.

—C. W. Cauble assisted Elkhart, Ind., church in a debt-raising campaign. F. C. Lake ministers at Elkhart.

—On April 14, Butler college debated with the University of Cincinnati on the question of preparedness.

—Danville, Ky., church celebrated the return of its pastor, H. C. Garrison, from Florida with a record Bible-school rally. Mr. Garrison was compelled to spend the winter months in the south because of ill health.

—Scottsburg, Ind., has a new parsonage which C. R. Piety, the recently called pastor, is initiating into service.

—At High Street, Akron, O., on April 2, there were twice as many men and boys present as women and girls.

Deferred Annuities for Preachers.

The publication of our proposed new, comprehensive and permanent system of pensions for ministers has set many of them to thinking. Several of them have been moved to action whose results cannot fail to be satisfactory. One has taken out two annuity bonds for $1,000 and $500. Another has placed $600 with the board on the deferred annity plan. He expects to add his savings to this deposit annually and we will compound six per cent interest on the whole until he retires. Then we will pay him and his wife the largest annuity his fund will purchase, which, if he continues active as long as he expects, will be ten per cent of his fund. In addition he will be entitled to a place on the pension roll with such monthly payments on that account as the state of our funds will warrant.

The certain returns on this method of laying by for old age are really marvelous. By beginning at 25 and paying $23 per year until 65, an annuity of $500 for life would be secured. Beginning at 30 the annual payment should be $31.50; at 35, $44; at 40, $63.50; at 45, $95.00; at 50, $152.50, etc., etc.

In case of earlier disability or death corresponding returns would be made to the minister or his widow.

NEWS NOTES FROM EUREKA COLLEGE.

Eureka College won the annual debate from the Illinois Wesleyan University of Bloomington. The debate was on the question of preparedness.

Recently a joint recital was given by Mr. Clarence Eidam, of Chicago, pianist; Mr. Hans Hess, of Chicago, cellist; and Mrs. Claudia Page-Smith, of Eureka, violiniste. This was one of the leading musical events of the year. Mr. Eidam is piano instructor in Eureka College.

Haydn's great oratorio, the "Creation," is going to be sung by a chorus of 200 voices here at the May festival, the latter part of May. The orchestra from the University of Illinois, under the direction of J. Lawrence Erb, will furnish the music.

—The congregation at Stockton, Cal., has shown its appreciation of the work of its pastor, E. V. Stivers, by presenting him with an automobile.

Notes From the Foreign Society

Last week a friend in Kansas, sent $1,000 for the work. Such interest should possess a large number of our people who are able.

E. R. Moon, Bolenge, Africa, reports 56 additions on Christmas Day, and 550 at the communion at the morning service.

Last week the Foreign Society received $361.25 from the estate of the late Nancy J. Bowman, of Lebanon, Ind. And this should remind us all that every disciple should remember the cause of foreign missions in their last will and testament.

C. F. McCall and family, Akita, Japan, sail this month for America, for their furlough.

The Christians on Hichijo Island, Japan, celebrated the first Christmas ever observed there last December.

The Christians at Toride, Japan, have pledged one-third of the sum for a new church building.

One church reports an offering 17 times increased over their apportionment, and possibly larger. This kind of liberality and sacrifice among all our churches would insure more than $500,000.

Secretary Bert Wilson has been making a very successful campaign in Oklahoma and Texas. He sold many books, some promised to support a missionary, others promised to give annuity money, and altogether the campaign has been an exceedingly successful one.

The faculty of the College of the Bible recently expressed its disapproval of the use of tobacco on the part of ministerial students by passing an order to the effect that hereafter students who use tobacco in any form will not be eligible to scholarship privileges including all regular fees and room rent in the dormitory.

The faculty does not wish to say that students preparing for the ministry in the College of the Bible may not use tobacco, but that such students will not be granted the usual concessions in the way of scholarships.

In addition to considering the use of tobacco injurious, there is a general feeling among the churches of the Disciples of Christ that a minister who indulges in the weed is shorn, in a measure, of his influence, many congregations absolutely refusing to consider a tobacco user for their pulpits. Furthermore, the position is taken that if a student has the means with which to buy tobacco he should not ask that financial aid be granted him by the college.

When the announcement of this action by the faculty of the College of the Bible was made to the ministerial students recently by President R. H. Crossfield, there was generous applause, showing the hearty approval of the student body.

The American Christian Missionary Society Last Year

Helped

531 communities to have the Gospel regularly preached.

Inspired

257 of our fellow citizens, members of our churches in states "On the Rim" to "Hold the Fort."

Supported (in whole or in part)

317 missionaries and many hundreds more of native helpers who in needy fields preached the Gospel.

Added Members

To the number of 11,891 to our young congregations on the far-flung frontiers of American civilization.

Evangelized

Important towns, North, East, South and West, by employment of successful evangelists for definite meetings, some making the local church self-supporting.

Supplied

The men who made effective the more than Ten Millions of Dollars invested in Home Missionary church buildings.

Conducted

A Bible school department with twenty-three men and women in field service, doing effective work. Teacher-training, graded lessons, organized classes, Schools of Methods and Missionary education are here given competent direction.

Maintained

37 "Efficiency Experts," known as State Secretaries, doing the work of New Testament Evangelists, exercising "a care for all the churches."

Promoted

Work among immigrants. The Society has four important points of contact with foreigners as follows: Among the Bulgarians in Chicago where Basil Keusseff is missionary; among Bohemians in Cleveland where F. D. Butchart is missionary; among the Russians in New York City where John Johnson is missionary; and among the mixed populations of the coke regions in West Pennsylvania, where R. G. Manley ministers. Only in Cleveland is our foreign work properly equipped.

Co-operated With Home Missions Council

Supporting a missionary at Ellis Island, obtaining governmental favors to Indians, fostering rural church activities, and executing plans for effectively gospelizing the neglected fields of the American frontier.

Organized a Campaign

To stimulate the interest of our churches in practical community service, special attention being given to rural churches, which comprise 90 per cent of our congregations and three-fourths of our membership.

The May Campaign

Ministers everywhere are making plans to present Home Missions to their churches in an effective way. Send for literature and supplies, without cost, to

THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY, CINCINNATI, OHIO

American Missions

S. W. Nay is doing a remarkable piece of work at Gary, Ind. Under his leadership the church has grown in strength. His business administration is placing the work where demand already exists for a new building.

Possibly the hardest field under the American Society is Harrisburg, Pa. We are pleased to report that J. G. Smith, the Hoosier hustler, is bringing things to pass even there.

Perhaps the greatest progress made in any one field under the American Society this year is at Galveston, Tex. J. B. Holmes is turning things upside down in that harbor city. Recently a property deal has been engineered which greatly promotes our appearance in the city. At the present writing J. H. O. Smith is eloquently preaching the gospel and winning converts in goodly numbers.

J. W. Baker, after seven and a half years of service as Superintendent of Missions for West Washington, has resigned. This is on account of Mrs. Baker's health. During this period Mr. Baker has handled for the American Society $23,535.82, which employed for part or full time 26 men. During this time 25 churches have been organized and 30 buildings erected. Under his direction 47 preachers have come to the state, locating with our churches. These mission points thus served, during the last five years paid into our missionary treasuries $9,654.18.

Oliver Hower is successfully leading the church at Toppenish, Wash., to victory. This congregation is making an interesting experiment in Christian unity. It is a partnership on the part of the Congregationalists and Disciples in that community. The two churches meet as one congregation and are served by one minister though each preserves its identity and keeps a separate roll. An elder from each church performs the ordinance of Christian baptism. The experiment is given unanimous approval by all parties interested.

D. B. Titus has recently organized and successfully dedicated a mission church at Idaho Falls and will remain in charge of the work under the society.

Salt Lake City was for many years a mission of the American Board. It is now self-supporting and under the leadership of Chester A. Snyder, makes progress in that important city.

In one way or another for 26 years the Disciples have been interested in Ogden. In recent years our work lapsed so far as organization was concerned. Rocky Mountain District Superintendent Dean recently visited the community and is now holding a brief meeting for re-organization.

Basil S. Keusseff, our Russian Missionary in Chicago, writes that a large percentage of his membership is on the battlefield in Europe. He has not received word from a number of his men for some time and fears that they have fallen during the Carpatian campaign. Most of the Russians in Chicago are from the provinces which fell into the hands of Germany. This situation is quite disheartening to his work.

Since the orders were received from Washington to begin activities for an enlarged and better equipped navy, the population of Vallejo has considerably increased. We have a small church in this place which has recently been stirred to activity. An appeal has been made to the American Society to support a minister.

Our brethren in Florida feel there is great need for the services of a State Evangelist and have appealed to the American Board for support. The receipts of the society thus far in the current year do not justify an increase in appropriations. It is hoped that some of our larger churches will untie our hands so that proper support can be given to this and other important appeals.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Volume XXXIII MAY 4, 1916 Number 18

The Widening of the Door

DURING THE PAST DECADE THERE HAS BEEN A PARTIAL AND GRADUAL AWAKENING OF MANY OF THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST TO A CERTAIN ANOMALOUS ELEMENT IN THEIR ATTITUDE TOWARD THE REMAINDER OF THE CHRISTIAN WORLD, AND A GROWING SENTIMENT OF CONCERN AS TO THE BEST METHOD OF MEETING THE SITUATION.

Standing upon a platform which commits them to intense, if not primary, interest in the unity of the Church of God in the world, they have discovered that after more than a century of history they have made upon their fellow-believers the general impression that they are interested far less in Christian unity than in a particular kind of unity consistent with their own organization and practice.

They have promoted the unity of the saints by sincere and often convincing restatements of the evils of sectarianism, and the plea of the Master and his greatest interpreter for oneness among the faithful. They have appointed committees and commissions, which in the most fraternal and generous spirit have conferred with other groups. They have co-operated in a multitude of ways with people of other fellowships in the effort to advance the kingdom of God, and related enterprises. They have gathered into their membership a great company of those who joined with them in the sentiment of union, either as confessors of the faith or as members from other churches.

They have probably contributed more to the spread of the sentiment of union than any other organized body of Christians. Yet after this century and more of history, they find themselves, as a body, unable to admit to their fellowship any save the members of just one of the hundred churches that claim a place in the ranks of American Christianity. This is the one weak place in the plea which we so sincerely and eloquently make to the fellowship of the followers of our Lord. And even if we could completely unite with that one church, the Baptist, with which upon one important point we find ourselves in agreement, it is far from evident that we would thereby have approached appreciably nearer to the goal of our hopes.

We have in our ranks several different groups, representing various reactions to this problem and its solution. There is first the very large section of our people who are in no manner sensitive to the problem. Confident that we are doing everything possible to promote Christian union in the manner conceived by the fathers, they are perfectly content to go on as in the past, hoping that by vigorous evangelism we shall so possess the field that presently, by the process of benevolent assimilation, the Disciple shall become the dominant body of believers, and thus the unity of all shall follow. These brethren wish no change made in our customary procedure, for to them such change would mean compromise with the sectarian world. Whoever comes into churches of this order, must come upon the confession of faith and immersion, or bring with him a letter or statement of membership in a Disciple or Baptist church.

Others there are who are somewhat more sensitive to the claims of other Christians for recognition. They know that the people who make up the "fringe" of their churches, some of them exemplary members of other churches, attracted by family or social or other considerations, really deserve recognition in the program of the church by reason of their Christian relationship and character. But because of the impediment of what is deemed an incomplete or erroneous baptism, they can only be counted in that outer circle where also total strangers wait.

Others, still more concerned to make use of such unattached Christians who attend upon their ministry, have broken over the bounds of custom sufficiently to lay unofficial hands upon such persons and induct them into service which would be supposed on usual grounds to belong only to the members of the church. Among our congregations there are in a few instances of Sunday-school superintendency, trusteeship, teaching, leadership in the women's work, and even in cases that we know, directorships of religious education, and pastorships held by members of outer Christian bodies who cannot be taken into the membership because of lack of immersion. Such churches feel themselves unable to grant membership to such although it is manifest that they regard them as Christians in every degree essential to religious efficiency.

Other churches there are among us where this thin partition has been breached. Not desiring to violate the time-honored custom of the Disciples of receiving into their membership only immersed believers, they adopt some simple device which enables them to classify and utilize this outside group of Christians who really belong to the church, while at the same time they maintain inviolate the integrity of the immersed church membership. This is done in various ways. The most common are the plans of associate membership and of membership in the congregation.

In the former case, people of the sort already mentioned, who would like to be connected with the church, but who are not ready to substitute immersion for the sprinkling of their childhood, or who are uninterested in the further consideration of baptism for themselves, are admitted to associate membership, under terms suitable to the church. Sometimes these include ineligibility to official position, or to the eldership, alone, sometimes inability to participate in any modification of the church constitution, and sometimes no limitations of any sort are specified.

Membership in the congregation, as distinct from the church, reaches practically the same end. The congregation is the larger legal body of which the church is the nucleus and controlling center. Members of other than immersionist churches are admitted into the congregation. But as in the former case, the integrity of the immersed church membership is not modified. There are theoretical objections that might be raised to these forms of relationship, but none on the ground of their abandonment of New Testament procedure. While those who are employing them find satisfaction and no difficulties in the plan.

Christian Liberty and Church Fellowship

A Paper Read at the Disciples Congress, Chicago.

BY WILLIAM DUNN RYAN.

HOLMES' CHAMBERED NAUTILUS illustrates man's struggle for freedom. He grows as the spiral grew. He may well say to his soul: "Leave thy low-vaulted past. Let each new temple, nobler than the last, shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast."

But it should be noted that the soul is not really free until it leaves its outgrown shell "by life's unresting sea." For a finite being there is, of course, no absolute liberty. On all sides there are limitations saying, "Thus far can you go, and no farther." To make liberty Christian, is indeed to limit it; but it is also to expand and glorify it. It was Christ's interpreter who loved to speak of the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

How is liberty amplified, and how is it limited by Christianity? What are the proper uses of liberty thus amplified and thus limited, in attaining membership in the Church of Christ?

To a discussion of these two questions I shall confine myself in this paper.

"The natural liberty of a man," says Locke, "is to be free from any superior power on earth and not to be under the will of legislative authority of man, but to have only the law of nature for his rule." Paraphrasing this definition, one may say: The Christian liberty of a man is to be free from any superior power on earth and not to be under the will of legislative authority of man, but to have only the law of Christ for his rule.

Liberty and Fellowship in the Period of Christ's Personal Ministry.

Christ regarded himself as an emancipator: "Ye shall know the Truth and the Truth shall make you free." "I am come that they might have life and have it abundantly." He begins his mission at Nazareth with the words of Isaiah, that his work is "to set at liberty them that are bruised." He declares that the worship of his disciples shall not be fettered by place (John 4:21). He sets them free from ancient law, contrasting his own, "I say unto you," with the edict of Moses. No longer are they to be slaves to institutionalism; institutions are to serve their needs: "The Sabbath was made for man; not man for the Sabbath." New wine-skins must be provided for the new wine. He does not criticise John's disciples for fasting, but defends his own for not doing so. For no class has he words of denunciation quite so severe as for the oppressors: "Woe unto you lawyers, also, for ye load men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers." Breaking the shackles that bound them to a dead past, he assured his disciples, "the words I speak unto you are spirit and are life." When a disciple reported having forbidden a man to cast out demons in the name of the Master, because he was not in their company, Jesus said: "Forbid him not: for he that is not against you is for you."

He was the herald of a new democracy, startling the stand-patter with his expositions of the hideous barrenness of tradition, shocking the Pharisee by his intercourse with publicans and sinners.

The liberty he advocated, however, was not license. He made possible for every man the transition from Law to Grace, from restraint to motive. But in setting his disciples free from external restraint he was careful to provide for them authority which they must recognize as supreme, else they could be none of his. "One is your Master," he said, "even Christ, and all ye are brethren."

LIBERTY NOT LICENSE.

"All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and in earth." He appealed to no tradition; he laid claim to no official status: yet those who heard him could not escape the consciousness that he spoke with authority. (Luke 4:32). Because the mind and the truth were made for each other men bow down before the authority of truth when it appears. Truth in the garb of moral perfection needs no dynamic other than itself to secure the homage that is its due. "Nothing is less like Jesus than to do violence to anyone's liberty," says James Denny, "or to invade the sacredness of conscience and of personal responsibility; but the broad fact is unquestionable, that without coercing others, Jesus dominated them; without breaking their wills he imposed his own upon them, and became for them a supreme moral authority to which they submitted absolutely, and by which they were inspired. His authority was unconditionally acknowledged because men in his presence were conscious of his moral ascendancy, of his own devotion to, and identification with, what they could not help but feel to be the supreme good."

His authority is never statutory. He came to set man free from legalism. Sometimes his precepts are in legal form; as, for instance, to the rich young ruler he gave the positive commandment, "go sell all you have and give it to the poor."

Yet we cannot apprehend that this is a condition of discipleship literally binding upon men. Rather we see in it the Master's demand for self-renunciation, and supreme evaluation of Kingdom interests. Its authority lies in the intention, not in the form. The authority of Jesus is absolute, but it is personal and practical. He stands before us not as a beneficent giver of rules, each of which we must observe in all literalness, or be damned; but as a great Friend in whom are embodied Truth and Love, for which our souls hunger and to the authority of which they freely bow in submission.

LIBERTY IN THE EARLY CHURCH.

The early disciples of Jesus prized, as among the chiefest riches they had found in him, their liberty. The shackles of law and tradition were broken for them. The greatest among them exclaims: "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made me free from the law of sin and death." He further exhorted his brethren to "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ made them free." On the other hand, there was always present the danger that people recently emancipated by Christ would use their liberty harmfully, or permit it to become, in practice, unbridled license. Against this perversion of it, notes of warning were frequently sounded: "Take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumbling block to the weak." Each is free, yet "not using his liberty as a cloak of maliciousness, but as the bond-servant of God."

Liberty and Fellowship in the Apostolic Church.

Liberty was fundamental in the Apostolic church. Each individual could know the joy and power of the new life that Christ foretold. Each man must "work out his own salvation," must "be fully assured in his own mind," must "give an account of himself unto God." "When the law of Moses is read it shall be with no hindering veil of the letter, but in the reverent freedom of the spirit." (2 Cor. 3:15). Of course Jesus Christ was recognized as sole and supreme authority. "Other foundation could no man lay." Efforts in the church at Corinth to invest with authority the teaching of others were heartily rebuked. (1 Cor. 3.)

It is to be noted that in New Testament writings apart from the gospels appeal is made but rarely to the literal words of Jesus. In the words of Edgar Daplyn: "What Jesus had sought and found in his disciples was a spiritual remembrance of himself. His words were preserved not in a phonograph, not in a stenographic report, but in the impression they made, in the insight they gave, in the thoughts and experiences they produced in the lives of living men." (Hastings' Dictionary, "Christ and Gospels," V. 2. page 151.) As in his own ministry, so in the ministry of his early disciples the authority of Jesus was shown to be personal rather than official.

TWO TENDENCIES IN PRIMITIVE CHURCH.

Christian liberty was vitally affected by two tendencies that appeared very early in the thought of the primitive church. One of these was to regard Christianity as a system of laws and ordinances given by God for the government of men's lives with the promise of immortal life as the reward for literal obedience; the other was to regard it as a revelation of a Father's infinite love for his children, as a life replete with blessedness which they might make their own, as a trust committed to them whereby they became Christ's co-workers in bringing the Kingdom of God into the hearts of men.

Efforts of the Judaizing party and others to curtail Christian liberty were quite successfully resisted during the Apostolic period. The council at Jerusalem, described in Acts 15, resulted in a distinct victory for the advocates of liberty. No doubt the spiritual power and evangelization of the Church in this era were due in no small measure to the cherishing of the liberty wherewith Christ makes free.

"The letter killeth but the spirit giveth life," was the principle in accord with which Paul sought to have doctrinal questions settled. Evident possession of the spirit of Christ was the supreme test of discipleship.

"Church membership" is a phrase that was unknown in the period of Christ's personal ministry. As everyone knows, he is reported to have only twice used the word translated "church." Personal attachment to him and loyalty to his ideals seemed to be the sole condition of discipleship. There is but little or no sign of organization. There was no fixed form of initiation into his circle of followers. They were his friends and disciples enjoying a degree of intimacy determined by their own volition. It is recorded that at one time his disciples were baptizing more disciples than John, but there is no evidence that this or any rite was a prerequisite to becoming his follower. It seemed to be his desire that life should precede organization, that it should be left to find forms of expression most appropriate and useful to it. He foresaw that organization would be necessary after he had gone.

THE "COMMUNITY OF BELIEVERS"

He declared that on the impregnable rock of his divine Sonship he would build a community of believers. Their task in continuing his mission is well set forth by Morrison, in his recent book, "The Meaning of Baptism":

"They must go out and carry to the world the life that he has imparted to them. But they must have organization. They are many: he is one.

"He, being alone, could work with them by a relationship purely individualistic. They, being many, can work with others only by following the laws of social order. They, too, must impart the life—'make disciples of all nations.' But in addition they must draw men together in a freemasonry of love on the basis of the new life they possess in common—'baptizing them.'

"Left to isolated individuals the life would eventually be lost, dissipated or corrupted. Therefore, when a disciple is made let him be inducted into the community of believers, let the social status of a Christian be conferred upon him."

Peter at Pentecost has a specific word of instruction for every man who would become a follower of Jesus. Substantially the same conditions of discipleship were given by all Apostolic teachers. It was early recognized that those who were followers of the "Way" had personally committed their lives to Christ, and that this committal included baptism.

We search the book of Acts in vain for the term "church fellowship." The way to come into union with Christ was made clear and those who had chosen for themselves this way of life constituted de facto the Christian community or Church. The following characteristic utterance of Paul indicates the democracy of the organization: "Not that we have Lordship over your faith, but are helpers of your joy; for by faith ye stand." There is an impressive absence of appeal to authority —except the authority of eternal Truth and Love. Professor Royce's favorite designation of the Church as the "Beloved Community," rather than "Ecclesia," is indicative of its character as Christ and the Apostles desired it to be.

It was simply the society of those who already realized the blessings of the Kingdom of God in their hearts, seeking to bring into the lives of others this same happy experience. Liberty and Church Fellowship seemed to be considered identical with liberty and fellowship with Jesus.

The Eclipse of Liberty.

In the second century the idea became quite general in the Church that sound belief is as much a condition of salvation as right conduct. Inevitably this position demanded a standard by which to determine what is the acceptable Christian belief. Deviation from this standard of doctrine soon came to be regarded as grave moral wickedness, punishable by excommunication. In the latter part of the second and in the third century the Church came to regard itself as the mouthpiece of God. It alone had authority over the religious conscience. Thus Christian liberty passed into total eclipse. Heresy became a heinous crime. In the reign of Theodosius II (382) it became punishable by death. Absolutism seemed suited to the spirit of the age. The attitude of the Church is thus portrayed by McGiffert: "The Christian Church is regarded by Catholics as the only ark of salvation, outside of which there is no saving grace, and also as the supreme authority upon earth in the political and moral as well as in the religious sphere. It knows the will of God and can utter it as no other institution on earth. A divine, not a human organization, it must be listened to as the voice of God for whom it speaks.

"The heretic who refuses to believe what the Church teaches, and the obstinate offender who refuses to do what it commands are children of perdition, equally with the schismatic and the unbeliever who are without its saving pale."

In accord with this idea, rigid external authority, formalism and ceremony came to supersede the sweet personal evangel of Jesus that filled the world with gladness in apostolic days.

There is no need that one should speak of the centuries of darkness, of the rivers of blood of heretics, of the corrupt ecclesiasticism that dominated the world. The prayers of the oppressed reached high heaven and the age of enlightenment came.

Liberty and Fellowship in the Period of the Reformation.

The native instinct to be free could not be forever suppressed even by vastly powerful and complicated machinery. Luther's first break with the Church came because of the Church's conception of salvation. His heart cried out for a spiritual religion. But the real issue of the movement was the repudiation of ecclesiastical authority, political, moral and intellectual. The standard of authority was changed.

In his recent book, "The Rise of Modern Religious Ideas," Professor McGiffert reminds us that "Luther first substituted for the authority of the Church, the authority of God's forgiving love in Christ. This gave him all he needed for life and salvation, and other authority was quite unnecessary.

"But gradually he was driven by theological controversy to substitute the Bible for the gospel, and to put the word of God in the traditional sense as the scriptures of the Old and New Testament in place of the Church upon which his Catholic opponents were standing, and in place of the indwelling Spirit or inner light to which his radical adversaries were appealing." (Pps. 282-283.)

Thus God's voice to men was to be heard henceforth speaking through the Sacred Writings instead of through the Church. Authority was found in a body of literature instead of in an institution, and the gains to Christian liberty were simply incalculable. The individual was again coming into his own. The thirsting soul was rejoicing in new access to the fountains of divine grace.

In the bitter controversies of the day, the Reformers seemed to feel the need of an infallible, eternal authority to set over against the authority of the Church. The Bible was put in the forefront as a supernatural book, whose teachings, in regard to all things, must be regarded as infallible.

INFALLIBILITY OF THE BIBLE.

Not satisfied with the sweet and free spiritual values of religion, men sought a theology which would be hard and unyielding enough to turn the edge of the sword of every foe. It was not a day of creativeness, theologically. While breaking with the authority of the Church, the Reformers did not break, rapidly, with her theology. The historic creeds formed the basis of interpretation of the Bible. Augustinianism lived again in the systems of Calvin and others. The thought moulds of the fourth or fifth century were pressed into service, and to this day are in evidence. Theologians hesitate long before the task of providing new wine-skins for new wine.

To the indivdual was accorded the liberty of choosing creedal authority that suited him best. Small demands were made upon his thinking; he could adopt and employ the past thinking of the Church. A measure of Christian liberty had been recovered, and in the process unity had gone. Points of doctrine quite apart from their vital and ethical significance created lively interest and endless controversy. Religious questions were, in the main, viewed in the light of ecclesiasticism and authority.

The Church and Modern Life.

The fact is self-evident that a new day has come. The thought moulds of the past will not suffice. Christianity is forced to reckon with new and completely changed conditions. The whole trend is toward greater liberty. In the state, feudalism is dead. Democracy has come, not as an experiment, but as an abiding and increasingly satisfying form of government. Political absolutism is even now in the last throes of death on European battlefields.

Legalized human slavery no longer disgraces any civilized country. Most notable among statutes enacted by legislative bodies in states and nation in the last five years are: Those providing for mothers' pensions, workmen's compensation, anti-child labor, pure food and drugs, prevention of tuberculosis, etc. The state is setting itself seriously to the task of promoting freedom and ministering to life.

Science has not only given us a vast amount of new data for forming judgments, but has given us new methods of investigation.

In the lifetime of men now living the history of all life upon the earth has been rewritten. A passion for facts possesses us, and traditional authority is correspondingly discounted. As to our modern ways of thinking, Josiah Strong said: "Science is emancipating us from the tyranny of the past, of custom and of authority. Just in proportion as one gains the scientific spirit does he cease to be controlled by prejudices and by preconceived notions. His opinions are not heirlooms, nor have they been imposed upon him by authorities, nor voted for him by majorities. He does not cling to them because they are old, nor does he adopt them because they are new. He accepts them on evidence of their truth, and, as long as he believes them to be true, holds to them regardless of consequences."

Since the days of Kant the student of philosophy has found philosophical dogmatism impossible. Kant's theory of knowledge precludes that. "The philosophical world," says King, "is utterly different from that of the Reformation." . . . That its great subject is man—the whole man—and neither God nor the world, means that it finds its key only in itself and not in any external source of authority.

CHRIST THE HEAD.

The influence of Schleiermacher on the religious thought of the present generation has done much to carry the appeal of the modern man from dogma to experience as an authority. While Schleiermacher's view regards man's experience as the ultimate authority for him, yet the experience of others is illuminative of his own; his consciousness of the divine is mediated by Christ and the divine is read in the light of this revelation. Thus in the sphere of religious authority there is a social element and Christ is made the Head of all.

To the average modern mind, concerned with religion, there will perhaps be added to this subjectivism an element of pragmatism and the demand will be insistent that anything that asks assent or allegiance, in religion, must prove its value.

Liberty instead of authority is the note emphasized, also, in the field of education. Not compulsion, but inspiration, is the ideal. Not accepting the teacher's opinion, but under the teacher's guidance striving to ascertain the truth, is the task. This liberty is further accentuated by the elective courses offered in high school and college.

In the industrialism of today there is a new emphasis upon the vital. The safety and highest development of the working-man is found to be the biggest asset to business. In the January (1915) number of the American Magazine, Ida M. Tarbell says: "There is a new industrial philosophy abroad which breaks with the idea that a death-toll is a necessary part of every human achievement. Nothing is so valuable economically, as the man. To injure or to kill him is to destroy the one essential element in the scheme of world-wide civilization and prosperity. . . .

"The saving of life thus becomes an industrial issue. In more than one American industry it has become a gospel—a gospel which, defended as a sound economic policy is practiced with the zeal of a religion."

"WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN?"

In "Everybody's Magazine" for April (1915) is given a summary of the answers of 5,203 people to the question, "What is a Christian?" The editor reports that practically all the answers are from the plain people; comparatively few religious specialists responded. He thinks that, "together, the number, sincerity and character of the writers make their answers an average contemporary interpretation of Christianity, trustworthy and representative and reflecting a wide, eager interest in the subject."

The notable feature of these answers is their indifference to authoritative, doctrinal statement and their emphasis upon character and service. This is the editor's final summing up of them: "So, to these 5,203 persons, Christianity means service to God and man—a service in which there is good will and a belief in the higher destiny of mankind. But there is no rule, they feel, to judge all men by. Each of us has his own cause or master to serve in his own way. "Who art thou," they ask, "that judgest another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth."

That religion is profoundly affected by the modern emphasis, in all realms, upon liberty and life, is a self-evident fact. To try to fasten the dogmas and methods of investigation of former days upon the people of this generation is equally as stupid as to brand the present age as irreligious.

Lord Macaulay may assert that "in theology there can be no progress." Dr. Draper may warn us "that a religion based on revelation must repudiate all improvement in itself." But religionists know full well that they must adapt their message to changing conditions or be left on the theological scrap heap, while the world passes on. Increasing numbers are joining Professor Rauschenbush in saying: "When we pray for more religion, let us pray for a religion that is dedicated to a better future and not to an evil past."

CHURCH MUST HAVE DOCTRINE.

Theology changes slowly. Perhaps it is well that it does. "It is the science of sacred things and it shrinks from too hastily abandoning positions that have been helpful to the spiritual growth of mankind." It would be calamitous if the church should substitute hazy sentimentalism for doctrine, or fail to stand firmly for certain well-defined facts.

"If the life of a church be compared to that of a plant," says Sabatier, "doctrine holds in the place of the seed. Like the seed doctrine is the last to be formed; it crowns and closes the annual cycle of vegetation; but it is necessary that it should form and ripen, for it carries within it the power of life and the germ of a new development. A church without dogmas would be a sterile plant." But let not the partisans of dogmatic immutability triumph; let them pursue the comparison to the end: " 'Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die,' said Jesus, 'it bears no fruit.' To be fruitful, dogma must be decomposed, that is to say it must mix itself unceasingly with the evolution of human thought and die in it; it is the condition of perpetual resurrection."

The ofttimes failure of the Church to keep step in the onward march of progress has been due, in no small measure, to cowardice and intellectual laziness. It has seemed easier to ridicule, to ignore or to deny new aspects of truth than to utilize them in reconstructing and clarifying our religious ideas. Professor Drummond was fond of telling the story of a society lady and her daughter who happened to be present at a lecture on evolution, in which man was described as the descendant of ancestors differing little from the ape. At the close of the lecture the mother said to her daughter: "How shocking, this news about our ancestors! It seems to be true; but let us try to hush it up."

THE INFLUENCE OF MODERNISM.

Even the Roman Catholic church is stirred profoundly by Modernism; and every communion in Protestantism, that is not decadent and dying, has changed mightily in the last fifty years. Happily they have been able to so re-read the Bible as to make it practically a new book, adapted to the needs of a new age. The practice of building a theory upon isolated proof-texts has quite largely passed away.

The historic method in Bible study, a form which Alexander Campbell advocated so ably, has done much to make loyalty and liberty both possible. In most evangelical bodies, creed subscription as a prerequisite to membership, has been reduced to the minimum, or disappeared. Men now living have undergone a radical change in their religious thinking. A few years ago when Dr. McCosh, of Princeton, was threatened with excommunication for heresy the ecclesiastics wrote to Andrew Carnegie, asking his advice. The canny Scot replied:

"Woodman, spare that tree;
Touch not a single bough;
In youth it frightened me,
But I'll stand for it now."

(In next week's issue will be published the remainder of Mr. Ryan's paper, on "Liberty and Church Fellowship Among the Disciples of Christ."—Office editor.)

How many prodigals are kept out of the kingdom of God by the unlovely characters of those who profess to be inside!—Henry Drummond.

And I shall find, perhaps, that wisdom and beauty and goodness are but one thing, and that living is a continual growing-up, and that age is only a youth that knows why it is happy.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

The Maker

God made the country,
Man made the town.
God clad the country
In a green gown,

Clad her in kirtle
Of the green silk.
God made the country
Of honey and milk.

Poor folk, from Eden
Driven away,
God made the country
For a holiday.

God gave the country
A flower, a bird,
To comfort His children
For the flaming sword.

For easing and pleasing
He made a tree,
Many a sweet rivulet,
Dew, and the bee.

God made the country,
Man made the town.
Is not God a Maker
Of great renown?

A Passion for God

By Charles H. Swift.

The supreme need of our age is a deep passion for God. "Religion is a reverence for, a feeling of dependence upon, deliverance by, and communion with a higher, partly transcendent, partly immanent, spiritual power upon which the highest human values ultimately depend." It is an abiding and permanent presence of such soul consciousness that will be satisfied with nothing less. To have a passion for God is to be all aglow with this consciousness that we are related to God, dependent upon God, delivered by God, and that by communion with God we will attain unto the highest values of human life. It is the passion which controls the every-day life. It is the ruling spirit of all life's activities.

That this need is paramount is made evident by the moral and spiritual tone of our community life. With most people religion has become a secondary matter. Our life's pursuit stamps the type of life we live. The supreme aim of life is the great molding factor. Religion would have that aim the righteousness of God. Some central mood or passion rules every soul, whether it is love or hate, sympathy or selfishness, service or greed, passion for God or a passion for this world. The passion for gold has gripped the age so tenaciously that the higher religious values of life are easily trodden under foot and all religious fervor smothered in tragical death. It has made us cowards in the realm of spiritual values. We dare not champion the great cause of Christian brotherhood nor stand out boldly for the righteous principles of Christ in business or social life. We have plenty of everything else, but religiously we are bankrupt.

A passion for God regenerates the soul and transforms the life. It inculcates a burning desire to be God-like by possessing those sublime attributes characteristic of the Son of God. It is a compelling force which reproduces the life of the Master in all the simplicity of virtue and love of service. It is the divine dynamic which enthrones justice and enshrines mercy. It is the spiritual power which molds public sentiment and transforms community life. It dignifies law, exalts virtue, vitalizes purity, and rationalizes righteousness. It creates honesty in business and in politics. It Christianizes the church and the home. It cleanses society from evil practices and sinful pleasures. It relieves individuals from demoniacal possessions. It makes God a living factor in human life and establishes the ideal Kingdom of righteousness.

The common problem, yours, mine, every one's.
Is not to fancy what were fair in life
Provided it could be—but finding just
What may be, then find how to make it fair
Up to our means—a very different thing.
—Browning.

Resolutions Passed at Havana Conference

The following report of the Committee at the recent Havana Regional Conference was to have been published two weeks ago, following the report of this Conference by W. L. Burner, but was crowded out by other matter.

Whereas the spirit of Christian fellowship and the discussions of this Regional Conference in Cuba have enriched our spiritual life, and strengthened us for our tasks as we are about to return to our respective fields of labor, and

Whereas the continuance of the discussions through some simple form of committee organization will accomplish still further good for each group of workers represented in this conference, and

Whereas the Congress on Christian Work in Latin America recently convened in Panama without dissenting vote continued the existence of the Committee on Co-operation in Latin America, enlarged its membership to include one from each body sending and maintaining workers in Latin America, adopted and already has largely provided an ample budget for the support of the work of the committee its first year, elected an executive officer to carry forward its work, and invited each country or group of countries to join in the further study of the Christian work needed to be done in Latin America by the appointment within their respective territories of advisory or consulting committees of Latin America and foreign workers,

Resolved that this Regional Conference in Cuba convened in connection with the Congress on Christian Work in Latin America, should take action to secure for the Christian work and workers of Cuba such touch with the Committee on Co-operation as may be desired by the workers in Cuba, and

Resolved that in order to establish and maintain this voluntary and helpful relationship it approves the organization of a Committee of Conference in Cuba representing unofficially the Christian work and workers in Cuba, this committee to have consultative powers only, except as any plans discussed by the committee shall have been approved by the Mission Boards sending and maintaining workers in Cuba, and except as these Boards request the Committee of Conference in Cuba to assist them in any specific work in their behalf, and

Resolved that to the end that plans for common work hereby suggested may become effective we recommend to the committee so to be appointed that the following definite lines of study be considered:

1. A thorough survey of the Island that there may be complete occupation of its territory.

2. The matter of literature, in the hope that literature for common use may thus be more economically and efficiently given to all the people.

3. Some plan of common effort in education, to the end that by combination of such effort better schools of primary, secondary, normal and other desirable forms of higher education may be secured.

Have You Read "J. B's" Books?

Seldom indeed is a man who is admired and influential in many countries better known by his initials than by his name. This was the case, however, with Rev. Jonathan Brierley, who for a long series of years wrote papers in the London Christian World over the signature of J. B., many of which were afterwards collected in widely circulated books which a multitude of people in and out of the churches have found helpful to faith and enjoyable for breadth and depth of vision.

Mr. Brierley was born apparently in Leicester, though his biographer mentions no birthplace, the fifth son of a lamb's wool spinner, who was also a Wesleyan local preacher and a Christian of a hard type of severity in home discipline and narrow thinking. The son was a high-spirited and rather pugnacious boy and the problem of his work in life troubled his family, his four elder brothers having filled all available places in the business. He chose the ministry but, having had a little experience of work as a Wesleyan local preacher, insisted on entering the broader field of Congregationalism.

An omnivorous reader, J. B. was also a conscientious pastor in Devonshire and in London and became popular as a preacher before a complete breakdown of health drove him out of the pastorate, narrates a writer in the Congregationalist. He turned to newspaper work, soon revealing the rare gifts as contributor, reviewer and editorial writer, which he perfected in long practice. His work in this field won him a sympathetic and grateful audience wherever the English language is spoken.

J. B. was essentially a reconciler. He stood outside the bars that theological prepossession had built across the ways of thought and showed that they were free to all knowledge. His intellectual interests were wide and keen, his sympathy with all form of serious thought was deep and intelligent, his range of reading immense; and all this equipment of knowledge and experience were put at the service of the Kingdom of God which it is every man's privilege to share. He had a large and honorable part in helping men of his disturbed generation to see that God is the essential power behind all experiences and that faith in God is compatible with intellectual honesty and social enthusiasms.

["J. B.'s" books may now be secured in a special edition from the Disciples Publication Society, for $3.85. The titles of the volumes are: "Religion and Experience," "The Eternal Religion," "The Common Life," "Problems of Living," "Ourselves and the Universe," "Studies of the Soul," and "Our City of God."]

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE CHICAGO CONGRESS

LAST week the Congress of the Disciples was held in this city. Like all of its predecessors, it was an event of pleasure and profit to the company of ministers, teachers and laymen who gathered to participate. The more adequate report will be given later in The Christian Century, and we hope to print some of the papers read.

The Congress has a unique place in the program of the Disciples. Its origin was the result of a desire to have a gathering in which business and methodology were left out, no motions of any sort passed, and no resolutions presented. It was felt that there is a place for free discussion of vital themes in Christian history, teaching and thinking. And this has proved to be the case. The attendance upon the Congress has never been large beyond the local interest in the cities where it has been held. But those who have attended have always felt abundantly repaid for the time and expense incurred in the effort.

The recent Congress here was no exception. The hundred or so who came were among the leaders in their own sections of the church, and showed their acute interest in the stirring problems of the time by close attention and alert participation. The plan of holding the Congress at one of the hotels in this city of hotels and conventions proved to be an admirable device, and probably points the way for future meetings. The selection of Professor Lumley again as secretary assures an equally satisfactory arrangement next year, and a program of like excellence.

A NOTABLE GIFT

NEWS comes from the Board of Church Extension of a remarkably generous contribution to that admirable cause in the gift of $5,000 from E. M. Austin, of Litchfield, Ills., for the purpose of establishing the "Paul Austin Memorial Fund" in memory of the son whose life was cut short some months ago.

This is a notable gift. Mr. Austin is not a man of wealth. There are thousands among the Disciples who could make such an offering to any one of our Boards with a small fraction of the sacrifice involved in this memorial contribution. But it was the wise decision of this good man that the most expressive monument he could erect to the memory of his son would be this enduring fund, set to work to do a perpetual service in the name of the boy who too early went on into the larger life.

This is a very beautiful and fitting action. It blesses him who gives and the cause to which it is devoted. And it points the way to similar acts of merit on the part of those who study to know by what means the names and memories of loved ones may be most permanently and nobly honored.

SEED AND SOIL

A LETTER just received from a highly successful pastor among the Disciples has in it this paragraph, a portion of an intimate recital of one of the most serious problems which the younger men in our ministry have to face: "I left my former pastorate with the community saying that I had done more for the town religiously than any man who had been there for a generation, but with my church dissatisfied because I had not fought the other churches and proselyted. I get sick at heart, and weary at times, though I try to be a good soldier."

Here is a man who is speaking in utter confidence, in the spirit of the utmost modesty and humility, as the remainder of his letter makes clear. He is in a pulpit of commanding opportunity, and has no reason to question his own power to succeed. He is merely depressed at the prevailing indisposition in many churches of the Disciples to rise to the full grandeur of their opportunity as leaders in the effort to interpret the spirit of Jesus, and the need of a united church.

It is no question of any so-called innovation with him. He is not concerned about the admission of non-immersed Christians. He is just trying to lift his church above the ambition to have an occasional "big meeting," which shall sweep into the membership a company of half-instructed and wholly unregenerated people, out of whom he is supposed to make efficient church members, not to say saints, in the briefest time.

It is this lust for numbers, this impatience with the slow and quiet processes of personal evangelism and spiritual nurture, this wish to steal a certain number of members from neighboring churches each year and call it "a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord," that is reducing many of our churches to sterility, and bringing on the inevitable result of death from within.

But no man of light and consecration should be discouraged. The era of boasted numbers is passing. The actual decrease of Disciples in the past five years is a matter of serious import, to be disguised by no legerdemain of statistics. The early dreams of some of our people that we were to sweep the world with our movement have proved illusory, not because of weakness in the cause or imperfection in the plans of the fathers, but because the passion for numbers betrayed us into emphasis upon outward success rather than inward quality. Today we are in position to see this mistake and profit by it.

Our wiser men, both old and young, understand that only by the deepening of the moral life and the religious temper of our churches can our opportunity, all but sacrificed, return to us. The Disciples have wonderful reserves of enthusiasm and devotion. Great saints are of their number both in the past and the present. The rich soil of twentieth century life will return ample results if properly tilled. But history and Holy Scripture alike make clear the slow and quiet methods by which alone the great ends of the holy life are attained. God's ways are not those of the earthquake, tempest and fire, but the still, small voice. Our impatience, too often self-defeating and self-annihilating, must learn the lesson of the seed and the harvest.

And no minister of the Gospel who labors for the realization of such ideals need feel that his effort is wasted, no matter what the immediate outcome may be. It is God's way of working, and we are not wiser than he. Lift up your hearts. The results are certain. "He that goeth with weeping, bearing precious seed, shall surely come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

AMERICA FOR THE WORLD

ONE of the most striking of the prophetic portions of the Old Testament is the fifty-fifth chapter of the Book of Isaiah. Its opening words, very familiar and very often heard in the exhortations of evangelism, are rarely understood, or properly applied. They are not a call to the unconverted world, but to the people of God, seduced by worldly good into the life of passionless indifference, and falling sick for lack of the nourishment of the spirit.

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

It is the call of the prophet to such a generation as the exiles in Babylon, tempted by the rich opportunities of their new home to forget their covenant relations with Jehovah, and to exchange the simple blessings of their ancient heritage for the brilliant luxury of the East. It is likewise the call of the prophet to a generation like our own, rich in material wealth, but losing its life in the pursuit of pleasure and money.

"Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." It is the Church of God to which the call is sounded today. A Christian nation is summoned to return to the fountains of its refreshment in God, and to take up seriously the task to which it has been appointed of the Most High. America's leadership among the nations cannot be one of financial shrewdness, or industrial cleverness or professional sagacity alone. They have their value, but are of little worth as compared with the abiding leadership in moral ideals, and religious truth.

America must save herself before she can save the world. And the opportunity which the program of American missions offers is alluring enough to engage the attention and claim the co-operation of every Christian.

For this reason, and a thousand others, the great Day of American Missions, May 7th, ought to be celebrated in every church of the Disciples with informing comment on the field and the opportunity, and generous offerings for the work.

A MATTER OF GOOD ENGLISH

WE HAVE watched with interest the conduct of the Christian-Evangelist, our valued St. Louis contemporary, since the advent of its new editor, Mr. Kershner. With very much of the tone and content of the paper under its new management we find ourselves in the heartiest agreement, and we hope much for our journalism from his editorial activity.

In one matter however we find ourselves surprised and disappointed. It is a small matter, as things go in our days, but an item of grave concern when it is made the standard of press-room form. We refer to the recently assumed manner of misspelling the proper name "Disciple" with a lower case "d." This was a freakish habit that made its way into one other of the papers of the Disciples years ago, but it has no standing in good usage, either among our own people or elsewhere in the Christian world.
